PREFACE

TO THE

BOOK OF JUDGES.

THE persons called Judges שופטים Shophetim, from שפט shaphat, to judge, discern, regulate, and direct, were the heads or chiefs of the Israelites who governed the Hebrew Republic from the days of Moses and Joshua, till the time of Saul. The word judge is not to be taken here in its usual signification, i. e. one who determines controversies, and denounces the judgment of the law in criminal cases; but one who directs and rules a state or nation with sovereign power, administers justice, makes peace or war, and leads the armies of the people over whom he presides. Officers, with the same power, and nearly with the same name, were established by the Tyrians in new Tyre, after the destruction of old Tyre, and the termination of its regal state. The Carthaginian Sufetes appear to have been the same as the Hebrew Shophetim; as were also the Archons among the Athenians, and the Dictators among the ancient Romans. But they were neither hereditary governors, nor were they chosen by the people: they were properly vicegerents, or lieutenants of the supreme God; and were always among the Israelites, chosen by him, in a supernatural way. They had no power to make or change the laws; they were only to execute them under the direction of the Most High. God, therefore, was King in Israel: the government was a theocracy: and the judges were his deputies. The office, however, was not continual, as there appear intervals in which there was no judge in Israel. And, as they were extraordinary persons, they were only raised up on extraordinary occasions, to be instruments in the hands of God of delivering their nation from the oppression and tyranny of the neighbouring powers. They had neither pomp nor state; nor does it appear that they had any kind of emoluments.

The Chronology of the Book of Judges is extremely embarrassed and difficult; and there is no agreement among learned men concerning it. When the deliverances, and consequent periods of rest, so frequently mentioned in this book, took place, cannot be satisfactorily ascertained. Archbishop Ussher, and those who follow him, suppose that the rests, or times of peace, should be reckoned, not from the time in which a particular judge gave them deliverance; but from the period of the preceding deliverance, e. g. It is said that Othniel, son of Kenaz, defeated Chushan-rishathaim, Judges iii. 9. and the land had rest forty years. After the death of Othniel the Israelites again did wickedly, and God delivered them into the hands of the Moabites, Ammonites, and Amalekites; and this oppression continued eighteen years, Judges iii. 15. Then God raised up Ehud, who, by killing Eglon, king of Moab, and gaining a great victory over the Moabites, in which he slew ten thousand of their best soldiers, obtained a rest for the land, which lasted forty years, Judges iii. 15, 30. which rest is not counted from this deliverance wrought by Ehud, but from that wrought by Othniel, mentioned above; leaving out the eighteen years of oppression under Eglon, king of Moab: and so of the rest. This is a most violent manner of settling chronological difficulties: a total perversion of the ordinary meaning of terms, and not likely to be intended by the writer of this book.

Sir John Marsham, aware of this difficulty, has struck out a new hypothesis: he supposes that there were judges on each side Jordan; and that there were particular wars in which those beyond Jordan had no part. He observes, that from the Exodus to the building of Solomon's temple was four hundred and eighty years, which is precisely the time mentioned in the Sacred Writings, 1 Kings vi. 1. and that from the time in which the Israelites occupied the land beyond Jordan, to the days of Jephthah, was three hundred years. But in reckoning up the years of the Judges, from the death of Moses to the time of Ibzan, who succeeded Jephthah, there appears to be more than three hundred years; and from Jephthah to the fourth year of Solomon, in which the foundation of the temple was laid, there are again more than one hundred and fifty years: we must, therefore, either find out some method of reconciling these differences, or else abandon these epochs; but, as the latter cannot be done, we must have recourse to some plan of modification. Sir John Marsham's plan is of this kind: the common plan is that of Archbishop Ussher. I shall produce them both, and let the reader choose for himself.

Who the author of the Book of Judges was, is not known: some suppose that each judge wrote his own history; and that the book has been compiled from those separate accounts; which is very unlikely. Others ascribe it to Phineas, to Samuel, to Hzekiah, and some to Ezra. But it is evident, that it was the work of an individual, and of a person who lived posterior to the time of the Judges, see ch. ii. 10, &c. and most probably of Samuel.

The duration of the government of the Israelites by judges, from the death of Joshua to the commencement of the reign of Saul, was about three hundred and thirty-nine years. But as this book does not include the government of Eli, nor Samuel, but ends with the death of Samson, which occurred in A. M. 2337; consequently, it includes only three hundred and seventeen years: but the manner in which these are reckoned is very different, as we have seen above; and as will be more particularly evident in the following tables, by Archbishop Ussher and Sir John Marsham.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE OF THIS BOOK, ACCORDING TO ARCHBISHOP USSHER.

	A. M.		A. M.
Death of Joshua, aged one hundred and ten years.	2570	Abimelech is proclaimed king by the Shechemites.	2769
After his death, and the elders who succeeded him, the Israelites fell into idolatry; the idolatry of Micah, the conquest of Laish, and the idolatry of a part of the tribe of Dan, are to be referred, which are mentioned, ch. xvii. and xviii.		He reigns three years, and was killed at the siege of Thebez .	2771
The story of the Levite and his concubine, and the war which succeeded it, ch. xix. xx. xxi.		Tola governs after Abimelech twenty-three years.	2772
This includes a period of about twenty-two years, viz. fifteen for the time of the elders who survived Joshua, and seven years of anarchy and rest, after which the Israelites fell under the domination of Chushan-rishaim , king of Mesopotamia.	2585	The commencement of the kingdom of the Lydians , under Argon , who reigned in Sardis. This empire continued five hundred and five years.—Herodot. l. i. c. 7.	2781
The first servitude, under Chushan , which lasted eight years, began in 2591, and ended in 2599. Othniel delivered Israel, the fortieth year after the rest procured by Joshua.	2591	Semiramis marries Ninus , and reigns forty-two years over almost the whole of Asia. Jair succeeds Tola , and governs twenty-two years.	2789
The land enjoys rest about sixty-two years.	2602	The fifth servitude, under the Philistines , which lasted eighteen years.	2795
Second servitude, under Eglon , king of Moab, which lasted eighteen years.		God delivers the Israelites who dwell beyond Jordan, from the Ammonites, &c. ch. x. 18.	2799
Ehud delivers Israel.	2679	Death of Jair , ch. x. 5.	2816
After him appears Shamgar , and the land enjoys rest to the eightieth year, from the termination of the first deliverance, procured by Othniel , ch. iii. 15—30.		Jephthah is chosen judge, and defeats the Ammonites. Forty-two thousand Ephraimites slain at the passage of Jordan. Jephthah governs six years, ch. xi. xii.	2817
The third servitude, under the Canaanites , which lasted twenty years, ch. iv.	2699	Troy is taken by the Greeks, after a siege of ten years.
Deborah and Barak deliver Israel.	2719	Death of Jephthah . Ibzan governs seven years.	2830
From the deliverance procured by Ehud , to the end of the government of Deborah and Barak , was forty years.		Elon succeeds him, and governs ten years.	2823
About this time the Assyrian empire was founded by Ninus , son of Belus . The Assyrians had, previously to this, reigned five hundred and twenty years over a part of Asia; but Ninus forming a league with Arius , king of the Arabs, conquered the whole of Asia, and governed it for seventeen years. He reigned in all fifty-two years.	2737	Semiramis dies, aged 62, having reigned forty-two years: she is succeeded by Ninyas .	2830
The fourth servitude, under the Midianites , which lasted seven years.—Judges vi.	2752	Abdon judges Israel eight years, beginning from 2840.	2840
Gideon delivers Israel.	2759	Eli judges Israel after the death of Abdon , forty years.	2848
From the rest procured by Deborah and Barak , to the deliverance by Gideon , are forty years, ch. vi. vii. viii. After the death of Gideon the people fall into idolatry. Abimelech , natural son of Gideon , kills seventy of his brethren, ch. ix.	2768	The sixth servitude, under the Philistines , which lasted forty years, ch. xiii. 1. It began seven years after the commencement of the government of Eli .

This is in substance the chronology of Archbishop Ussher on this period: the correctness of which is justly questioned.

THE CHRONOLOGY OF THE BOOK OF JUDGES ACCORDING TO THE SCHEME OF SIR JOHN MARSHAM.

	Years after the Exodus.		Years after the Exodus.
Joshua governs Israel twenty-five years from the Exodus, to the sixty-fifth year after that deliverance.		Abimelech reigns three years at Sichem .	293
Death of Joshua , aged 110 years.		Tola judges Israel twenty-three years.
Government of the elders.	40	Jair judges Israel twenty-two years.
Anarchy and idolatry, thirty-four years after Joshua .	65	Fifth servitude under the Ammonites , beyond Jordan, three hundred years after the Israelites had taken possession of the land. This servitude lasted eighteen years.	340
First servitude under Chushan , lasts eight years.	99	Jephthah delivers Israel.	363
Othniel , son-in-law of Caleb , defeats Chushan .		While the Ammonites oppressed Israel on the other side of Jordan, the Philistines afflicted those on this side of that river. This servitude lasted forty years; during which Samson and Eli were judges: but they did not wholly deliver Israel. They were not delivered till the time of Samuel , three hundred and eighty-three years after the Exodus.	383
Forty years' rest.	107	During this interval God raised up Ibzan , who judged Israel seven years: and
Second servitude under Eglon , who oppressed the Jews beyond Jordan, and a part of the Benjamites, eighteen years.	147	Elon , who judged ten years: and
Ehud slays Eglon , and delivers his country.	165	Abdon , who judged eight years: but neither the year of the commencement of their office, nor of their death, can be exactly ascertained.
Peace of fourscore years beyond Jordan; which continues till the invasion of the Midianites.		Saul reigns forty years.	403
Third servitude under Jabin ; who chiefly oppressed the tribes which dwelt in the northern parts of Canaan. This servitude lasted twenty years.	185	David reigns forty years.	443
Shamgar kills 600 Philistines, and delivers Israel.	194	Solomon begins to reign, four hundred and seventy-six years after the Exodus;	476
Deborah and Barak defeat Sisera ; aided by the tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali .	203	And lays the foundation of the temple in the fourth year of his reign.	480
Rest of forty years; which continues to the two hundred and forty third year of the Exodus.
Fourth servitude under the Midianites , which lasts seven years.	243
Gideon delivers Israel, assisted by Asher , Zebulun , and Naphtali .	253

These are the schemes of those two great chronologists, as exhibited by Calmet.

Dr. Hales, dissatisfied with these schemes, and with all others hitherto published, strikes out a new path; and, following the chronology of Josephus, with some corrections, makes the whole period, from the time of Joshua and the elders, who survived him, to the election of Saul, four hundred and ninety-eight years, which he accounts for thus:

In the general introduction of his Analysis of Scripture Chronology, he endeavours to show that the interval from the Exodus to the foundation of Solomon's temple, was six hundred and twenty-one years: from which, subtracting one hundred and twenty-three years, (namely, forty years from the Exodus to this return, eighty years from the two reigns of Saul and David, and the three first years of Solomon;) the remainder is four hundred and ninety-eight years.

Preface to the Book of Judges.

"But," says the learned and indefatigable Doctor, "although we are indebted to Josephus for this, and for supplying some material chasms in the sacred annals; such as—1. The administration of Joshua and the elders, twenty-five years. 2. The ensuing anarchy, eighteen years. 3. The administration of Shamgar, one year; and, 4. Of Samuel, twelve years. Still his detail of the outline there given requires correction.

"For, 1. The year ascribed to Shamgar's administration is too short, as is evident from Deborah's account, Judg. v. 6; I have therefore included it, with David Ganz, in Ehud's enormous administration of eighty years, and transferred the one year to Joshua's, making that twenty-six years. 2. I have restored Abdon's administration of eight years, omitted by Josephus, and deducted it from the eighteen years he assigns to the anarchy, thereby reducing the latter to its correct length of ten years. 3. I have dated the first division of the conquered lands in the sixth year, which Josephus reckoned in the fifth year; because Caleb was forty years old when Moses sent him as one of the spies from Kadesh-Barnea, in the second year after the exode; consequently he was thirty-nine years old at the exode; and therefore seventy-nine years old, forty years after at the arrival in Canaan; but he was eighty-five years old when he claimed and got the hill of Hebron for an inheritance; and therefore 85—79=6 years after the arrival in Canaan. Compare Numb. x. 11. xiii. 6. with Josh. xiv. 6—15. 4. Josephus has omitted the date of Samuel's call to be a prophet, 1 Sam. iii. 1—19. which St. Paul reckons four hundred and fifty years after the first division of lands, Acts xiii. 19, 20. and which, therefore, commenced with the ten last years of Eli's administration of forty years. This last most important chronological character from the New Testament, verifies the whole of this rectification; while it demonstrates the spuriousness of the period of four hundred and eighty years in the present Masorale text of 1 Kings vi. 1. from the exode to the foundation of Solomon's temple."

		Years.	B.C.			Years.	B.C.
I.	1	Joshua and the elders, First division of lands, Second division of lands, Anarchy, or interregnum, Servitude to the Mesopotamians,	96 1608 1602 1595 10 1582 8 1572	V.	8	Jair, Servitude to the Ammonites, Jephthah, Ibzan, Eli, Abdon,	22 18 6 7 10 8	1293 1271 1253 1247 1240 1230
	2	Othniel, Servitude to the Moabites,	40 18		12	Servitude to the Philistines,	40	20	1222
	3	Ehud and Shamgar, Servitude to the Canaanites,	60 20		13	Samson, Eli,	20 40	1202 1182
	4	Deborah and Barak, Servitude to the Midianites,	40 7		14	Samuel, called as a prophet, Servitude to the Philistines,	10 20	1152 1142
	5	Gideon, Abimelech,	40 3		15	Samuel,	12	1122
7	Tola,	23	1316			Saul elected king,	498	1110

"The only alteration here made, in the present text of Josephus, is, the insertion of Tola and his administration of twenty-three years, (Judg. x. 1, 2.) which are inadvertently omitted between Abimelech and Jair, Ant. 5. 7. 15. page 56. but evidently were included in the original scheme of Josephus, as being requisite to complete the period of six hundred and twenty-one years. To Abdon no years are assigned by Josephus, Ant. 5. 7. 15. page 215. perhaps designedly, for Clemens Alexandrinus relates that some chronologers collected together the years of Abathnan and Ebron, (Abdon and Eli,) or made them contemporary. But we may easily reconcile Josephus with Scripture, by only deducting eight years from the eighteen years' interregnum after Joshua, which will give Abdon his quota of years, and leave that interregnum its juster length of ten years.

"It is truly remarkable, and a proof of the great skill and accuracy of Josephus in forming the outline of this period, that he assigns, with St. Paul, a reign of forty years to Saul, Acts xiii. 21. which is omitted in the OLD TESTAMENT. His outline also corresponds with St. Paul's period of four hundred and fifty years from the division of the conquered lands of Canaan, until Samuel the prophet." See Dr. Hale's Chronology, vol. i. page 16, 17. vol. ii. page 28. 5—8.

Another method of removing these difficulties has been lately attempted in a new edition of the Universal History; but of conjectures there is no end: if the truth be not found in some of the preceding systems, the difficulties, I fear, must remain. I have my doubts whether the author of this book ever designed to produce the subject in a strict chronological series. The book, in several places, appears to have been composed of historical memoranda, having very little relation to each other, or among themselves; and particularly what is recorded in the beginning and the end. There is, however, one light in which the whole book may be viewed, which renders it invaluable: it is a most remarkable history of the long-suffering of God toward the Israelites, in which we find the most signal instances of his justice and his mercy alternately displayed: the people sinned, and were punished; they repented, and found mercy. Something of this kind we meet in every page. And these things are written for our warning: none should presume, for God is JUST: none need despair, for God is MERCIFUL.

THE BOOK OF JUDGES.

CHAPTER I.

After the death of Joshua, the Israelites purpose to attack the remaining Canaanites; and the tribe of Judah is directed to go up first, 1, 2.—Judah and Simeon unite, attack the Canaanites and Perizzites, kill one thousand of them, take Adoni-bezek prisoner, cut off his thumbs and great toes, and bring him to Jerusalem, where he dies, 3—7. Jerusalem conquered, 8. A new war with the Canaanites under the direction of Caleb, 10, 11. Kirjath-sepher taken by Othniel, on which he receives, as a reward, Achsah, the daughter of Caleb, and with her a south land with springs of water, 12—15. The Kenites dwell among the people, 16. Judah and Simeon destroy the Canaanites in Zephath, Gaza, &c. 17—19. Hebron is given to Caleb, 20. Of the Benjamites, house of Joseph, tribe of Manasseh, &c. 21—27. The Israelites put the Canaanites to tribute, 28. Of the tribes of Ephraim, Zebulun, Asher, and Naphtali, 29—33. The Amorites force the children of Dan into the mountains, 34—36.

NOW after the death of Joshua, it came to pass, that the children of Israel^a asked the LORD, saying, Who shall go up for us against the Canaanites first, to fight against them?

2 And the LORD said, ^bJudah shall go up: behold, I have delivered the land into his hand.

3 And Judah said unto Simeon his brother, Come up with me into my lot, that we may fight against the Canaanites; ^cand I likewise will go with thee into thy lot. So Simeon went with him.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. Now after the days of Joshua] How long after the death of Joshua this happened, we cannot tell: it is probable that it was not long. The enemies of the Israelites, finding their champion dead, would naturally avail themselves of their unsettled state, and make incursions on the country.

Who shall go up?] Joshua had left no successor; and every thing relative to the movements of this people must be determined either by caprice, or an especial direction of the Lord:

Verse 2. The Lord said, Judah shall go up.] They had inquired of the Lord, by Phineas, the high priest; and he had communicated to them the divine counsel.

Verse 3. Come up with me into my lot] It appears that the portions of Judah and Simeon had not been cleared of the Canaanites; or, that these were the parts which were now particularly invaded.

Verse 5. And they found Adoni-bezek] The word nymatsa, "he found," is used to express a hostile encounter between two parties; to attack, surprise, &c. This is probably its meaning here. Adoni-bezek is literally the lord of Bezek. It is very probable that the different Canaanitish tribes were governed by a sort of chieftains, similar to those among the clans of 4 And Judah went up; and the LORD delivered the Canaanites and the Perizzites into their hand: and they slew of them in^d Bezek ten thousand men.

5 And they found Adoni-bezek in Bezek: and they fought against him, and they slew the Canaanites and the Perizzites.

6 But Adoni-bezek fled; and they pursued after him, and caught him, and cut off his thumbs and his great toes.

7 And Adoni-bezek said, Threescore and ten kings, having^e their thumbs

the ancient Scottish Highlanders. Bezek is said by some to have been in the tribe of Judah. Eusebius and St. Jerome mention two villages of this name, not in the tribe of Judah, but about seventeen miles from Sichem.

Verse 6. Cut off his thumbs] That he might never be able to draw his bow, or handle his sword; and great toes, that he might never be able to pursue, or escape from, an adversary.

Verse 7. Threescore and ten kings] Chieftains, heads of tribes, or military officers. For the word king cannot be taken here in its proper and usual sense.

Having their thumbs and their great toes cut off] That this was an ancient mode of treating enemies, we learn from Ælian, who tells us, Var. Hist. 1. ii. c. 9, that "the Athenians, at the instigation of Cleon, son of Cleænetus, made a decree that all the inhabitants of the island of Ægina should have the thumb cut off from the right hand, so that they might ever after be disabled from holding a spear; yet might handle an oar." This is considered by Ælian an act of great cruelty; and he wishes to Minerva, the guardian of the city, to Jupiter Eleutherius, and all the gods of Greece, that the Athenians had never done such things. It was a custom among those Romans, who did not like a military life, to cut off their own thumbs, that they might not be capable of and their great toes cut off, ^f gathered their meat under my table : ^g as I have done, so God hath requited me. And they brought him to Jerusalem, and there he died.

8 ¶ Now ^h the children of Judah had fought against Jerusalem, and had taken it, and smitten it with the edge of the sword, and set the city on fire.

9 ⁱ And afterward the children of Judah went down to fight against the Canaanites, that dwelt in the mountain, and in the south, and in the ^k valley.

10 ¶ And Judah went out against the Canaanites that dwelt in Hebron : (now the name of Hebron before was ^l Kirjath-arba :) and they slew She-shai, and Ahiman, and Talmi.

serving in the army. Sometimes the parents cut off the thumbs of their children, that they might not be called into the army. According to Suetonius, in Vit. August. c. 24. a Roman knight who had cut off the thumbs of his two sons, to prevent them from being called to a military life, was, by the order of Augustus, publicly sold, both he and his property. These are the words of Suetonius :—Equitem Romanum, quod duobus filiis adolescentibus, causa detractandi sacramenti ; pollices amputasset, ipsum bonaque subiecit hastæ. Calmet remarks, that the Italian language has preserved a term, poltrone, which signifies one whose thumb is cut off, to designate a soldier destitute of courage and valour. We use poltron to signify a dastardly fellow, without considering the import of the original. There have been found frequent instances of persons maiming themselves, that they might be incapacitated for military duty. I have heard an instance in which a knavish soldier discharged his gun through his hand, that he might be discharged from his regiment. The cutting off of the thumbs was probably designed for a double purpose : 1. To incapacitate them for war : and, 2. To brand them as cowards.

Gathered their meat under my table] I think this was a proverbial mode of expression, to signify reduction to the meanest servitude : for it is not at all likely that seventy kings, many of whom must have been contemporaries, were placed under the table of the king of Bezek, and there fed ; as in the houses of poor persons, the dogs are fed with crumbs and offal, under the table of their owners.

So God hath requited me] The king of Bezek seems to have had the knowledge of the true God, and a proper notion of a divine providence. He now feels himself reduced to that state to which he had cruelly reduced others. Those acts in him, were acts of tyrannous the name of Debir before was Kirjath-sepher :

12 ⁿ And Caleb said, He that smiteth Kirjath-sepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achsah my daughter to wife.

13 And Othniel, the son of Kenaz, ^o Caleb's younger brother, took it : and he gave him Achsah his daughter to wife.

14 ^p And it came to pass, when she came to him, that she moved him to ask of her father a field : and she lighted from off her ass ; and Caleb said unto her, What wilt thou ?

15 And she said unto him, Give me a blessing : for thou hast given me a south land ; give me also springs of water. And Caleb gave her the upper springs and the nether springs.

And there he died] He continued at Jerusalem in a servile and degraded condition till the day of his death. How long he lived after his disgrace, we know not.

Verse 8. Had fought against Jerusalem] We read this verse in a parenthesis, because we suppose that it refers to the taking of this city by Joshua, for, as he had conquered its armies and slew its king, Josh. x. 25. it is probable that he took the city : yet we find that the Jebusites still dwelt in it, Josh. xv. 63. and that the men of Judah could not drive them out, which probably refers to the strong hold or fortress on mount Zion, which the Jebusites held till the days of David, who took it, and totally destroyed the Jebusites. See 2 Sam. v. 6—9. and 1 Chron. xi. 4—8. It is possible that the Jebusites, who had been discomfited by Joshua, had again become sufficiently strong to possess themselves of Jerusalem ; and that they were now defeated, and the city itself set on fire : but, that they still were able to keep possession of their strong fort on mount Zion, which appears to have been the citadel of Jerusalem.

Verse 9. The Canaanites, that dwelt in the mountain] The territories of the tribe of Judah lay in the most southern part of the promised land, which was very mountainous ; though, toward the west, it had many fine plains. In some of these the Canaanites had dwelt ; and the expedition marked here, was for the purpose of finally expelling them. But probably this is a recapitulation of what is related, Josh. chap. x. 36. xi. 21. xv. 13.

Verses 12—15. And Caleb, &c.] See this whole account, which is placed here by way of recapitulation, in Joshua xv. 13—19. and the explanatory notes there.

father-in-law.] For an account of Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, see Exod. xviii. 1—27. Numb. x. 29, &c.

The city of palm trees.] This seems to have been some place near Jericho, which city is expressly called the city of palm trees, Deut. xxxiv. 3; and though destroyed by Joshua, it might have some suburbs remaining, where these harmless people had taken up their residence.

The Kenites, the descendants of Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, were always attached to the Israelites: they remained with them; says Calmet, during their wanderings in the wilderness, and accompanied them to the promised land. They received there a lot with the tribe of Judah, and remained in the city of palm trees during the life of Joshua: but after his death, not contented with their portion, or molested by the original inhabitants, they united with the tribe of Judah, and went with them to attack Arad. After the conquest of that country, the Kenites established themselves there, and remained in it till the days of Saul, mingled with the Amalekites. When this king received a commandment from God to destroy the Amalekites, he sent a message to the Kenites to depart from among them, as God would not destroy them with the Amalekites. From them came Hemath, who was the father of the house of Rechab, 1 Chron. ii. 55. and the Rechabites, of whom we have a remarkable account, Jer. xxxv. 1, &c.

Verse 17. The city was called Hormah.] This appears to be the same transaction mentioned Numb. xxi. 1. &c. where see the notes.

Verse 18. Judah took Gaza—and Askelon—and Ekron.] There is a most remarkable variation here in the Septuagint: I shall set down the verse: Και ουκ εληθρονησεν Ιουδας την Γαζαν, ουδε τα ορια αυτης. ουδε την Ασκαλων, ουδε τα ορια αυτης και την Ασκλων, ουδε τα ορια αυτης την Αζωτον, ουδε τα περσπορια αυτης και η Κυριος μετα Ιουδα. "But Judah did not possess Gaza, nor the coasts thereof; neither Askelon, nor the coasts thereof; neither Ekron, nor the coasts thereof; and the Lord was with Judah." This is the reading of the Vatican and other copies of the Septuagint: but the Alexandrian MS. and the text of the Complutensian and Antwerp Polyglotts, agree more nearly with the Hebrew text. St. Augustin and Procopius read the same as the Vatican MS. and Josephus expressly says, that the Israelites took only Askelon and Azotus, but did not take Gaza nor Ekron: and the whole history shows that these cities were not in the possession of the Israelites, but of the Philistines: and if the Israelites did take them at this time, as the Hebrew text states, they certainly lost them in a very short time after.

Verse 19. And the Lord was with Judah, and he drave out the inhabitants of the mountain; but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron.] Strange! were the iron chariots too strong for Omnipotence? The whole of this verse is improperly rendered. The first clause, The Lord was with Judah, should terminate the 18th verse; and this gives the reason for the success of this tribe; The Lord was with Judah, and therefore he slew the Canaanites that inhabited Zephath, &c. &c. Here, then, is a complete period: the remaining part of the verse either refers to a different time, or to the rebellion of Judah against the Lord, which caused him to withdraw his support. Therefore, the Lord was with Judah, and these were the effects of his protection: but afterward, when the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim, &c. God was no longer with them, and their enemies were left to be pricks in their eyes, and thorns in their side, as God himself had said.

This is the turn given to the verse by Jonathan ben Uzziel, the Chaldee paraphrast; "And the WORD of Jehovah was in the support of the house of Judah; and they extirpated the inhabitants of the mountains: but afterward, WHEN THEY SINNED, they were not able to extirpate the inhabitants of the plain country, because they had chariots of iron." They were now left to their own strength; and their adversaries prevailed against them.

Verse 21. The Jebusites dwell with the children of Benjamin.] Jerusalem was situated partly in the tribe of Judah, and partly in the tribe of Benjamin; the northern part belonging to the latter tribe, the southern to the former. The Jebusites had their strongest position in the part that belonged to Benjamin; and from this place they were not wholly expelled till the days of David. See the notes on ver. 8. What is said here of Benjamin, is said of Judah, Josh. xv. 63. There must be an interchange of the names in one or other of these places.

26 And the man went into the land of the Hittites, and built a city, and called the name thereof Luz: which is the name thereof unto this day.

27 ¶ Neither did Manasseh drive out the inhabitants of Beth-shean and her towns, nor Taanach and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Dor and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Ibleam and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns: but the Canaanites would dwell in that land.

Instead of בית יוסף beith Yoseph, "the house of Joseph," ten of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. and six of De Rossi's have בני יוסף beney Yoseph, "the children of Joseph;" and this is the reading of both the Septuagint and Arabic, as well as of two copies in the Hexapla of Origen.

duct of this man was execrable. He was a traitor to his country, and he was accessory to the destruction of the lives and property of his fellow-citizens, which he most sinfully betrayed, in order to save his own. According to the rules and laws of war, the children of Judah might avail themselves of such men and their information; but this does not lessen, on the side of this traitor, the turpitude of the action.

Verse 26. The land of the Hittites.] Probably some place beyond the land of Canaan, in Arabia, whither this people emigrated when expelled by Joshua. Verse 34. The Amorites forced the children of Dan, &c.] Just as the ancient Britons were driven into the mountains of Wales by the Romans; and the native Indians driven back into the woods by the British settlers in America.

Verse 35. The Amorites would dwell in mount Heres] They perhaps agreed to dwell in the mountainous country, being unable to maintain themselves on the plain: and yet were so powerful that the Danites could not totally expel them: they were, however, laid under tribute, and thus the house of Joseph had the sovereignty. The Septuagint have sought out a literal meaning for the names of several of these places, and they render the verse thus: And the Amorites began to dwell in the mount of Tiles, in which there are bears, and in which there are foxes." Thus they translate Heres, Aijalon, and Shaalbim.

Verse 36. Akrabbim] Of scorpions; probably so called from the number of those animals in that place.

THE whole of this chapter appears to be designed as a sort of supplement to those places in the Book of Joshua, which are referred to in the notes, and in the margin: nor is there any thing in it worthy of especial remark. We every where see the same fickle character in the Israelites; and the goodness and long-suffering of God toward them. An especial providence guides their steps; and a fatherly hand chastises them for their transgressions. They are obliged to live in the midst of their enemies, often straitened, but never overcome so as to lose the land which God gave them as their portion. We should learn wisdom from what they have suffered; and confidence in the protection and providence of God, from their support: because these things were written for our learning.

Few can be persuaded that adversity is a blessing; but without it how little should we learn! He, who in the school of affliction has his mind turned toward God,

"Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in every thing."

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. An angel of the Lord] In the preceding chapter we have a summary of several things which took place shortly after the death of Joshua; especially during the time in which the elders lived, [that is, the men who were contemporary with Joshua, but survived him,) and while the people continued faithful to the Lord. In this chapter, and some parts of the following, we have an account of the same people abandoned by their God, and reduced to the heaviest calamities, because they had broken their covenant with their Maker. This chapter, and the eight first verses of the next, may be considered as an epitome of the whole book; in which we see, on one hand, the armies of the Israelites; and on the other, the punishment inflicted on them by the Lord; their repentance, and return to their allegiance; the long-suffering of God; and his mercy showed in

The angel of the Lord, mentioned here, is variously interpreted: some think it was Phineas, the high priest, which is possible; others, that it was a prophet sent to the place where they were now assembled, with an extraordinary commission from God, to reprove them for their sins, and to show them the reason why God had not rooted out their enemies from the land; this is the opinion of the Chaldee paraphrast, consequently of the ancient Jews: others think that an angel, properly such, is intended; and several are of opinion that it was the angel of the covenant, the captain of the Lord's host, which had appeared unto Joshua, chap. v. 14. and no less than the Lord Jesus Christ himself. I think it more probable that some extraordinary human messenger is meant; as such messengers, and indeed prophets, apos-

3 Wherefore I also said, I will not drive them out from before you; but they shall be ^g as thorns in your sides; and ^h their gods shall be a ⁱ snare unto you.

4 And it came to pass, when the angel of the LORD spake these words unto all the children of Israel, that the people lifted up their voice, and wept.

5 And they called the name of that place ^k Bochim: and they sacrificed there unto the LORD.

6 ¶ And when ^l Joshua had let the people go, the children of Israel went every man unto his inheritance to possess the land.

7 ^m And the people served the LORD all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that ⁿ outlived Joshua, who had seen all the great works of the LORD, that he did for Israel.

9 ^p And they buried him in the border of his inheritance, in Timnath-heres, in the mount of Ephraim, on the north side of the hill Gaash.

10 ¶ And also all that generation were gathered unto their fathers: and there arose another generation after them, which ^q knew not the LORD, nor yet the works which he had done for Israel.

tles, &c. are frequently termed angels, that is, messengers of the Lord. The person here mentioned appears to have been a resident at Gilgal, and to have come to Bochim on this express errand.

[I will never break my covenant] Nor did God ever break it. A covenant is never broken but by him who violates the conditions of it; when any of the contracting parties violates any of the conditions, the covenant is then broken, and by that party alone; and the conditions on the other side are null and void.

Verse 3. [I will not drive them out from before you] Their transgressions, and breach of the covenant, were the reasons why they were not put in entire possession of the promised land. See note at the end of this chapter.

Verse 5. [They called the name of that place Bochim] The word בוכים bokim, signifies weepings, or lamentations; and is translated by the Septuagint Κλαυθμός, or Κλαυθμός, bewailings; and it is supposed that the place derived its name from these lamentations of the people. Some think the place itself, where the people were now assembled, was Shilo, now named Bochim, because of the above circumstance. It should be observed, that the angel speaks here in the person of God, by whom he was sent; as the prophets frequently do.

Verse 6. [When Joshua had let the people go] The author of this book is giving here a history of the people, from the division of the land by Joshua, to the time in which the angel speaks. Joshua divided the land to them by lot; recommended obedience to God, which they solemnly promised; and they continued faithful during his life, and during the lives of those who had been his contemporaries, but who had survived him. When all that generation who had seen the wondrous works of God in their behalf had died, then the succeeding generation, who knew not the Lord, who had not seen his wondrous works, forsook his worship, and worshipped Baalim and Ashtaroth, the gods of the nations among whom they lived: and thus the Lord was provoked to anger; and this was the reason why they were delivered into the hands of their enemies. This is the sum of their history to the time in which the angel delivers his message.

Verse 8. [Joshua—died] See the notes on Josh. xxiv. 29, 30.

Verse 11. [Served Baalim] The word בללים baalim, signifies lords. Their false gods they considered supernatural rulers, or governors; each having his peculiar district and office: but when they wished to express a particular Baal, they generally added some particular epithet, as Baal-zephon, Baal-peor, Baal-zebub, Baal-shamayim, &c. as Calmet has well observed. The two former were adored by the Moabites; Baal-zebub by the Eckronites; Baal-berith was honoured at Shechem; and Baal-shamayim, the lord or ruler of the heavens, was adored among the Phœnicians, Syrians, Chaldeans, &c. And whenever the word Baal is used without an epithet, this is the god that is intended; and probably among all these people meant the sun.

Verse 12. [Which brought them out of the land of Egypt] This was one of the highest aggravations of their offence; they forsook the God who brought them out of Egypt! a place in that were round about them, and bowed themselves unto them, and provoked the LORD to anger.

13 And they forsook the LORD, and served Baal and Ashtaroth.

14 ¶ And the anger of the LORD was hot against Israel, and he delivered them into the hands of spoilers that spoiled them, and he sold them into the hands of their enemies round about, so that they could not any longer stand before their enemies.

They forsook HIM; and served idols, as destitute of real being as of influence and power.

Verse 13. Served Baal and Ashtaroth.] In a general way, probably, Baal and Ashtaroth mean the sun and moon; but in many cases Ashtaroth seems to have been the same among the Canaanites, as Venus was among the Greeks and Romans; and to have been worshipped with the same obscene rites.

Verse 14. The hands of spoilers] Probably marauding parties of the Canaanites, making frequent incursions in their lands, carrying away cattle, spoiling their crops, &c.

Verse 15. The hand of the Lord was against them] The power which before protected them when obedient, was now turned against them, because of their disobedience. They not only had not God with them, but they had God against them.

Verse 16. The Lord raised up judges] That is, leaders, generals, and governors, raised up by an especial appointment of the Lord, to deliver them from, and avenge them on, their adversaries. See the preface.

Verse 17. Went a whoring after other gods] Idolatry, or the worship of strange gods, is frequently termed adultery, fornication, and whoredom, in the Sacred Writings. As many of their idolatrous practices were accompanied with impure rites, the term was not only metaphorically, but literally proper.

Verse 18. The Lord was with the judge] God himself was king, and the judge was his representative.

It repented the Lord] He changed his purpose toward them: he purposed to destroy them, because of their sin; they repented, and turned to him, and he changed his purpose. The purpose was to destroy them if they did not repent; when they did repent, his not destroying them was quite consistent with his purpose.

Verse 19. When the judge was dead] It appears that, in general, the office of the judge was for life.

Their stubborn way] Their hard or difficult way. Most sinners go through great tribulation, in order to get to eternal perdition: they would have had less pain in their way to heaven.

Verse 20. The anger of the Lord was hot] They were as fuel by their transgressions; and the displeasure of the Lord was as a fire, about to kindle and consume that fuel.

Verse 21. I will not henceforth drive out] As a people, they never had personal courage, discipline, or hardihood, sufficient to stand before their enemies: the advantages they gained were by the peculiar interference of God. This they had while obedient; when they ceased to obey, his strong arm was no longer stretched out in their behalf; therefore their enemies continued to possess the land which God purposed to give them as their inheritance for ever.

Verse 22. That through them I may prove Israel] There appeared to be no other way to induce this people to acknowledge the true God but by permitting them to fall into straits from which they could not be delivered but by his especial providence. These words are spoken after the manner of men; and the metaphor is taken from the case of a master or father, who distrusts the fidelity or obedience of his servant or son, and places them in such circumstances that, by their good or evil conduct, they may justify his suspicions, or give him proofs of their fidelity.

Verse 23. Without driving them out hastily] Had God expelled all the ancient inhabitants at once, we plainly see, from the subsequent conduct of the people, that they would soon have abandoned his worship; and in their prosperity forgotten their deliverer. He drove out at first as many as were necessary, in order to afford the people, as they were then, a sufficiency of room to settle in: as the tribes increased in population, they were to extend themselves to the uttermost of their assigned borders, and expel all the remaining inhabitants. On these accounts God did not expel the aboriginal inhabitants hastily, or at once; and thus gave the Israelites time to increase: and by continuing the ancient inhabitants, prevented the land from running into waste, and the wild beasts from multiplying; both of which must have infallibly taken place, had God driven out all the old inhabitants at once, before the Israelites were sufficiently numerous to occupy the whole of the land.

These observations are important, as they contain the reason why God did not expel the Canaanites. God gave the Israelites a grant of the whole land, and promised to drive out their enemies from before them, if they continued faithful. While they continued faithful, God did continue to fulfil his promise; their borders were enlarged, and their enemies fled before them. When they rebelled against the Lord, he abandoned them; and their enemies prevailed against them. Of this, their frequent lapses and miscarriages, with God's repeated interpositions in their behalf, are ample evidence. One or two solitary instances might not be considered as sufficient proof; but by these numerous instances, the fact is established. Each rebellion against God produced a consequent disaster in their affairs; each true humiliation was invariably followed by an especial divine interposition in their behalf. These afforded continual proof of God's being, providence, and grace. The whole economy is wondrous, and the effects impressive and convincing. The people were not hastily put in possession of the promised land because of their infidelity. Can the infidels controvert this statement? If not, then their argument against divine revelation, from "the failure of positive promises and oaths," falls to the ground. They have not only in this, but in all other respects, lost all their props.

"Helpless and prostrate all their system lies Cursing its fate; and, as it curses, dies."

CHAPTER III.

An account of the nations that were left to prove Israel, 1—4. How the people provoked the Lord, 5—7. They are delivered into the power of the king of Mesopotamia, by whom they are enslaved eight years, 8. Othniel is raised up as their deliverer; he discomfits the king of Mesopotamia, delivers Israel, and the land enjoys peace for forty years, 9—11. They again rebel, and are delivered into the hand of the king of Moab, by whom they are enslaved eighteen years, 12—14. They are delivered by Ehud, who kills Eglon, king of Moab, and slays ten thousand Moabites; and the land rests four score years, 15—30.

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. Now these are the nations]. The nations left to prove the Israelites were—the five lordships, or satrapies, of the Philistines; viz. Gath, Askelon, Ashdod, Ekron, and Gaza; the Sidonians, the Hivites of Lebanon, Baalhermon, &c. with the remains of the Canaanites, viz. the Hittites, Amorites, Perizzites, and Jebusites.

Those who were left to be proved were those Israelites that had not seen all the wars of Canaan.

Verse 2. That—Israel might know to teach them war] This was another reason why the Canaanites were left in the land, that the Israelites might not forget military discipline; but habituate themselves to the use of arms, that they might always be able to defend themselves against their foes. Had they been faithful to God, they would have had no need of learning the art of war; but now arms became a sort of necessary substitute for that spiritual strength which had departed from them. Thus God, in his judgments, leaves one iniquitous nation to harass and torment another. Were all to turn to God, men need learn war no more.

Verse 4. To know whether they would hearken] This would be the consequence of the Canaanites being left among them. If they should be faithful to God, their enemies would not be able to enslave them: should they be rebellious, the Lord would abandon them to their foes.

Verse 6. And they took their daughters] They formed matrimonial alliances with those proscribed nations, served their idols, and thus became one with them in politics and religion.

Verse 7. Served Baalim and the groves] No groves were ever worshipped; but the deities, which were supposed to be resident in them: and in many cases temples and altars were built in groves; and the superstition of consecrating groves and woods to the honour of the deities was a practice very usual with the ancients. Pliny assures us that trees, in old times, served for the temples of the gods. Tacitus reports this custom of the old Germans; Quintus Curtius, of the Indians; and Cæsar, and our old writers, mention the same of the Druids in Britain. The Romans were admirers of this way of worship, and therefore had their luci, or groves, in most parts of the city, dedicated to some deity. But it is very probable that the word אַשְׁתְּרוֹת ashereth, which we translate groves, is a corruption of the word אַשְׁתְּרוֹת ashereth, the moon, or Venus; see on chap. ii. 13. which differs only in the letter נ tau, from the former. Ashereth is read in this place by the Chaldee Targum, the Syriac, the Arabic, and the Vulgate; and by one of Dr. Kennicott's MSS.

Served Chushan—eight years.] He overran their country, and forced them to pay a very heavy tribute.

Verse 9. Raised up—Othniel, the son of Kenaz] This noble Hebrew was of the tribe of Judah, and nephew and son-in-law to Caleb, whose praise stands without abatement in the sacred records. Othniel had already signalized his valour in taking Kirjath-sepher, which appears to have been a very hazardous exploit. By his natural valour, experience in war, and the peculiar influence of the Divine Spirit, he was well qualified to inspire his countrymen with courage, and to lead them successfully against their oppressors.

Verse 10. His hand prevailed] We are not told of what nature this war was, but it was most decisive; and the consequence was an undisturbed peace of forty years, during the whole life of Othniel. By the Spirit of the Lord coming upon him, the Chaldee understands the spirit of prophecy; others understand "the spirit of fortitude and extraordinary courage, as opposed to the spirit of fear, or faintness of heart:" but as Othniel was judge, and had many offices to fulfil besides that of a general, he had need of the Spirit of God, in the proper sense of the word, to enable him to

people: and his receiving it for these purposes, shows that the political state of the Jews was still a theocracy. No man attempted to do any thing in that state without the immediate inspiration of God; the pretension to which was always justified by the event.

Verse 12. The children of Israel did evil
They forgot the Lord, and became idolaters; and God made those very people whom they had imitated in their idolatrous worship, the means of their chastisement.

The Lord strengthened Eglon the king of Moab] The success he had against the Israelites was by the especial appointment and energy of God. He not only abandoned the Israelites, but strengthened the Moabites against them.

Eglon is supposed to have been the immediate successor of Balak. Some great men have borne names which, when reduced to their grammatical meaning, appear very ridiculous;
the word עגלון Eglon, signifies a little calf!

Verse 12. The city of palm trees.] This the Targum renders the city of Jericho; but Jericho had been destroyed by Joshua, and certainly was not rebuilt till the reign of Ahab, long after this, 1 Kings xvi. 34. However, as Jericho is expressly called the city of palm trees, Deut. xxiv. 3. the city in question must have been in the vicinity or plain of Jericho; and the king of Moab had seized it as a frontier town, contiguous to his own estates. Calmet supposes that the city of palm trees means En-gaddi.

Verse 15. Ehud, the son of Gera—a man left-handed] ימיני אש ימיני ish itter yad yemino, a man lame in his right hand, and therefore obliged to use his left. The Septuagint render it ἀνδρα ἀμφοτεροδεξιον, an ambidexter; a man who could use both hands alike. The Vulgate, qui utraque manu pro dextera utebatur, a man who could use either hand as a right hand; or,
to whom right and left were equally ready.
This is not the sense of the original, but it is the sense in which most interpreters understand it. It is well known that to be an ambi-dexter, was in high repute among the ancients:
Hector boasts of it—

Αὐτὰρ ἔγῳν σὺ οὐδ' ἀμυχὰς τ', ἀνδρεκτασίας τε·
οὐδ' ἐπὶ δεξιά οὐδ' ἐπ' ἀριστερὰ νῦν μοι σάβω

Iliad, lib. vii. 237.

15 But when the children

LORD, the LORD raised up a deliverer, Ehud, the son
handed: and by him the children of Israel sent a present unto Eglon the king of Moab.

16 But Ehud made him a dagger which had two edges, of a cubit length; and he did gird it under his raiment upon his right thigh.

17 And he brought the present unto Asteropæus is also represented by Homer as an ambidexter; from which he derives great advantages in fight:—

Ὡς φάρ' ἀπειλήσας· ὁ δ' ἀνέσχετο διὸς Ἀχιλλεύου
Πηλιάδα μέλιν'· ὁ δ' ὀμαρτή δούρασιν ἀμφὶς Ἦρως Ἀστροπῆαιος, ἐπεὶ περιδεξίος ἦε.
Iliad, lib. xxi. 161.

"So threatened he. Then raised Achilles high
The Pelian ash:—and his two spears at once, Alike a practised warrior with both hands, Asteropæus hurl'd." Couper.

We are informed by Aristotle that Plato recommended to all soldiers to acquire, by study and exercise, an equal facility of using both hands. Speaking of Plato, he says, Καὶ τὴν ἐν τοῖς πολεμικοῖς ἀσκήσιν, ὅπως ἀμφιδεξίους γίνωνται κατὰ τὴν μέλειν, ὡς θεὸν μὴ τοῦ μὴ χρησιμοποιῆσαι τὰν χεῖρην, τὴν δὲ ἀχρηστοῖν. De Repub. lib. ii. cap. 12. "He (Plato) also made a law concerning their warlike exercises, that they should acquire a habit of using both hands alike; as it is not fit that one of the hands should be useful, and the other useless."

In chap. xx. 16. of this book, we have an account of seven hundred men of Benjamin, each of whom was ימיני אש ימיני itter yad yemino, lame of his right hand, and yet slinging stones to a hair's breadth without missing; these are generally thought to be ambidexters.

Sent a present unto Eglon] This is generally understood to be the tribute money which the king of Moab had imposed on the Israelites.

Verse 16. A dagger which had two edges, of a cubit length.] The word גומד gomed, which we translate cubit, is of very doubtful signification.
As the root seems to signify contracted, it probably means an instrument made for the purpose, shorter than usual, and something like to the Italian stiletto. The Septuagint translate it by σπιθαμῆς, a span; and most of the versions understand it in the same sense.

handed. Ordinarily the sword is on the left side, that it may be readily drawn out by the right hand; but as Ehud was left-handed, to be convenient, his sword must be on the right side.

Verse 17. Eglon was a very fat man] The שׂר ימיני ish baria of the text is translated by the Septuagint ἀνδρα σφόδρα σφοδρὰ, a very beautiful or polite man; and the Syriac, a very rude

20 And Ehud came unto him; and he was sitting in ^e a summer parlour,

^c Josh. 4. 20.—^d Or, graven images.—^e Heb. a parlour of man. It probably means what we call lusty, or corpulent.

Verse 18. Made an end to offer the present
Presents, tribute, &c. in the eastern countries, were offered with very great ceremony; and,
to make the more parade, several persons, ordinarily slaves, sumptuously dressed, and in considerable number, were employed to carry what would not be a burden even to one. This appears to have been the case in the present instance.

Verse 19. He turned from the quarries פסילימ pesilim. Some of the versions understand this word as meaning idols, or graven images; or some spot where the Moabites had a place of idolatrous worship. As פסל pasal, signifies to cut, hew, or engrave, it may be applied to the images thus cut, or to the place or quarry whence they were digged: but it is most likely that idols are meant.

Verse 20. He was sitting in a summer parlour] Besides the platforms, says Dr. Shaw, which were upon the ancient houses of the East, and which are found there to this day, it is probable that heretofore, as well as at present, most of the great houses had a smaller one an-nexed; which seldom consisted of more than one or two rooms and a terrace. Others, built as they frequently are, above the porch or gateway, have, if we except the ground floor, all the conveniences belonging to the house properly so called. There is a door of communication from them into the gallery of the house, kept open or shut at the discretion of the master of the house; besides another which opens immediately from a privy stairs down into the porch, or street, without giving the least disturbance to the house. In these back houses strangers are usually lodged and entertained; hither the men are wont to retire from the hurry and noise of their families, to be more at leisure for meditation or diversions; and they are often used for wardrobes and magazines. These the Arabs call oleah, which exactly answers to the Hebrew word פריצת aljath, found in this place; and, without doubt, such was the apartment in which Eglon received Ehud, by the privy stairs belonging to which he escaped, after having killed Eglon. The doors of the eastern buildings are large, and their chambers spacious, conveniences well adapted to those hotter climates: but in the present passage, something more seems to be meant; at least there are now other conveniences in the east to give which he had for himself

21 And Ehud put forth his left hand, and took the dagger from his right coolness to particular rooms, which are very common. In Egypt, the cooling their rooms is effected by openings at the top, which let in the fresh air. Mons. Maillet informs us, that their halls are made very large and lofty, with a dome at the top, which, toward the north, has several open windows, so constructed as to throw the north wind down into the rooms; and by this means, though the country is excessively hot, they can make the coolness of those apartments so great as often not to be borne without being wrapped in furs. Eglon's was a chamber; and some contrivance to mitigate the heat of it was the more necessary, as he appears to have kept his court at Jericho, ver. 13, 28, where the heat is so excessive as sometimes to prove fatal. See Harmer's Observations.

I have a message from God unto thee ויבר אליי debar elohim li alichah, a word of the gods to me, unto thee. It is very likely that the word elohim is used here to signify idols, or the pesilim mentioned above, ver. 19. Ehud having gone so far as this place of idolatry, might feign he had there been worshipping, and that the pesilim had inspired him with a message for the king; and this was the reason why the king commanded silence, why every man went out, and why he rose from his seat, or throne, that he might receive it with the greater respect. This, being an idolater, he would not have done to any message coming from the God of Israel. I have a message from God unto thee is a popular text: many are fond of preaching from it. Now, as no man should ever depart from the literal meaning of Scripture in his preaching, we may at once see the absurdity of taking such a text as this; for such preachers, to be consistent, should carry a two-edged dagger of a cubit long, on their right thigh, and be ready to thrust it into the bowels of all those they addressed! This is certainly the literal meaning of the passage; and that it has no other meaning is an incontrovertible truth.

Verse 22. The haft also went in after the blade
As the instrument was very short, and Eglon very corpulent, this might readily take place.

And the dirt came out.] This is variously understood; either the contents of the bowels issued through the wound, or he had an evacuation in the natural way, through the fright and anguish.

The original, פרישדונוה parshedonah, occurs only here; and is supposed to be compounded of פריש pareth, dung, and שדה shadeh, to shed, and may be very well applied to the latter circumstance; so the Vulgate understood it.

Verse 24. He covereth his feet] He is lain down on his sofa, in order to sleep: when this was done, they dropped their slippers, lifted up their feet, and covered them with their long loose garments. But the versions, in general, seem to understand it as implying a certain natural act.

Verse 26. Passed beyond the quarries] Beyond the Pesilim, which appears to have been the Moabitish borders, where they had set up those hewn stones as landmarks, or sacred boundary stones.

Verse 28. Took the fords of Jordan] It is very likely that the Moabites, who were on the western side of Jordan, hearing of the death of Eglon, were panic-struck, and endeavoured to escape over Jordan, at the fords near Jericho, when Ehud blew his trumpet in the mountains of Ephraim, and thus got into the land of the Moabites, which lay on the east of Jordan: but Ehud and his men, seizing the only pass by which they could make their escape, slew ten thousand of them in their attempt to cross at those fords. What are called here the fords, was doubtless the place where the Israelites had passed Jordan, when they (under Joshua) took possession of the promised land.

Verse 29. All lusty, and all men of valour] Picked, chosen troops, which Eglon kept among the Israelites to reduce and overawe them.

Verse 30. The land had rest fourscore years] This is usually reckoned from the deliverance under Othniel; that being a term from which they dated every transaction, as in other cases they dated from the Exodus, from the building of Solomon's temple, &c., and as other nations did from particular events: the ROMANS, from the building of the city; the MOHAMMEDANS, from the Hijreh, or flight of Mohammed to Medina; the CHRISTIANS, from the birth of 28 And he said unto them, Follow after me; for the LORD hath delivered your enemies the Moabites into your hand. And they went down after him, and took the fords of Jordan toward Moab, and suffered not a man to pass over.

29 And they slew of Moab at that time about ten thousand men, all lusty, and all men of valour; and there escaped not a man.

30 So Moab was subdued that day under the hand of Israel. And the land had rest fourscore years.

Verse 31. And after him was Shamgar the son of Anath] Dr. Hales supposes that "Shamgar's administration in the west included Ehud's administration of eighty years in the east; and that, as this administration might have been of some continuance, so this Philistine servitude, which is not noticed elsewhere, might have been of some duration; as may be incidentally collected from Deborah's thanksgiving," ch. v. 6.

Slew—six hundred men with an ox-goad] מלמד מלמד המדק malmad habakkar, the instructor of the oxen. This instrument is differently understood by the versions: the Vulgate has romere, with the coultre, or ploughshare, a dreadful weapon in the hand of a man endued with so much strength; the Septuagint has απαρροτον τω βοων, with the ploughshare of the oxen; the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, understand it of the goad; as does our translation:

1. THAT the ox-goad, still used in Palestine, is a sufficiently destructive weapon; if used by a strong and skilful hand, is evident enough from the description which Mr. Maundrel gives of this implement, having seen many of them both in Palestine and Syria. "Twas observable," says he, "that in ploughing they used goads of an extraordinary size: upon measuring of several I found them about eight feet long; and at the bigger end about six inches in circumference. They were armed at the lesser end with a sharp prickle, for driving the oxen; and at the other end, with a small spade, or paddle of iron, strong and massy, for cleansing the plough from the clay that encumbers it in working." See his Journey from Aleppo, &c. 7th edit. page 110, 111. In the hands of a strong, skilful man, such an instrument must be more dangerous, and more fatal, than any sword.

It is worthy of remark, that the ox-goad is represented by Homer to have been used, prior to this time, in the same way. In the address of Diomed to Glaucus, Iliad, lib. vi. ver. 129. Lycurgus is represented as discomfiting Bacchus and the Bacchanals with this weapon. The siege of Troy, according to the best chronologists, happened within the time of the Israelitish judges.

Οὐκ αὖ ἐγὼ γε θεοῖσιν ἐπὶ θυράνισσι μάχομαι·
Οὐδὲ γὰρ οὐδὲ Δρυαντὸς υἱὸς κρατερὸς Λυκούργος·

Σὺν κατ' ἡγάθων Νύσσῳ, αἰ δ' ἀμα παῖσσι
Θυσθλα χαμαὶ κατεχυναν, ὑπ' ἀνδροφονίῳ Λυκούργῳ·

ἐνομιμαὶ βουπληγῇ.

"I fight not with the inhabitants of heaven;
That war Lycurgus, son of Dryas, waged,
Nor long survived.—From Nyssa's sacred heights
He drove the nurses of the frantic god
Thought-drowning Bacchus; to the ground they cast,
All cast their leafy wands; while ruthless he,
Spared not to smite them with his murderous goad."

The meaning of this fable is: Lycurgus, king of Thrace, finding his subjects addicted to drunkenness, proscribed the cultivation of the vine in his dominions, and instituted agriculture in its stead: thus, Θυσθλα, the Thyrst, were expelled, βουπληγῇ, by the ox-goad. The account, however, shows that Shamgar was not the only person who used the ox-goad as an offensive weapon. If we translate the βουπληγῇ a cart-whip, the parallel is lost.

2. It appears that Shamgar was merely a labouring man; that the Philistines were making an inroad on the Israelites when the latter were cultivating their fields; that Shamgar and his neighbours successfully resisted them; that they armed themselves with their more portable agricultural instruments; and that Shamgar, either with a ploughshare or an ox-goad, slew six hundred of those marauders.

3. The case of Ehud killing Eglon, is a very serious one; and how far he was justified in this action is with all a question of importance; and, with not a few, a question of difficulty.

"Is it right to slay a tyrant?" I, without any hesitation, answer, no individual has a right to slay any man, except it be in his own defence, when a person attacks him in order to take away his life. "But may not any of his oppressed subjects put an end to the life of a tyrant?" No. The state alone can judge whether a king is ruling contrary to the laws and constitution of that state; and if that state have provided laws for the punishment of a ruler who is endeavouring to destroy or subvert that constitution, then let him be dealt with according to those laws. But no individual, or number of individuals in that state, has any right to dispose of the life of the ruler but according to law. To take his life in any other way is no less than murder. It is true, God, the author of life, and the judge of all men, may commission one man to take away the life of a tyrant. But the pretension to such a commission must be strong, clear, and unequivocal: in short, if a man think he have such a commission; to be safe, he should require the Lord to give him as full an evidence of it as he did to Moses; and when such a person comes to the people, they should require him to give as many proofs of his divine call as the Hebrews did Moses, before they should credit his pretensions. "But had not Ehud a divine call?" I cannot tell. If he had, he did not murder Eglon; if he had not, his act, however it succeeded, was a murderous act: and if he had no message from God, and there is no proof that he had, then he was a most base and hypocritical assassin. The sacred historian says nothing of his motives nor call; he mentions simply the fact, and leaves it without either observation or comment; and every reader is left to draw his own inference.

The life of any ruler can only be at the disposal of the constitution; or that system of rules, laws, and regulations, by which the people he rules should be governed: if he rule not according to these, he is, ipso facto, deposed from his government. If he break the constitution, to the great injury or ruin of his subjects, then he is to be judged by those laws, according to which he must have pledged himself to govern. If a king be deposed on any other account, it is rebellion. If his life be taken away by any means but those provided by the constitution, it is murder. No pretended, or proved tyranny, can justify his being taken off in any other way, or on any other account. And what constitution in the civilized world provides for the death of the supreme magistrate? It is true, the good people, as they were called, of England and France, have each, under a pretence of law, beheaded their king; and they endeavoured to justify their conduct on the ground that those kings had broken the constitution: this being proved, they should have been deposed. But by what law, either of those nations, or the civilized world, were their lives taken away? Let it be remembered, that the infliction of the punishment of death, either against or without law, is murder.

CHAPTER IV.

The Israelites again rebel against God, and they are delivered into the hands of Jabin, king of Canaan, 1, 2. They cry unto God, and he raises up Deborah and Barak, to deliver them, 3—10. Some account of Heber, the Kenite, 11. Barak attacks Sisera, captain of Jabin's army, at the river Kishon, and gives him a total overthrow, 11—16. Sisera leaves his chariot, and flies away on foot; enters the tent of Jael, the wife of Heber, by whom he is slain, while secreting himself in her apartment, 17—24.

descendant of the Jabin mentioned Josh. xi. 1, &c. who had gathered together the wrecks of the army of that Jabin defeated by Joshua. Calmet supposes that these Canaanites had the dominion over the tribes of Naphtali, Zebulun, and Issachar; while Deborah judged in Ephraim, and Shamgar in Judah.

Verse 3. Nine hundred chariots of iron] Chariots armed with iron scythes, as is generally supposed: they could not have been made all of iron; but they might have been shod with iron, or had iron scythes projecting from the axle on each side, by which infantry might be easily cut down, or thrown into confusion. The ancient Britons are said to have had such chariots.

Verse 4. Deborah, a prophetess] One on whom the Spirit of God descended, and who was the instrument of conveying to the Israelites the knowledge of the divine will, in things sacred and civil.

She judged Israel] This is, I believe, the first instance of gynaecocracy, or female government, on record. Deborah seems to have been supreme both in civil and religious affairs: and Lapidoth, her husband, appears to have had no hand in the government. But the original may as well be translated a woman of Lapidoth, as the wife of Lapidoth.

Verse 6. She sent and called Barak] She appointed him to be general of the armies on this occasion; which shows that she possessed the supreme power in the state.

Mount Tabor] Mount Tabor, says Maundrel, stands by itself, about two or three furlongs within the plains of Esdraelon. It has a plain area at the top, both fertile and delicious, of an oval figure, extending about one furlong in breadth, and two in length. The prospect from the top is beautiful: on the N. W. is the Mediterranean; and all around you have the spacious plains of Esdraelon and Galilee, which present you with a view of many places famous for the resort and miracles of the Son of God. At the bottom of Tabor, westward, stands Daberah, a small village, supposed to have taken its name from Deborah. Near this valley is the brook Kishon. During the rainy season, all the water that falls on the eastern side of the mountain, or upon the rising ground to the southward, empties itself into it, in a number of torrents; at which conjuncture it overflows its banks, acquires a wonderful rapidity, and carries all before it. It might be at such a time as this when the stars are said to fight against Sisera, chap. v. 21, by bringing an abundance of rain, whereby the Kishon became so high and rapid, as to sweep away the host of Sisera, in attempting to ford it. See Maundrel and Shaw. This mountain is very difficult of ascent; it took Mr. Maundrel nearly an hour to reach the top: this, with its grand area on the summit, made a very proper place for the rendezvous of Barak's army. Antiochus used it for the same purpose in his wars; and Josephus appears to have fortified it; and Placidus, one of Vespasian's generals, was sent to reduce it. See more in Calmet.

Verse 9. The Lord shall sell Sisera into the hand of a woman] Does not this mean, If I go with thee, the conquest shall be attributed to me, and thou wilt have no honour? Or, is it a prediction of the exploit of Jael? In both these senses the words have been understood. It seems, however, more likely that Jael is intended.

The Septuagint make a remarkable addition to the speech of Barak: "If thou wilt go with me, I will go; but if thou wilt not go with me, I will not go; οτι ουκ οίδα την ημεραν εν η ηωδοι Κυριος τον αγγελον μου, because I know not the day in which the Lord will send his angel to give me success." By which he appears to mean, that, although he was certain of a divine call to this work, yet, as he knew not the time in which it would be proper for him to make the attack,

11 Now Heber the Kenite, which father-in-law of Moses, had severed himself from the Kenites, and pitched which is by Kedesh.

he wishes that Deborah, on whom the Divine Spirit constantly rested, would accompany him, to let him know when to strike that blow, which he knew would be decisive. This was quite natural, and quite reasonable; and is no impeachment whatever of Barak's faith. Saint Ambrose and St. Augustin have the same reading; but it is found in no MS. nor in any other of the versions: See ver. 14.

Verse 10. Ten thousand men at his feet] Ten thousand footmen. He had no chariots; his army was all composed of infantry.

Verse 11. Hobab, the father-in-law of Moses] For a circumstantial account of this person, and the meaning of the original word חֲבֹב, choben, which is translated son-in-law, in Gen. xix. 4.

Verse 14. Up; for this is the day] This is exactly the purpose for which the Septuagint state, ver. 8. that Barak wished Deborah to accompany him. "I know not (says he) THE DAY in which God will send his angel to give me prosperity; come thou with me that thou mayest direct me, in this respect." She went, and told him the precise time in which he was to make the attack. Up; for THIS is the day in which the Lord hath delivered Sisera into thine hand.

Went down from mount Tabor] He had pro-off his chariot, and fled away on his feet.

16 But Barak pursued after the chariots, and after the^l host, unto Harosheth of the Gentiles: and all the host of Sisera fell upon the edge of the sword; and there was not

17 ¶ Howbeit Sisera fled away on his feet to the tent of Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite: for there was peace between Jabin the king of Hazor and the house of Heber the Kenite.

18 And Jael went out to meet Sisera, and said unto him, Turn in, my lord, turn in to me; fear not. And when he had turned in unto her into the tent, she covered him with a^y mantle.

19 And he said unto her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water to drink; for I am thirsty. And she opened^z a bottle of milk, and gave him drink, and covered him.

20 Again he said unto her, Stand in of thee, and say, Is there any man here? that thou shalt say, No.

bably encamped his men on and near the summit of this mount. See the note on ver. 6.

סִיסֵּרָה וְאֶת-כָּל-כִּנְיָהּ, the Lord confounded, threw them all into confusion, drove them pell-mell; caused chariots to break and overthrow chariots, and threw universal disorder into all their ranks. In this case Barak and his men had little to do but kill and pursue: and Sisera, in order to escape, was obliged to abandon his chariot. There is no doubt all this was done by supernatural agency; God sent his angel and confounded them.

Verse 18. Jael went out to meet Sisera] He preferred the woman's tent because of secrecy; for, according to the etiquette of the eastern countries, no person ever intrudes into the apartments of the women. And in every dwelling the women have a separate apartment.

Verse 19. She opened a bottle of milk] She gave more than he requested; and her friendship increased his confidence and security.

Verse 20. Stand in the door of the tent] As no man would intrude into the woman's apartment without permission, her simply saying there is no man in my tent would preclude all search.

Verse 21. A nail of the tent] One of the 23 ¶ So ° God subdued on that day Jabin the king of Canaan before the children of Israel.

24 And the hand of the children of Israel prospered, and prevailed against Jabin the king of Canaan, until they had destroyed Jabin king of Canaan.

c Psa. 18. 47.

He was fast asleep and weary] As he lay on one side, and was overwhelmed with sleep through the heat and fatigues of the day, the piercing of his temples must have in a moment put him past resistance.

Verse 22. Behold, Sisera lay dead] What impression this made on the victorious Barak is not said; it could not give him much pleasure, especially when he learnt the circumstances of his death.

Verse 24. The hand of the children of Israel prospered] וְיָד יִשְׂרָאֵל וְיָדָהּ vatelech-haloch, it went, going: they followed up this victory; and the consequence was, they utterly destroyed Jabin and his kingdom.

It will naturally be expected that something should be said to justify the conduct of Jael: it must be owned that she slew Sisera in circumstances which cause the whole transaction to appear exceedingly questionable. They are the following:

1. There was peace between her family and the king of Canaan.

2. That peace was no doubt made, as all transactions of the kind were, with a sacrifice and an oath.

3. Sisera, knowing this, came to her tent with the utmost confidence.

4. She met him with the most friendly greetings and assurances of safety.

5. Having asked for water, to show her friendship and respect, she gave him cream, and that in a vessel suitable to his dignity.

6. She put him in the secret part of her own tent; and covered him in such a way as to evidence her good faith, and to inspire him with the greater confidence.

7. She agreed to keep watch at the door, and deny his being there to any that might inquire.

8. As she gave him permission to secrete himself with her, and gave him refreshment, she was bound by the rules of Asiatic hospitality to have defended his life, even at the risk of her own.

9. Notwithstanding, she took the advantage of his weariness and deep sleep, and took away his life!

10. She exulted in her deed; met Barak, and showed him in triumph what she had done.

Now do we not find in all this, bad faith, deceit, deep hypocrisy, lying, breach of treaty, contempt of religious rites, breach of the laws of hospitality, deliberate and unprovoked murder?

But what can be said in her justification?
All that can be said, and all that has been said, is simply this: "She might have been sincere at first, but was afterward divinely directed to do what she did." If this was so, she is sufficiently vindicated by the fact; for God has a right to dispose of the lives of his creatures as he pleases; and probably the cup of Sisera's iniquity was full, and his life already forfeited to the justice of God. But does it appear that she received any such direction from God? There is no sufficient evidence of it: it is true that Deborah, a prophetess, declares her blessed above women; and this seems to intimate that her conduct was pleasing to God. If Deborah was inspired on this occasion, her words are a presumptive proof that the act was right; unless we are to understand it as a simple declaration of the reputation she should be held in among her own sex. But we do not find one word from Jael herself, stating how she was led to do an act repugnant to her feelings as a woman, contrary to good faith, and a breach of the rules of hospitality. Nor does the sacred penman say one word to explain the case; as in the case of Ehud, he states the fact, and leaves his readers to form their own opinion.

To say, as has been said in the case of Eglon, that "Sisera was a public enemy, and any of the people whom he oppressed might be justified in taking away his life," is a very dangerous position, as it refers one of the most solemn acts of judgment and justice to the caprice, or prejudice, or enthusiastic feeling, of every individual who may persuade himself that he is not only concerned in the business, but authorized by God to take vengeance at his own hand.
While justice and law are in the world, God never will, as he never did, abandon cases of this kind to the caprice, prejudice, or party feeling of any man. The conduct of Ehud and Jael are before the tribunal of God; I will not justify, I dare not absolutely condemn: there I leave them, and entreat my readers to do the like; after referring them to the observations at the end of the preceding chapter, where the subject is considered more at large.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. Then sang Deborah and Barak] There are many difficulties in this very sublime song; and learned men have toiled much to remove them. That there are several gross mistakes in our version will be instantly acknowledged by all who can critically examine the original. Dr. Kennicott has distributed it into parts, assigned to Deborah and Barak alternately. But his division is by far too artificial.

Dr. Hales has also given a version of it, which, perhaps, comes nearer to the simplicity of the original; but it also leaves several difficulties behind. As these are the two best versions I have met with, I shall lay them both in parallel columns before the reader, after introducing the general description of this song, given by each of these learned men. These the reader will find at the conclusion of the chapter.

Verse 4. When thou wentest out of Seir] Here is an allusion to the giving of the law, and the manifestation of God's power and glory at that time; and as this was the most signal display of his majesty and mercy, in behalf of their forefathers, Deborah very properly begins her song with a commemoration of this transaction.

Verse 6. The highways were unoccupied] The land was full of anarchy and confusion, being every where infested with banditti. No public road was safe: and in going from place to place, the people were obliged to use unfrequented paths.

Verse 7. The villages ceased] The people were obliged to live together in fortified places; or, in great numbers, to protect each other against the incursions of bands of spoilers.

Verse 8. They chose new gods] This was the cause of all their calamities: they forsook Jehovah, and served other gods; and then was war

7 The inhabitants of the villages ceased, they ceased in Israel, until that I Deborah arose, that I arose ⁵a mother in Israel.

8 They ⁶chose new gods; then was war in the gates: ⁷was there a shield or spear seen among forty thousand in Israel?

in their gates; they were hemmed up in every place, and besieged in all their fortified cities; and they were defenceless: they had no means of resisting their adversaries; for, even among forty thousand men, there was neither spear nor shield to be seen.

The Vulgate gives a strange and curious turn to this verse: Nova bella elegit Dominus, et portas hostium ipse subvertit; "The Lord chose a new species of war, and himself subverted the gates of the enemy." Now, what was this new species of war? A woman signifies her orders to Barak; he takes 10,000 men, wholly unarmed, and retires to mount Tabor, where they are immediately besieged by a powerful and well-appointed army. On a sudden, Barak and his men rush upon them, terror and dismay are spread through the whole Canaanitish army, and the rout is instantaneous and complete. The Israelites immediately arm themselves with the arms of their enemies, and slay all before them: they run, and are pursued in all directions. Sisera, their general, is no longer safe in his chariot; either his horses fail, or the unevenness of the roads oblige him to desert it, and fly away on foot: in the end, the whole army is destroyed, and the leader ingloriously slain. This was a new species of war, and was most evidently the Lord's doings. Whatever may be said of the version of the Vulgate, (and the Syriac and Arabic are something like it,) the above are all facts, and show the wondrous working of the Lord.

Verse 10. Ye that ride on white asses] Perhaps אֲנָשֵׁי חֲמֹרִים atonoth tsecharoth, should be rendered steek, or well-fed asses; rendered asinos nitentes, shining asses, by the Vulgate.

Ye that sit in judgment] יוֹשְׁבֵי הַמִּדְּיָן yoshebey al Middin: some have rendered this, ye who dwell in Middin. This was a place in the tribe of Judah, and is mentioned Josh. xv. 61.

Verse 11. In the places of drawing water] As wells were very scarce in every part of the East, and travellers in such hot countries must have water, robbers and banditti generally took their stations near tanks, pools, and springs, in order that they might suddenly fall upon those who came to drink: and, when the country was badly governed, annoyances of this kind were very frequent. The victory gained now by the Israelites put the whole country under their own government, and the land was cleansed from such marauders. Dr. Shaw, in his account of the seacoast of the Mauritania Cæsariensis, p. 20. mentions a beautiful rill of water that runs into a basin of Roman workmanship, called shrub we krub, "drink and be off," because of the danger of meeting with assassins in the place: instead of such danger and insecurity, Deborah intimates that they may sit down at the places of drawing water, and there rehearse the righteous acts of the Lord; the land being now every where in peace, order and good government being restored.

Go down to the gates.] They may go down to the gates to receive judgment and justice as usual. It is well known that the gate was the place of judgment in the East.

Verse 12. Lead thy captivity captive] Make those captives who have formerly captivated us.

Verse 13. Made him that remaineth] This appears to be spoken of Barak, who is represented as being only a remnant of the people.

Verse 14. Out of Ephraim—a root of them] Deborah probably means, that out of Ephraim and Benjamin came eminent warriors. Joshua, who was of the tribe of Ephraim, routed the Amalekites a short time after the Israelites came out of Egypt, Exod. xvii. 10. Ehud, who was of the tribe of Benjamin, slew Eglon, and defeated the Moabites, the friends and allies of the Ammonites and Amalekites. Machir, in the land of Gilead, produced eminent warriors; and Zebulun produced eminent statesmen, and men of literature. Probably Deborah speaks here of the past wars; and not of any thing that was done on this occasion; for we know that no persons from Gilead were present in the war between Jabin and Israel. See ver. 17. Gilead abode beyond Jordan.

Verse 15. The princes of Issachar] They were at hand; and came willingly forth, at the call of Deborah, to this important war.

Barak was sent on foot] I have no doubt that בַּרְקָא, without regarding the points, should be translated with his footmen, or infantry. Thus the Alexandrian Septuagint understood it, rendering the clause thus: οὗτω Βαράκ ἐξέστειλεν πεζοὺς αὐτοῦ εἰς τὴν κοιλάδα, "Barak also sent forth his footmen into the valley." Luther has perfectly hit the meaning. Barak mit seinen fuss volcke, Barak with his footmen.

For the divisions of Reuben] Either the Reubenites were divided among themselves into factions, which prevented their co-operation with their brethren; or they were divided in their judgment concerning the measures now to be pursued; which prevented them from joining with the other tribes, till the business was entirely settled.

The thoughts of heart, and searchings of heart, might refer to the doubts and uneasinesses felt by the other tribes, when they found the Reubenites did not join them: for they might have conjectured that they were either unconcerned about their liberty, or were meditating a coalition with the Canaanites.

Verse 17. Gilead abode beyond Jordan] That is, the Gadites, who had their lot in those parts, and could not well come to the aid of their brethren at a short summons. But the words of Deborah imply a criminal neglect on the part of the Danites: they were intent upon their traffic, and trusted in their ships. Joppa was one of their seaports.

Asher continued on the seashore] The lot of Asher extended along the Mediterranean sea; and, being contiguous to Zebulun and Naphtali, they might have easily succoured their brethren; but they had the pretence that their posts were unguarded, and they abode in their breaches, in order to defend them.

18 Zebulun and Naphtali were a people that jeoparded their lives unto the death in the high places of the field.

19 The kings came and fought, then fought the kings of Canaan in Tanach by the waters of Megiddo; they took no gain of money.

20 They fought from heaven: the stars in their courses fought against Sisera.

21 The river of Kishon swept them away, that ancient river, the river Kishon. O my soul, thou hast trodden down strength.

* Or, creeks.—† Ch. 4. 10.—‡ Heb. exposed to reproach.—§ Ch. 4. 16. Psa. 44. 12. See Ver. 30.—|| See Josh. 10. 11. Psa. 77. 17, 18.—x Ch. 4. 15.

Verse 18. Zebulun and Naphtali—jeoparded their lives] The original is very emphatic, וְזִבְלֻן וְנַפְתָּלִי חֵרֶפְתָּם לָמוּת chereph naphsholamuth, they desolated their lives to death; they were determined to conquer or die, and therefore plunged into the thickest of the battle. The word jeoparded is a silly French term, and comes from the exclamation of a disappointed gamester; jeu perdu! the game is lost; or, j'ai perdu! I have lost.

Verse 19. The kings came and fought] It is conjectured that Jabin and his confederates had invaded Manasseh, as both Tanach and Megiddo were in that tribe; and that they were discomfited by the tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali, at Tanach and Megiddo; while Barak defeated Sisera at mount Tabor.

They took no gain of money.] They expected much booty in the total rout of the Israelites; but they were defeated, and got no prey: or, if applied to the Israelites, they fought for liberty, not for plunder.

Verse 20. They fought from heaven] The angels of God came to the assistance of Israel; and the stars in their orbits fought against Sisera. Probably some thunder-storm, or great inundation from the river Kishon, took place at that time: which, in poetic language, was attributed to the stars. So our poets sung relative to the storms which dispersed the Spanish armada, in 1588:—

"Both winds and waves at once conspire To aid Old England—frustrate Spain's desire,"

Perhaps it means no more than this; the time which was measured and ruled by the heavenly bodies seemed only to exist for the destruction of the Canaanites: there may be also a reference to the sun and moon standing still in the days of Joshua.

Verse 21. The river of Kishon swept them away] This gives plausibility to the above conjecture, that there was a storm at this time, which produced an inundation in the river Kishon, which the routed Canaanites attempting to ford, were swept away.

Verse 22. Then were the horsehoofs broken] In very ancient times horses were not shod; nor are they to the present day in several parts of the East. Sisera had iron chariots when his hosts were routed; the horses that drew these,

22 Then were the horsehoofs broken by the means of the prancings, the prancings of their mighty ones.

23 Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the LORD, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not to the help of the LORD, to the help of the LORD against the mighty.

being strongly urged on by those who drove them, had their hoofs broken by the roughness of the roads; in consequence of which they became lame, and could not carry off their riders. This is marked as one cause of their disaster.

Verse 23. Curse ye Meroz] Where Meroz was is not known: some suppose it was the same as Merom, nigh to Dothan. The Syriac and Arabic have Merod; but where this was is equally uncertain. It was certainly some city or district, the inhabitants of which would not assist in this war.

Curse ye bitterly] אר אר אר curse with cursing; use the most awful execrations.

Said the angel of the LORD] That is, Barak, who was Jehovah's angel or messenger, in this war; the person sent by God to deliver his people.

To the help of the LORD] That is, to the help of the people of the Lord.

Against the mighty] בגִבּוֹרִים bagibborim, "with the heroes;" that is, Barak and his men, together with Zebulun and Naphtali: these were the mighty men, or heroes, with whom the inhabitants of Meroz would not join.

Verse 24. Blessed above women shall Jael—be] She shall be highly celebrated as a most heroic woman; all the Israelitish women shall glory in her. I do not understand these words as expressive of the divine approbation toward Jael. See the observations at the end of chap. iv. The word bless, both in Hebrew and Greek, often signifies, to praise, to speak well of, to celebrate. This is most probably its sense here.

Verse 25. She brought forth butter] As the word חֶמֶה chemah, here translated butter, signifies disturbed, agitated, &c. it is probable that buttermilk is intended. The Arabs form their buttermilk, by agitating the milk in a leathern bag; and the buttermilk is highly esteemed, because of its refreshing and cooling quality; but there is no reason why we may not suppose that Jael gave him cream. Sisera was not only thirsty, but was also exhausted with fatigue; and nothing could be better calculated to slake his thirst, and restore his exhausted strength, than a bowl of cream: and I am surprised that Mr. Harmer should see any difficulty in this. It is evident that Deborah wishes to convey the idea that Jael was more liberal and kind than Sisera had requested. He asked for water, and she brought him cream; and she brought it to him not in an ordinary pitcher, but in the most superb dish, or bowl, which she possessed. See at the end of chap. iv.

Verse 26. She smote off his head] The original does not warrant this translation; nor is it supported by fact. She smote his head, and transfixed him through the temples. It was his head that received the death wound, and the temples was the place, where this wound was inflicted. The manner in which Jael despatched Sisera seems to have been this: 1. Observing him to be in a profound sleep, she took a workman's hammer, probably a joiner's mallet, and with one blow on the head deprived him of all sense. 2. She then took a tent nail, and drove it through his temples, and thus pinned him to the earth; which she could not have done had she not previously stunned him with the blow on the head. Thus she first smote his head, and secondly pierced his temples.

Verse 27. At her feet he bowed] בן רגליה bein raglayyah, "between her feet." After having stunned him she probably sat down, for the greater convenience of driving the nail through his temples.

He bowed—he fell] He probably made some struggles after he received the blow on the head, but could not recover his feet.

Verse 28. Cried through the lattice] This is very natural: in the women's apartments in the East the windows are *lattice*d, to prevent them from sending or receiving letters, &c. The latticeing is the effect of the jealousy, which universally prevails in those countries.

Why is his chariot so long in coming?] Literally, Why is his chariot ashamed to come?

Dr. Lowth has very justly observed, that this is a striking image of maternal solicitude, and of a mind divided between hope and fear.

"The mother of Sisera looked out at a window:

ⁱ She cried through the lattice,
Why is his chariot so long in coming?
Why tarry the wheels of his chariot?

"Immediately, impatient of delay, she prevents the comforts of her companions; elate in mind, and bursting forth into female levity and jacta-tion, impotent to hope for any thing, and drunk with her good fortune,

Yea, she immediately returned answer to herself;
Have they not sped? have they not divided the spoil?

"We see how consonant to the person speaking is every idea, every word. She dwells not upon the slaughter of the enemies, the number of the captives, the valour and great exploits of the victor: but, (burning with the female love of spoils,) on those things rather which captivate the light mind of the vainest woman; damsels, gold, garments. Nor does she dwell upon them only; but she repeats, she accumulates, she augments, every thing. She seems, as it were, to handle the spoils, dwelling as she does on every particular.

A damsel, yea, two damsels to every man;
To Sisera, a prey of divers colours;
A prey of divers colours of needlework,
Finely colour'd of needlework on both sides,
A spoil for adorning the neck.

"To enhance the beauty of this passage, there is, in the poetic conformation of the sentences, an admirable neatness in the diction, great force, splendour, accuracy; in the very redundancy of the repetitions the utmost brevity; and lastly, the most striking disappointment of the woman's hope, tacitly insinuated by that sudden and unexpected apostrophe, is expressed more fully and strongly by this silence than could have been painted by any colouring of words." See Dr. Lowth's 13th Prelection, Prov. iv. 18, 19.

"We cannot do better," says Dr. Dodd, "than to conclude this chapter with the words of Pelicanus: 'Let a Homer, or a Virgil, go and compare his poetry, if he be able, with the song of this woman; and, if there be any one who excels in eloquence and learning, let him celebrate the praises and learning of this panguirye, more copiously than I am able.'"

For other matters relative to this song I must refer to the two translations which immediately follow; and their authors' notes on them.

Dr. Kennicott says, "This celebrated song of triumph is most deservedly admired; though some parts of it are at present very obscure, and others unintelligible in our English version. Besides particular difficulties, there is a general one that pervades the whole; arising, as I humbly apprehend, from its being considered as entirely the song of Deborah. It is certain, though very little attended to, that it is said to have been sung by Deborah and BY BARAK. It is also certain, there are in it parts which Deborah could not sing, as well as parts which Barak could not sing; and therefore it seems necessary, in order to form a better judgment of this song, that some probable distribution should be made of it; while those words which seem most likely to have been sung by either party, should be assigned to their proper name; either to that of Deborah the prophetess, or to that of Barak the captain.

"For example: Deborah could not call upon Deborah, exhorting herself to awake, &c. as in ver. 12. neither could Barak exhort himself to arise, &c. in the same verse. Again, Barak could not sing Till I, Deborah, arose a mother in Israel, ver. 7. nor could Deborah sing about a damsel or two for every soldier, ver. 30. though indeed as to this last article the words are probably misunderstood. There are other parts also which seem to require a different rendering: ver. 2. for the avenging of Israel, where the address is probably to those who took the lead in Israel on this great occasion; for the address in the next words is to those among the people who were volunteers; as, again, ver. 9. Verses 11, 13, 14, and 15. have many great difficulties. It seems impossible that (ver. 23.) any person should be cursed for not coming to the help of JEHOVAH; to the help of JEHOVAH against the mighty. Nor does it seem more probable that Jael should (in a sacred song) be styled blessed above women, for the death of Sisera. Ver. 25. mentions butter; of which nothing is said in the history, in chap. iv. 19. nor does the history say that Jael smote off Sisera's head with a hammer; or indeed, that she smote it off at all; as here, ver. 26. Lastly, as to ver. 30. there being no authority for rendering the words a damsel, or two damsels, and the words in Hebrew being very much like two other words in this same verse, which make excellent sense here, it seems highly probable that they were originally the same. And at the end of this verse, which contains an excellent compliment paid to the needlework of the daughters of Israel, and which is here put with great art in the mouth of Sisera's mother; the true sense seems to be, the hopes she had of some very rich prize to adorn HER OWN NECK." Kennicott's Remarks, page 94.

Dr. Hales observes, "That the design of this beautiful ode, which breathes the characteristic softness and luxuriance of female composition, seems to be twofold, religious and political: first, to thank God for the recent victory and deliverance of Israel from Canaanitish bondage and oppression; and next to celebrate the zeal and alacrity with which some of the rulers volunteered their services against the common enemy; and to censure the lukewarmness and apathy of others who staid at home, and thus betrayed the public cause: and, by this contrast and exposure, to heal those fatal divisions among the tribes, so injurious to the commonwealth. The first verse, as a title, briefly recites the design or subject of the poem, which consists of eight stanzas.

"The first opens with a devout thanksgiving, to which she calls the attention of all, friends and foes.

"The second describes, in the sublime imagery of Moses, the magnificent scenes at mount Sinai, Seir, &c. in the deserts of Arabia; while they were led by the divine power and presence from Egypt to Canaan.

"The third, states their offending afterward, by their apostacies in serving new gods, as foretold by Moses, Deut. xxxii. 16, 17: and their consequent oppression by their enemies; the insecurity of travelling, and desertion of the villages, during the twenty years that intervened from the death of Shamgar till Jael's exploit, and till Deborah became judge. By this time they were disarmed by the Philistines and Canaanites, and scarcely a sword or a spear to be seen in Israel. This policy was adopted by the Philistines in Saul's time, 1 Sam. xiii. 19. and was probably introduced before, when Shamgar, for want of other weapons, had recourse to an ox-goad, which was only left with them for the purpose of agriculture, 1 Sam. xiii. 21.

"The fourth, contrasts their present happy state of security from the incursions and depredations of their foes, especially at the watering-places, which were most exposed to attacks; owing to the divine protection which crowned the victory, the zeal, and exertions, of 'a remnant of the people,' or a part of the tribes, against the enemy, under her conduct; these were the midland tribes of Ephraim, Manasseh, and Benjamin; including, perhaps, Judah and Simeon, which bordered on Amalek southward, and Issachar, Zebulun, and Naphtali, northward.

"The fifth, censures the recreant tribes Reuben and Gad, beyond Jordan eastward; and Dan and Asher, on the Mediterranean sea westward; who deserted the common cause in consequence of their divisions, and their paltry attachment to their own concerns.

"The sixth, records the miraculous defeat of the confederate kings of Canaan, who were swept away by the torrents issuing from the different springs of the river Kishon, swollen by uncommon rains. Meroz was probably a place in the neighbourhood.

"The seventh, contains a panegyric on Jael, who is here 'blessed above women,' for attempting an exploit above her sex to perform; and a picturesque description of her giving Sisera buttermilk to drink, which is considered as a great treat at present among the Arabs. Then follows a minute and circumstantial description of her mode of slaying him.

"The eighth, affords an admirable representation of the impatience of the mother of Sisera, at his delay in returning; her sanguine anticipation of his success; in which she dwells, not upon the greatness of his exploits, or the slaughter of his enemies, but upon the circumstances most likely to engage a light female mind, such as captive damsels and embroidered garments, or the spoils of victory, which she repeats and exemplifies with much grace and elegance.

"The unexpected and abrupt apostrophe which concludes the poem, So perish all thine enemies, O LORD! tacitly insinuates the utter disappointment of their vain hopes of conquest and spoil more fully and forcibly than any express declaration in words; while it marks the author's piety, and sole reliance upon the divine protection of his people, and the glorious prospect of a future and greater deliverance perhaps by the Sun of Righteousness." New Analysis of Chronology, page 304.

Dr. Kennicott's Version of the song:

1. Then sang Deborah, and Barak the son of Abinoam, saying:
Deb. For the leaders who took the lead in Israel.
Bar. For the people who offered themselves willingly.
Both. Bless ye Jehovah!
3. Deb. Hear, O ye kings!
Bar. Give ear, O ye princes!
Deb. I unto Jehovah will sing.
Bar. I will answer in song to Jehovah;
Both. The God of Israel!
4. Deb. O Jehovah, at thy going forth from Seir,
At thy marching from the land of Edom,
Bar. The earth trembled, even the heavens poured down;
The thick clouds poured down the waters.
5. Deb. The mountains melted at Jehovah's presence.
Bar. Sinai itself, at the presence of Jehovah,
Both. The God of Israel.
6. Deb. In the days of Shamgar, the son of Anath,
In the days of Jael, the highways were deserted.
Bar. For they who had gone by strait paths,
Passed by ways that were very crooked.
7. Deserted were the villages in Israel.
Deb. They were deserted till I, Deborah, arose;
Till I arose a mother in Israel.
8. They chose new gods!
Bar. Then when war was at the gates
Was there a shield seen, or a spear,
Among forty thousand in Israel?
9. Deb. My heart is toward the rulers of Israel;
Bar. Ye who offered yourselves willingly among the people.
Both. Bless ye Jehovah!
10. Deb. Ye who ride upon white asses;
Ye who sit upon the seat of judgment.

11. Bar. And ye who travel upon the roads,
Talk of him with the voice of praise.
Deb. Let them who meet armed at the watering-places
There show the righteous acts of Jehovah, Bar. And the righteousness of the villages of Israel
Then shall they go down to the gates;
Both. The people of Jehovah!
12. Bar. Awake, awake, Deborah!
Awake, awake, lead on the song.
Deb. Arise, Barak; and lead thy captivity captive, Barak, thou son of Abinoam.
13. Bar. Then, when the remainder descended after their chiefs, Jehovah's people descended after me,
Against the mighty.

14. Deb. Out of Ephraim was their beginning at Mount Amalek;
And after thee was Benjamin, against the nations.
Bar. From Machir came masters in the art of war;
And from Zebulun, those who threw the dart.

15. Deb. The princes in Issachar were numbered.
Together with Deborah and Barak.
Bar. And Issachar was the guard of Barak,
Into the valley sent close at his feet.
Deb. At the divisions of Reuben, Great were the impressions of heart.

16. Bar. Why satest thou among the rivelets?
What, to hear the beatings of the flocks?
Deb. For the divisions of Reuben, Great were the searchings of heart.

17. Bar. Gad dwelt quietly beyond Jordan;
And Dan, why abode he in ships?
Deb. Asher continued in the harbour of the seas,
And remained among his craggy places.

18. Bar. Zebulun were the people, and Naphtali;
Deb. Who exposed their lives unto the death.

- Both.* On the heights of the field.
19. Deb. The kings came, they fought;
Then fought the kings of Canaan;
Bar. At Taanac, above the waters of Megiddo:
The plunder of riches they did not receive.

20. Deb. From heaven did they fight;
The stars, from their lofty stations, Fought against Sisera.

21. Bar. The river Kishon swept them away,
The river intercepting them, the river Kishon:
It was there my soul trod down strength.

22. Deb. It was then the hoofs of the cavalry were battered,
By the scamperings, the scamperings of its strong steeds

23. Bar. Curse ye the land of Meroz,
Said the messenger of Jehovah:

- Deb.* Curse ye heavily its inhabitants,
Because they came not for help.

Both. Jehovah was for help!
Jehovah against the Mighty!

Dr. Hales' Version of the song:

1. Then sang Deborah, and Barak son of Abinoam, on (the victory of) that day, on the avenging of wrongs in Israel;
2. On the volunteering of the people;
Saying, Bless ye the Lord!

3. Harken, O kings, (of Canaan,)
Give ear, O princes: (of the land:)
I, even I, will sing unto the Lord;
I will shout to the Lord, the God of Israel.

4. O Lord, on thy going forth from Seir,
On thy marching from the land of Edom,
The earth quak'd, the heavens dropt,
The clouds, I say, dropt water.

5. The mountains melted away
From the presence of the Lord;
Even Sinai himself, from the presence Of the Lord, the God of Israel.

6. From the days of Shamgar, son of Anath,
To the days of Jael, (through fear of the enemy,)
The highways were unfrequented,
And travellers walked through by-paths.

7. The villages were deserted;
They were deserted till I, Deborah, arose;
Till I arose (to be) a mother in Israel.

8. (The Israelites) had chosen new gods,
Therefore was war in their gates;
Was there a shield or a spear to be seen
Among forty thousand in Israel?

9. My heart is attached to the senators of Israel,
Who volunteered among the people.

10. Bless ye the Lord!
Ye that ride upon white asses,
Ye that sit in (the gates of) judgment
Extol (him,) ye travellers.

11. (Now freed) from the noise of archers
At the watering-places,
Hors shall they rehearse the righteousness
Of the Lord; his righteousness
Toward the villages of Israel:
Now shall the people of the Lord
Go down to the gates of judgment in safety.

12. Awake, awake, Deborah;
Awake, awake, utter a song (of praise.)
Arise now, Barak; lead thy captivity captive, Thou son of Abinoam.

13. For (God) made a remnant of the people Triumph over the nobles of the enemy;
The Lord made me triumph over the mighty.

14. From Ephraim unto Amalek was their root:
Next to thee (Ephraim) was Benjamin, among thy people;
From Machir, (Manasseh) came down the senators;
And from Zebulun, they that write with the pen of the scribe.

15. The princes in Issachar (were) with Deborah;
Even Issachar, as well as Barak (Naphtali.)
He was set on foot into the valley;
For the divisions of Reuben
(I feel) great griefs of heart.

16. Why abidest thou among the sheepfolds?
To hear the beatings of the flocks?
For the divisions of Reuben
(I feel) great griefs of heart.

17. (Why) abode Gilead (Gad) beyond Jordan;
And Dan remain in his ships?
(Why) did Asher sit in his seaports,
And continue in his creeks?

18. (While) the people of Zebulun hazarded their lives unto death,
And of Naphtali, in the heights of the field.

19. The kings came, they fought;
The kings of Canaan fought in Taanah,
Near the waters of Megiddo;
But they gained no lucre (thereby.)

20. 'The stars of heaven fought in their courses;
They fought against Sisera.

21. The torrents of Kishon swept them away;
The torrent of Kedemuntim,
The torrent of Kishon. O my soul,
Thou hast trodden down strength!

22. Then were the horsehoofs broken by the galloppings;
The galloppings of their great men.

23. Curse ye Meroz, saith the angel of the Lord;
Bitterly curse her inhabitants,
Because they came not to the aid of the Lord;
To the aid of the Lord among the mighty.

Other attempts have been made to do justice to this very sublime song; and much yet remains to be done. The best means of ascertaining the sense and import of the various images and allusions contained in it, is, in my opinion, the following:—1. Take the Hebrew text, as it stands printed in the hemistich form, in Kennicott's Hebrew Bible. 2. Collate this text with the Septuagint, Chaldee, Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic versions, and the various readings in Kennicott and De Rossi. 3. Consult the writers in the Critici Sacri. And, 4. Carefully attend to the allusions made to Asiatic customs. I would gladly save my readers all this trouble, but it would extend the commentary beyond the size of the whole book, which would not comport with the brevity which I study.

From this song, as well as from that of Moses, Deut. xxxii. we see that the first, as also the best poets of antiquity, were found among the Hebrews; and that the art of poetry was highly cultivated among them many hundreds of years before Greece, or any other country of the world, could boast of ode, or epic, or any kind of poetic composition. The idolizers of Greece and Italy should not forget this; to Hebrew models both Greeks and Romans owe much of their perfection. Why are not these more studied? Why do we not go to the "fountain head?" To all the searchers after the venerable remains of antiquity, especially to poets, I would address the words of the old prophet:

CHAPTER VI.

The Israelites again do evil, and are delivered into the hands of the Midianites: by whom they are oppressed seven years, 1-2. Different tribes spoil their harvests, and take away their cattle, 3-5. They cry unto the Lord, and he sends them a prophet to reprehend and instruct them, 6-10. An angel appears unto Gideon, and gives him commission to deliver Israel; and works several miracles, to prove that he is divinely appointed to this work, 11-23. Gideon builds an altar to the Lord, under the name of Jehovah-Shalom; and throws down the altar of Baal, 24-27. His townsmen conspire against him; he expostulates with them, and they are pacified, 28-32. The Midianites and Amalekites gather together against Israel: Gideon summons Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali, who join his standard, 33-35. The miracle of the fleece of wool, 36-40.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

Verse 1. Delivered them into the hand of Midian] The Midianites were among the most ancient and inveterate of the enemies of Israel. They joined with the Moabites to seduce them to idolatry, and were nearly extirpated by them. Num. xxxi. The Midianites dwelt on the eastern borders of the Dead sea; and their capital was Arnon.

Verse 2. Made them the dens which are in the mountains] Nothing can give a more distressing description of the state of the Israelites than what is here related. They durst not reside in the plain country, but were obliged to betake

5 For they came up with their cattle and their tents, and they came as grasshoppers for multitude; for both they and their camels were without number: and they entered into the land to destroy it.

6 And Israel was greatly impoverished because of the Midianites; and the children of Israel cried unto the LORD.

themselves to dens and caves of the mountains, and live like wild beasts; and were hunted like them by their adversaries.

Verse 4. Encamped against them] Wandering hordes of Midianites, Amalekites, and Ishmaelites, came, in the times of harvest and autumn, and carried away their crops, their fruit, and their cattle. And they appear to have come early, encamped in the plain, and watched the crops till they were ready to be carried off.

Till thou come unto Gaza] That is, the whole breadth of the land, from Jordan to the coast of the Mediterranean sea. Thus the whole land was ravaged, and the inhabitants deprived of the necessities of life.

Verse 5. They came up with their cattle and their tents] All this proves that they were different tribes of wanderers, who had no fixed residence; but, like their descendants, the Bedouins, or wandering Arabs, removed from place to place to get prey for themselves, and forage for their cattle.

Verse 8. The LORD sent a prophet] The Jews say that this was Phineas; but it is more likely that it was some prophet or teacher raised up by the Lord, to warn and instruct them. Such were his witnesses; and they were raised up from time to time, to declare the counsel of God to his rebellious people.

Verse 11. There came an angel of the LORD] The prophet came to teach and exhort: the angel comes to confirm the words of the prophet; to call and commission him who was in-unto the children of Israel, which said unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, I brought you up from Egypt, and brought you forth out of the house of bondage;

9 And I delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all that oppressed you, and drove them out from before you, and gave you their land;

10 And I said unto you, I am the LORD your God; fear not the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but ye have not obeyed my voice.

11 ¶ And there came an angel of the LORD, and sat under an oak which was in Ophrah, that pertained unto Joash the Abiezrite: and his son Gideon threshed wheat by the winepress, to hide it from the Midianites.

12 And the angel of the LORD appeared unto him, and said unto him, The LORD is with thee, thou mighty man of valour.

tended to be their deliverer; and to work miracles, in order to inspire him with supernatural courage, and a confidence of success.

His son Gideon threshed wheat] This is not the only instance in which a man, taken from agricultural employments, was made general of an army, and the deliverer of his country. Shamgar was evidently a ploughman; and with his ox-goad he slew many Philistines, and became one of the deliverers of Israel. Cincinnatus was taken from the plough, and was made dictator and commander-in-chief of the Roman armies. There is a great similarity between his case and that of Gideon.

Threshed wheat by the wine-press] This was a place of privacy; he could not make a threshing-floor in open day, as the custom was, and bring either the wheel over the grain, or tread it out with the feet of the oxen, for fear of the Midianites, who were accustomed to come and take it away as soon as threshed. He got a few sheaves from the field, and brought them home to have them privately threshed for the support of the family. As there could be no vintage among the Israelites, in their present distressed circumstances, the wine-press would never be suspected by the Midianites to be the place of threshing corn.

Ophrah, or Ephra, was a city, or village rather, in the half-tribe of Manasseh, beyond Jordan.

Verse 12. The LORD is with thee] "The Word of the Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valour." Targum. It appears that Gideon had proved himself, on former occasions, 14 And the LORD looked upon him, and said, Go in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel from the hand of the Midianites: have not I sent thee?

15 And he said unto him, Oh my Lord, wherewith shall I save Israel? behold, my family is poor in Manasseh, and I am the least in my father's house.

to be a man of courage and personal prowess; and this would naturally excite the confidence of his countrymen. God chooses for his work those instruments which, in the course of his operations in nature and providence, he has qualified for his purpose. The instruments thus chosen are generally unlikely; but they will be ever found the best qualified for the divine employment.

Verse 13. And Gideon said unto him] This speech is remarkable for its energy and simplicity: it shows, indeed, a measure of despondency; but not more than the circumstances of the case justified.

Verse 14. Go in this thy might] What does the angel mean? He had just stated that Jehovah was with him; and he now says, Go in this thy might; i. e. in the might of Jehovah, who is with thee.

Verse 15. Wherewith shall I save Israel?] I have neither men nor money.

Behold, my family is poor in Manasseh] הנה אלפי behold, my thousand is impoverished. Tribes were anciently divided into tens, and fifties, and hundreds, and thousands: the thousands, therefore, marked grand divisions; and, consequently, numerous families: Gideon here intimates, that the families of which he made a part were very much diminished. But if we take אלפי alapey, for the contracted form of the plural, which is frequently, in Hebrew nouns, joined with a verb in the singular; then the translation will be, "the thousands in Manasseh are thinned;" i. e. this tribe is greatly reduced, and can do little against their enemies.

Verse 16. Thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man.] Thou shalt as surely conquer all their host, as if thou hadst but one man to contend with; or, thou shalt destroy them to a man.

Verse 17. Show me a sign] Work a miracle, that I may know that thou hast wisdom and power sufficient to authorize and qualify me for the work.

^b Surely I will be with thee, and thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man.

17 And he said unto him, If now I have found grace in thy sight then show me a sign that thou talkest with me.

18 ^d Depart not hence, I pray thee, until I come unto thee, and bring forth my present, and set it before thee. And he said, I will tarry until thou come again.

19 ^f And Gideon went in, and made ready ^g a kid, and unleavened cakes of an ephah of flour: the flesh he put in a basket, and he put the broth in a pot, and brought it out unto him under the oak, and presented it.

Verse 18. And bring forth my present] My mincha; generally an offering of bread, wine, oil, flour, and such like. It seems from this, that Gideon supposed the person to whom he spoke to be a divine person. Nevertheless, what he prepared and brought out, appears to be intended simply as an entertainment to refresh a respectable stranger.

Verse 19. Made ready a kid—the flesh he put in a basket, and he put the broth in a pot] The manner in which the Arabs entertain strangers will cast light on this verse. Dr. Shaw observes, "Besides a bowl of milk, and a basket of figs, raisins, or dates, which, upon our arrival, were presented to us, to stay our appetite, the master of the tent fetched us from his flock, according to the number of our company, a kid or a goat, a lamb or a sheep; half of which was immediately seethed by his wife, and served up with cucasoe: the rest was made kab-ab, i. e. cut to pieces and roasted, which we reserved for our breakfast or dinner next day." May we not suppose, says Mr. Harmer, that Gideon, presenting some slight refreshment to the supposed prophet, according to the present Arab mode, desired him to stay till he could provide something more substantial; that he immediately killed a kid, seethed part of it, and when ready brought out the stewed meat in a pot, with unleavened cakes of bread, which he had baked; and the other part, the kab-ab, in a basket, for him to carry with him, for some after repast in his journey. See Shaw's and Pococke's Travels; and Harmer's Observations.

Brought it out unto him under the oak] Probably where he had a tent, which, with the shade of the oak, sheltered them from the heat of the sun, and yet afforded the privilege of the refreshing breeze. Under a shade, in the open air, the Arabs to the present day, are accustomed to receive their guests.

intended to make the flesh and bread an offering to God, and the broth a libation.

Verse 21. The angel—put forth the end of the staff] He appeared like a traveller with a staff in his hand: this he put forth; and, having touched the flesh, fire rose out of the rock and consumed it. Here was the most evident proof of supernatural agency.

Then the angel—departed out of his sight.] Though the angel vanished out of his sight, yet God continued to converse with him, either by secret inspiration in his own heart, or by an audible voice.

Verse 22. Alas, O Lord God! for because I have seen] This is an elliptical sentence, a natural expression of the distressed state of Gideon's mind: as if he had said, Have mercy on me, O Lord God! else I shall die; because I have seen an angel of Jehovah face to face. We have frequently seen that it was a prevalent sentiment, as well before as under the law, that if any man saw God, or his representative angel, he must surely die. On this account Gideon is alarmed, and prays for his life. This notion prevailed among the heathens; and we find an instance of it in the fable of Jupiter and Semele. She wished to see his glory; she saw it, and was struck dead by the effulgence. See the notes on Exod. xxxiii. 20. We find that a similar opinion prevailed very anciently among the Greeks: In the hymn of Callimachus, Εἰς Δευτέρα τῆς Παλλάδος, ver. 100. are these words:

Κρονίος δ' ὅτε λεγόντι νομοί,
Ὅς με τιν' ἀθανάτων, ὅα μὴ θεὸς αὐτὸς ἴληται
Ἀθρήσῃ, μισθὸν τούτων ἰδεῖν μεγάλην.

"The laws of Saturn enact, that if any man see any of the immortal gods, unless that god himself shall choose it, he shall pay dearly for that sight."

Verse 23. Fear not: thou shalt not die] Here the discovery is made by God himself: Gideon is not curiously prying into forbidden mysteries; therefore, he shall not die.

unto the LORD, and called it ^o Jehovah-shalom: unto this day it is yet ^p in Ophrah of the Abi-ezrites.

Verse 24. Gideon built an altar—and called it Jehovah-shalom] The words יהוה שלום Yehovah Shalom, signify The Lord is my Peace; or, The Peace of Jehovah: and this name he gave the altar, in reference to what God had said, ver. 23. Peace be unto thee, שלום shalom leka: "peace to thee;" which implied not only a wish, but a prediction of the prosperous issue of the enterprise in which he was about to engage. It is likely that this is the altar which is mentioned in ver. 26. and is spoken of here merely by anticipation.

Verse 25. Take thy father's young bullock, even the second bullock] There is some difficulty in this verse; for, according to the Hebrew text, two bullocks are mentioned here; but there is only one mentioned in ver. 26 and 28. But what was this second bullock? Some think, that it was a bullock that was fattened in order to be offered in sacrifice to Baal. This is very probable; as the second bullock is so particularly distinguished from another which belonged to Gideon's father. As the altar was built upon the ground of Joash, yet appears to have been public property, (see ver. 29 and 30.) so this second ox was probably reared and fattened at the expense of the men of that village; else why should they so particularly resent its being offered to Jehovah?

Verse 26. With the wood of the grove] It is probable that אשרה Asherah here signifies Astarte; and that there was a wooden image of this goddess on the altar of Baal. Baal-peor was the same as Priapus, Astarte as Venus; these two impure idols were proper enough for the same altar. In early times, and among rude people, the images of the gods were made of wood. This is the case still with the inhabitants of the South Sea Islands, with the Indians of America, and with the inhabitants of Ceylon: many of the images of Budhoo are of wood. The Scandinavians also had wooden gods.

Verse 27. He feared his father's household] So it appears that his father was an idolater:

30 Then the men of the city said unto Joash, Bring out thy son, that he may die: because he hath cast down the altar of Baal, and because he hath cut down the grove that was by it.

but as Gideon had ten men of his own servants, whom he could trust in this matter, it is probable that he had preserved the true faith, and had not bowed his knee to the image of Baal.

Verse 28. The second bullock was offered] It appears that the second bullock was offered, because it was just seven years old, ver. 25. being calved about the time that the Midianitish oppression began; and it was now to be slain, to indicate that their slavery should end with its life. The young bullock, ver. 25. is supposed to have been offered for a peace-offering; the bullock of seven years old, for a burnt-offering.

Verse 29. Gideon the son of Joash hath done this thing.] They fixed on him the more readily, because they knew he had not joined with them in their idolatrous worship.

Verse 30. The men of the city said] They all felt an interest in the continuance of rites, in which they had often many sensual gratifications. Baal and Ashtaroth would have more worshippers than the true God; because their rites were more adapted to the fallen nature of man.

Verse 31. Will ye plead for Baal?] The words are very emphatic: "Will ye plead in earnest עֲרֹךְ for Baal? Will ye מִשְׁתַּחֲוִי really save him? If he be God, אֱלֹהִים Elohim, let him contend for himself, seeing his altar is thrown down." The paragogic letters in the words plead and save greatly increase the sense. Joash could not slay his son; but he was satisfied he had insulted Baal: if Baal were the true God, he would avenge his own injured honour. This was a sentiment among the heathens. Thus Tacitus, lib. 1. c. 73. A. U. C. 768. mentioning the letter of Tiberius to the consuls in behalf of Cassius and Rubrius, two Roman knights, one of whom was accused of having sold a statue of Augustus in the auction of his gardens; and the other of having sworn falsely by the name of Augustus, who had been deified by the senate: among other things he said, 31 And Joash said unto all that stood against him, Will ye plead for Baal? will ye save him? he that will plead for him, let him be put to death while it is yet morning: if he be a god, let him plead for himself, because one hath cast down his altar.

32 Therefore on that day he called him Jerubbaal, saying, Let Baal plead against him, because he hath thrown down his altar.

33 ¶ Then all the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and the children of the East, were gathered together, and went over, and pitched in the valley of Jezreel.

34 But the Spirit of the Lord came upon Gideon, and he blew a trumpet; and Abi-ezer was gathered after him.

Non ideo decretum patri suo culum, ut in perniciem civium is honor verteretur. Nec contra religiones fieri quod effigies ejus, ut alia nomen simulachra venditionibus hortorum, et domuum accedant. Jusjurandum perinde estimandum quam si Jovem sefellisset: deorum injuriæ diis curæ. "That divine honours were not decreed to his father (Augustus) to lay snares for the citizens: and if his statue, in common with the images of the gods in general, was put up to sale with the houses and gardens, it could not be considered an injury to religion. That any false oath must be considered as an attempt to deceive Jupiter himself; but the gods themselves must take cognizance of the injuries done unto them." Livy has a similar sentiment, Hist. lib. x. c. 6. where, speaking of some attempts made to increase the number of the augurs out of the commons, with which the senators were displeased: but, says he, Simulabant ad deos id magis, quam ad se pertinere; ipsos visuros, ne sacra sua polluantur. "They pretended that these things belonged more to the gods than themselves: and that they should take care that their sacred rites were not polluted."

Verse 32. He called him Jerubbaal] Let Baal contend; changed, 2 Samuel xi. 31. into Jerubbesheth, he shall contend against confusion or shame; thus changing Baal, lord, into Bosheth, confusion or ignominy. Some think that Jerubbaal was the same with Jerombalus, who, according to Sanchoniatho and Porphyry, was a priest of Jeco. But the history of Sanchoniatho is probably a forgery of Porphyry himself, and worthy of no credit.

Verse 33. Then all the Midianites] Hearing of what Gideon had done, and apprehending that this might be a forerunner of attempts to regain their liberty; they formed a general association against Israel.

Verse 34. The Spirit of the Lord came upon Gideon] He was endued with preternatural courage and wisdom.

Verse 36: If thou wilt save Israel] Gideon was very bold; and God was very condescending. But probably the request itself was suggested by the Divine Spirit.

On the miracle of the fleece, dew, and dry ground, Origen, in his eighth homily on the Book of Judges, has many curious and interesting thoughts. I shall insert the substance of the whole.

The fleece is the Jewish nation. The fleece covered with dew, while all around is dry; the Jewish nation favoured with the law and the prophets. The fleece dry; the Jewish nation cast off for rejecting the Gospel. All around watered; the Gospel preached to the Gentiles, and they converted to God. The fleece on the threshing floor; the Jewish people in the land of Judea, winnowed, purged, and fanned by the Gospel. The dew wrung out into the bowl; the doctrines of Christianity, extracted from the 38 And it was so: for he rose up early on the morrow, and thrust the fleece together, and wringed the dew out of the fleece, a bowl full of water.

39 And Gideon said unto God, ^e Let not thine anger be hot against me, and I will speak but this once: let me prove, I pray thee, but this once with the fleece; let it now be dry only upon the fleece, and upon all the ground let there be dew.

Jewish writings, shadowed forth by Christ's pouring water into a basin, and washing the disciples' feet. The pious father concludes that he has now wrung this water out of the fleece of the Book of Judges, as he hopes by and by to do out of the fleece of the Book of Kings, and out of the fleece of the Book of Isaiah or Jeremiah; and he has received it into the basin of his heart, and there conceived its true sense; and is desirous to wash the feet of his brethren, that they may be able to walk in the way of the preparation of the Gospel of peace. ORIGEN, Op. vol. ii. pag. 475. edit. Benedict.

All this, to some, will doubtless appear trifling; but it is not too much to say, that scarcely any pious mind can consider the homily of this excellent man without drinking into a measure of the same spirit; so much sincerity, deep piety, and unction, appear throughout the whole.

CHAPTER VII.

The Lord commands Gideon to make a selection of a small number of his men to go against the Midianites. Three hundred only are selected; and into the hands of these God promises to deliver the whole Midianitish host, 1—8. Gideon is directed to go down unto the host in the night, that he may be encouraged on hearing what they say, 9—12. He obeys, and hears a Midianite tell a remarkable dream unto his fellow, which predicted the success of his attack, 13—15. He takes encouragement, divides his men into three companies, gives a trumpet, with a lighted lamp concealed in a pitcher, with directions how to use them, 16—18. They come to the Midianitish camp at night, when all suddenly blowing their trumpets, and exposing their lamps, the Midianites are thrown into confusion, fly, and are stopped by the Ephraimites at the passage of Jordan, and slain, 19—24. Oreb and Zeeb, two Midianitish princes, are slain, 25.

Verse 2. The people that are with thee are too many] Had he led up a numerous host against his enemies, the excellence of the power by which they were discomfited, might have appeared to be of man and not of God. By the manner in which this whole transaction was conducted, both the Israelites and Midianites must see that the thing was of God. This would

4 And the LORD said unto Gideon,
The people are yet too many; bring inspire the Israelites with confidence, and the Midianites with fear.

Verse 3. Whosoever is fearful and afraid, let him return—from mount Gilead.] Gideon was certainly not at mount Gilead at this time; but rather near mount Gilboa. Gilead was on the other side of Jordan: Calmet thinks there must either have been two Gileads, which does not, from the Scripture, appear to be the case;
or that the Hebrew text is here corrupted;
and that for Gilead we should read Gilboa.
This reading, though adopted by Houbigant, is not countenanced by any MS. nor by any of the versions.

Dr. Hales endeavours to reconcile the whole,
by the supposition that there were in Gideon's army many of the eastern Manassites, who came from mount Gilead; and that these were more probably afraid of their neighbours, the Midianites, than the western tribes were; and therefore, proposes to read the text thus: Whosoever from mount Gilead is fearful and afraid, let him return (home) and depart early. So there returned (home) twenty-two thousand of the people. Perhaps this is, on the whole, the best method of solving this difficulty.

There returned of the people twenty and two thousand] Gideon's army was at this time thirty-two thousand strong: and after the above address twenty-two thousand went away. How astonishing, that in thirty-two thousand there should be found not less than twenty-two thousand poltrons; who would neither fight for God nor their oppressed country! A state of slavery hand, and their trumpets: and he sent all the rest of Israel every man unto his men: and the host of Midian was beneath him in the valley.

debases the mind of man, and renders it incapable of being influenced by the pure principles of patriotism or religion. In behalf of the army of Gideon we may say, if the best appointed armies in Europe had the same address, bonâ fide, from their generals, as the Israelites had, at least an equal proportion would return home.

Verse 5. Every one that lappeth of the water —as a dog] The original word yalok, is precisely the sound which a dog makes when he is drinking.

Verse 6. The number of them that lapped] From this account it appears, that some of the people went down on their knees; and, putting their mouths to the water, sucked up what they needed; the others stooped down; and taking up water in the hollow of their hands, applied it to their mouth.

Verse 8. So the people took victuals] The three hundred men that he reserved took the victuals necessary for the day's expenditure, while the others were dismissed to their tents and their houses as they thought proper.

Verse 9. I have delivered it into thine hand.] I have determined to do it; and it is as sure as if it were done.

Verse 11. Unto the outside of the armed men] No doubt the vast multitudes of Midianites, &c. which came merely for plunder, were wholly unarmed; but they had a guard of armed men, as all the caravans have; and those guards were on the outside of the multitudes: it was to these that Gideon and his servant came.

12 And the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and ^b all the children of the East, lay along in the valley like grasshoppers for multitude; and their camels were without number, as the sand by the sea-side for multitude.

13 And when Gideon was come, behold, there was a man that told a dream unto his fellow, and said, Behold, I dreamed a dream, and lo, a cake of barley-bread tumbled into the host of Midian, and came unto a tent, and smote it that it fell, and overturned it, that the tent lay along.

14 And his fellow answered and said, This is nothing else save the sword of Gideon the son of Joash, a man of Israel: for into his hand hath God delivered Midian, and all the host.

15 And it was so, when Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and ⁱ the interpretation thereof, that he worshipped, and returned into the host of Israel, and said, Arise; for the ^k LORD hath delivered into your hand the host of Midian.

16 ¶ And he divided the three hun-

^k Chap. 7. 7.

Verse 13. Told a dream] Both the dream and the interpretation were inspired by God, for the purpose of increasing the confidence of Gideon, and appalling his enemies.

Verse 14. Into his hand hath God delivered Midian] This is a full proof that God had inspired both the dream and its interpretation.

Verse 16. He divided the three hundred men] Though the victory was to be from the Lord, yet he knew that he ought to use prudential means: and those which he employed on this occasion were the best calculated to answer the end. If he had not used these means, it is not likely that God would have delivered the Midianites into his hands. Sometimes, even in working a miracle, God will have natural means used: Go, dip thyself seven times in Jordan:—Go, wash in the pool of Siloam.

Verse 18. The sword of the Lord, and of Gideon] The word cherib, “sword,” is not found in this verse, though it is necessarily implied, and is found in ver. 20. But it is found in this place in the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic; and in eight of KenNICOT's and De Rossi's MSS. The reading appears to be genuine.

Verse 20. Blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers] How astonishing must the effect be (in a dark night) of the sudden glare of three hundred torches, darting their splendour in the same instant on the half-awakened eyes of the terrified Midianites; accompanied with the clangour of three hundred trumpets, alternately mingled with the thundering shout of חֲרִיב

dred men into three companies, and he put ^a a trumpet in every man's hand, with empty pitchers, and ^m lamps within the pitchers.

17 And he said unto them, Look on me, and do likewise: and, behold when I come to the outside of the camp, it shall be that as I do, so shall ye do.

18 When I blow with a trumpet, I and all that are with me, then blow ye the trumpets also on every side of all the camp, and say, The sword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

19 ¶ So Gideon, and the hundred men that were with him, came unto the outside of the camp in the beginning of the middle watch; and they had but newly set the watch: and ⁿ they blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers that were in their hands.

20 And the three companies blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers, and held the lamps in their left hands, and the trumpets in their right hands to blow withal: and ^o they cried, The sword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

Origen, in his ninth homily on this book, makes these three hundred men types of the preachers of the Gospel; their trumpets, of the preaching of Christ crucified; and their lights, or torches, of the holy conduct of righteous men. In some verses of an ancient author, attributed to Tertullian, and, written against the heretic Marcion, Gideon's three hundred men are represented as horsemen; and in this number he finds the mystery of the cross, because the Greek letter T tau, which is the numeral for 300, is itself the sign of the cross. The verses, which may be found in vol. v. of the Pisaurian Collection of the Latin heathen and Christian poets, Advers. Marcion, lib. 3. ver. 18. as being very curious, and not often to be met with, I shall here subjoin:

Gideon, keen in arms, was captain of the host, And acquired redemption for his people, but not by his own power.

Being strengthened in faith, his heart was influenced to ask a sign,

By which he might know whether or not he should be successful in battle.

A fleece was so placed by night, that it might be wet with dew;

And all the surrounding earth remain dry.

By this he was to learn that he should gain the victory over his enemies.

The sign was reversed, the fleece remaining dry while all the ground was moist;

And by this sign he was to know that he should slaughter those troops of robbers.

The people of Christ conquer without any military force; Three hundred horsemen, (for the Greek letter T tau, is the emblem of the number,)

Armed with torches, and blowing with trumpets.

The fleece of the sheep are the people sprung from the Messiah;

And the earth are the various nations dispersed over the world, It is the word which nourishes; but night is the image of death.

Tau is the sign of the cross, and the trumpets the emblems of the heralds of life,

And the burning torches in the pitchers the emblems of the Holy Spirit.

We see here what abstruse meanings a strong imagination, assisted by a little piety, may extract from what was never intended to be understood as a mystery.

Verse 21. They stood every man in his place] Each of the three companies kept its station, and continued to sound their trumpets. The Midianites seeing this, and believing that they were the trumpets of a numerous army which had then penetrated their camp, were thrown instantly into confusion; and supposing that their enemies were in the midst of them, they turned their swords against every man they met; while, at the same time, they endeavoured to escape for their lives. No stratagem was ever better imagined, none better executed, and none more completely successful.

Abel-meholah] This was the birth-place of the prophet Elisha, 1 Kings xix. 16. It was beyond Jordan, in the tribe of Manasseh, 1 Kings iv. 12. The Zartanah mentioned in this last quoted verse, was probably the same as Zererath. Its situation corresponds well with Abel-meholah.

Verse 23. The men of Israel gathered] It is very likely that these were some persons whom Gideon had sent home the day before, who now hearing that the Midianites were routed, went immediately in pursuit.

Verse 24. Take before them the waters unto Beth-barah] This is probably the same place as that mentioned, John i. 28. where the Hebrews forded Jordan under the direction of Joshua. To this place the Midianites directed their flight, that they might escape into their own country: and here, being met by the Ephraimites, they appear to have been totally overthrown, and their two generals taken.

Verse 25. They slew Oreb upon the rock Oreb] These two generals had taken shelter, one in the cavern of a rock, the other in the vat of a wine-press; both of which places were, from this circumstance, afterward called by their names.

Brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb to Gideon] OREB signifies a raven; and ZEEB, a wolf. In all ancient nations we find generals and princes taking their names from both birds and beasts: the Romans had their Gracchi, jackdaws; Corvini, crows; Aquilini, eagles, &c. We have the same in our Crows, Wolfs, Lions, Hawks, Bulls, Kids, &c. Among barbarous nations, the head of the conquered chief was often brought to the conqueror. Pompey's head was brought to Cæsar, Cicero's head to Mark Antony, the heads of Ahab's children to Jehu, &c. These barbarities are not often practised now, except among the Mohammedans, or the savages of Africa and America; and, for the credit of human nature, it is a pity that such barbaric atrocities had ever been committed.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Ephraimites are angry with Gideon, because he did not call them particularly to his assistance; he pacifies them, 1—3. Gideon and his three hundred men pass over Jordan, pursuing the Midianites; and, being faint, ask victuals from the princes of Succoth, but are refused, 4—7. They make the like application to the people of Penuel, and are also refused, 8, 9. Gideon defeats Zebah and Zalmunna, the two kings of Midian, and takes them prisoners, 10—12. He chastises the men of Succoth and Penuel, 13—17. He slays Zebah and Zalmunna, who had killed his brethren, 18—21. The Israelites offer him the kingdom, which he refuses, 22, 23. He requires from them the gold rings which they had taken from the Ishmaelites, and makes an ephod, which he sets up at Ophrah; and it became an instrument of idolatry, 24—27. The land enjoys peace forty years; Gideon dies, having seventy-one sons, 28—32. The Israelites fall into idolatry, and forget their obligations to Succoth's family, 33—35.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. The men of Ephraim said] This account is no doubt displaced; for what is mentioned here could not have taken place till the return of Gideon from the pursuit of the Midianites; for he was not yet passed Jordan, ver. 4. And it was when he was beyond that river that the Ephraimites brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb to him, chap. vii. 25.

Verse 2. Is not the gleaning, &c.] That is, the Ephraimites have performed more important services than Gideon and his men; for he supports the assertion, by observing that it was they who took the two Midianish generals, having discomfited their hosts at the passes of Jordan.

Verse 3. Then their anger was abated] A soft answer turneth away wrath. He might have said that he could place but little dependence on his brethren, when, through faint-heartedness, 22,000 left him at one time: but he passed this by, and took a more excellent way.

Verse 4. Faint, yet pursuing] The Vulgate paraphrases this, et præ lassitudine, fugientes persequi non poterant, “and through fatigue unable to pursue the fugitives.”

Verse 5. Give, I pray you, loaves of bread] As Gideon was engaged in the common cause of Israel, he had a right to expect succour from the people at large. His request to the men of Succoth and Penuel was both just and reasonable.

Verse 6. Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand] They feared to help Gideon, lest, if he should be overpowered, the Midianites would revenge it upon them; and they dared not trust God.

Verse 7. I will tear your flesh] What this punishment consisted in, I cannot say; it must mean a severe punishment; as if he had said, I will thrash your flesh with briers and thorns, as corn is thrashed out with thrashing instruments. Or, ye shall be trodden down under the feet of my victorious army; as the corn is trodden out with the feet of the ox.

Succoth was beyond Jordan, in the tribe of Gad. Penuel was also in the same tribe, and not far distant from Succoth.

Verse 9. I will break down this tower.] Probably they had not only denied him, but insultingly pointed to a tower in which their chief defence lay; and intimated to him that he might do his worst, for they could amply defend themselves.

Verse 10. Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor] If this were a place, it is nowhere else mentioned in Scripture. Some contend that קרקר karkor, signifies rest; and thus the Vulgate understood it; Zebah and Zalmunna requiescebant, rested, with all their army. And 11 And Gideon went up by the way of them that dwelt in tents, on the east of Nobah and Jogbehah, and smote the host: for the host was secure.

12 And when Zebah and Zalmunna fled, he pursued after them, and took the two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, and discomfited all the host.

13 ¶ And Gideon the son of Joash returned from battle before the sun was up, 14 And caught a young man of the men of Succoth, and inquired of him: and he described unto him the princes of Succoth, and the elders thereof, even threescore and seventeen men.

this seems the most likely; for it is said, verse 11. that Gideon smote the host, for the host was secure.

Verse 13. Returned from battle before the sun was up] This does not appear to be a proper translation of מלמעה העהה milmaaleh hechares. It should be rendered from the ascent of Chares: this is the reading of the Septuagint, the Syriac, and the Arabic.

Verse 14. He described unto him the princes of Succoth] The young man probably gave him the names of seventy persons, the chief men of Succoth, who were those who were most concerned in refusing him and his men the refreshment he requested.

Verse 16. He taught the men of Succoth.] Instead of הורה he taught, Houbigant reads הורה he tore; and this is not only agreeable to what Gideon had threatened, ver. 7. but is supported by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic. The Hebrew text might have been easily corrupted in this place by the change of ש shin into פ ain; letters very similar to each other.

Verse 18. What manner of men were they whom ye slew at Tabor?] We have no antecedent to this question; and are obliged to conjecture one: it seems as if Zebah and Zalmunna had massacred the family of Gideon, while he was absent on this expedition. Gideon had heard some confused account of it, and now questions them concerning the fact. They boldly acknowledge it, and describe the persons whom they slew, by which he found they were his own brethren. This determines him to avenge their death, by slaying the Midianitish kings, whom he otherwise was inclined to save. He might have heard that his brethren had been taken prisoners, and might have hoped to have exchanged them for the kings now in his hand;

15 And he came unto the men of Succoth, and said, Behold Zebah and Zalmunna, with whom ye did upbraid me, saying, Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we should give bread unto thy men that are weary?

16 And he took the elders of the city, and thorns of the wilderness, and briers, and with them he taught the men of Succoth.

17 And he beat down the tower of Penueel, and slew the men of the city.

18 ¶ Then said he unto Zebah and Zalmunna, What manner of men were they whom ye slew at Tabor? And they answered, As thou art, so were they; each one resembled the children of a king.

19 And he said, They were my brethren, even the sons of my mother: as the Lord liveth, if ye had saved them but when he found they had been all slain, he decrees the death of their murderers. There is something in this account similar to that in the 12th Æneis of Virgil—When Turnus was overthrown, and supplicates for his life, and Æneas was inclined to spare him; he saw the belt of his friend Pallas, whom Turnus had slain, and which he now wore as a trophy: this immediately determined the Trojan to sacrifice the life of Turnus to the manes of his friend. The story is well told:—

Stetit acer in armis
Æneas, volvens oculos, dextramque repressit.
Et jam jamque magis cunctantem flectere sermo
Ceperat: infelix humero cum apparuit ingens
Balleus, et notis fulserant cingula bullis
Pallantis pueri; victum quem vulnere Turnus Straverat, atque humeris inimicum insigne gerebat.
Ille oculis postquam savi monumenta doloris, Eruisvasque hausit: furis accensus et ira Terribilis: Tunc hinc spoliis indute meorum Eripiare mihi?—Pallas, te hoc vulnere, Pallas Immolat: et pænam scelerato ex sanguine sumit.
Hoc dicens, ferum adverso sub pectore condit Feroxidus:—
Virg. Æn. xii. ver. 938.

“In deep suspense the Trojan seem’d to stand,
And just prepar’d to strike, repress’d his hand.
He roll’d his eyes, and every moment felt
His manly soul with more compassion melt.
When, casting down a casual glance, he spied
The golden belt that glitter’d on his side;
The fatal spoils which haughty Turnus tore
From dying Pallas, and in triumph wore.
Then rous’d anew to wrath, he loudly cries, (Flames, while he spoke, came flashing from his eyes,) Traitor! dost thou! dost thou to grace pretend,
Clad, as thou art, in trophies of my friend?
To his sad soul a grateful off’ring go;
’Tis Pallas, Pallas gives this deadly blow.
He rais’d his arm aloft; and, at the word,
Deep in his bosom drove the shining sword.”

Dryden.

The same principle impels Gideon to slay Zebah and Zalmunna which induced Æneas to kill Turnus: and perhaps the ornaments which he took from their camels’ necks, vers.

alive, I would not slay you. 20 And he said unto Jether his first-born, Up, and slay them. But the youth drew not his sword; for he feared, because he was yet a youth.

21 Then Zebah and Zalmunna said, Rise thou, and fall upon us: for as the man is, so is his strength. And Gideon arose, and ^eslew Zebah and Zalmunna, and took away the ^fornaments that were on their camels' necks.

Verse 20. He said unto Jether his first-born] By the ancient laws of war, prisoners taken in war might be either slain, sold, or kept for slaves. To put a captive enemy to death no executioner was required. Gideon slays Zebah and Zalmunna with his own hand. So Samuel is said to have hewn Agag in pieces, 1 Sam. xv. 32. Beniah slew Joab, 1 Kings ii. 25. Saul orders his guards to slay the priests who had contributed to the escape of David, 1 Sam. xxiii. 17.; and David caused one of his attendants to slay the Amalekite who pretended to have slain Saul, 2 Sam. i. 15.

Verse 21. Then Zebah and Zalmunna said, Rise thou, and fall upon us] It was disgraceful to fall by the hands of a child; and the death occasioned by the blows of such a person must be much more lingering and tormenting. Some have even employed children to despatch captives. Civilis, a Roman knight, headed a revolt of the Gauls against Rome, in the year of the city 824. Of him Tacitus says, Hist. lib. iv. c. 61. Ferebatur parvulo filio quosdam captivorum, sagittis jaculisque puerilibus figendos obtulisse; "He is said to have given to his little son some prisoners, as butts to be shot at, with little darts and arrows." This was for their greater torment and dishonour; and to inure his child to blood! Could any thing like this have been the design of Gideon?

The ornaments that were on their camels' necks.] The heads, necks, bodies, and legs, of camels, horses, and elephants, are highly ornamented in the eastern countries; and, indeed, this was common, from the remotest antiquity, in all countries. Virgil refers to it as a thing long before his time, who thus describes the horses given by king Latinus to the ambassadors of Æneas. Æn. lib. vii. ver. 274.

*Hæc effatus, equos numero pater eligit omni.
Stabant tercentum nitidi in præcipibus altis:
Omniibus extemplo Teucris jubet ordine duci Instratos ostro alipedes pictisque tapetis.
Aurea pectoribus demissa munilia pendunt:
Tecti auro fulvum, mandunt sub dentibus aurum.*

"He said, and ordered steeds to mount the band;
In lofty stalls three hundred coursers stand:
Their shining sides with crimson covered o'er;
The sprightly steeds embroidered trappings wore,
With golden chains, refulgent to behold:
Gold were their brides, and they champ'd on gold." Pitt.

also; for thou hast delivered us from the hand of Midian.

23 And Gideon said unto them, I will not rule over you, neither shall my son rule over you: ^gthe LORD shall rule over you.

24 And Gideon said unto them, I would desire a request of you, that ye would give me every man the ear-rings of his prey. (For they had golden ear-rings, ^hbecause they were Ishmaelites.)

25 And they answered, We will willingly give them. And they spread a garment, and did cast therein every man the ear-rings of his prey.

8. 7. & 10. 19. & 12. 12.—h Gen. 25. 13. & 37. 25, 28.

Instead of ornaments, the Septuagint translates τους μηνίσκους the crescents, or half-moons; and this is followed by the Syriac and Arabic. The worship of the moon was very ancient; and, with that of the sun, constituted the earliest idolatry of mankind. We learn from ver. 24. that the Ishmaelites or Arabs, as they are termed by the Targum, Syriac, and Arabic, had golden ear-rings, and probably a crescent in each; for it is well known that the Ishmaelites, and the Arabs who descended from them, were addicted very early to the worship of the moon: and so attached were they to this superstition, that, although Mohammed destroyed the idolatrous use of the crescent, yet it was universally borne in their ensigns, and on the tops of their mosques; as well as in various ornaments.

Verse 22. Rule thou over us, both thou, and thy son, and thy son's son] That is, become our king, and let the crown be hereditary in thy family. What a weak, foolish, and inconstant people, were these! As yet their government was a theocracy; and now, dazzled with the success of a man who was only an instrument in the hands of God to deliver them from their enemies, they wished to throw off the divine yoke, and shackle themselves with an unlimited hereditary monarchy! An unlimited monarchy is a curse; a limited monarchy may be a blessing; the latter may be an appointment of God, the former never can. Those who cast off their allegiance to their Maker are guilty of folly and extravagance of every kind.

Verse 23. The LORD shall rule over you.] Few, with such power at their command, would have acted as Gideon. His speech calls them back to their first principles; and should have excited in them both shame and contrition.

Verse 24. Give me every man the ear-rings of his prey] The spoils taken from their enemies in this warfare. This is a transaction very like to that of the Israelites and Aaron; when they brought him their golden ear-rings, out of which he made the molten calf, Exod. xxxii. 2, &c. Whether Gideon designed this ephod for an instrument of worship, or merely as a trophy, is not very clear. It is most likely that he had intended to establish a place of worship at Ophrah; and he took this occasion to provide the proper sacerdotal vestments.

27 And Gideon ^k made an ephod thereof, and put it in his city, even ¹ in Ophrah; and all Israel ^m went thither a whoring after it: which thing became ⁿ a snare unto Gideon, and to his house.

Verse 26. The weight of the golden ear-rings was a thousand and seven hundred shekels of gold Taking the shekel at half an ounce weight, the sum of the gold collected in ear-rings was seventy-three pounds four ounces; and worth, as gold now rates, £3300 sterling.

This computation of the weight of the golden ear-rings, taken from the slaughtered Ishmaelites, will bring to the reader's mind the slaughter of the Roman knights by the Carthaginians, at the battle of Cannæ; from whose spoils Hannibal sent three bushels of gold rings to the city of Carthage!

Verse 27. Gideon made an ephod thereof That is, he made an ephod out of this mass of gold; but he could not employ it all in making this one garment, for it is not likely that any man could wear a coat of nearly one hundred pounds weight. It is likely that he made a whole tabernacle service in miniature out of this gold.

All Israel went thither a whoring after it This form of speech often occurs; and has been often explained. The whole Jewish nation is represented as being united to God as a wife is to her husband. Any act of idolatry is considered as a breach of their covenant with God, as an act of whoredom is the breach of the marriage agreement between man and wife. God calls himself the husband of the Jewish nation; and their idolatries, acts of whoredom, adultery, and fornication. All Israel paid idolatrous worship to the ephod, or sacerdotal establishment, made by Gideon at Ophrah; and this is called going a whoring after it; see on ver. 33. For a description of the ephod, see Exod. xxv. 7. and for the other garments of the priests, see Exod. xxviii. 4, &c.

Whose name he called Abimelech That is, my father is king; or my father, hath reigned. This name was doubtless given by the mother, and so it should be understood here: she wished to raise her son to the supreme government, and therefore gave him a name which might serve to stimulate him to seek that which she hoped he should enjoy in his father's right. See the following chapter.

Verse 32. Gideon—died in a good old age Supposed to have been A. M. 2799. Before Christ 1205.

Verse 33. A whoring after Baalim This term has probably a different meaning here to what it has ver. 7; for it is very likely that, in most parts of the pagan worship, there were many impure rites; so that going a whoring after Baalim may be taken in a literal sense.

Baal-berith Literally, the Lord of the covenant; the same as Jupiter fœderis, or Mercury, among the Romans; the deity, whose business it was to preside over compacts, leagues, treaties, covenants, &c. Some of the versions understand it as if the Israelites had made a covenant, or agreement, to have Baal for their God: so the VULGATE, Percussuruntque cum Baal fœdus ut esset eis in deum.

Verse 34. Remembered not the LORD their God They attributed their deliverance to some other cause; and did not give him the glory of their salvation.

Verse 35. Neither showed they kindness to the house of—Gideon They were both unthankful and unholy. Though they had the clearest proofs of God's power and goodness before their eyes, yet they forgot him. And although they were under the greatest obligations to Gideon, and were once so sensible of them that they offered to settle the kingdom on him and his family, yet they forgot him also: for, becoming foes to God, they could not be friends to MAN.

Jerubbaal, namely, Gideon] This is improper: it should be Jerubbaal Gideon; as we say Simon Peter; or call any man by his Christian and surname.

THE ancients, particularly St. Ambrose and St. Augustin, have endeavoured to find out a parallel between our blessed Lord and Gideon. We have already seen what Origen has made of the whole account; who is followed in the main by the above Latin fathers. As I believe no such parallel was intended by the Spirit of God, I must be excused from going into their details. It is no credit either to Christ or Christianity to be compared to such persons, and their transactions.

1. Of Gideon, the most we can say is that which the angel said; he was a mighty man of valour.

2. He was also a true patriot; he loved his country, and hazarded his life for it: and yet he would not stir till he had the most incontestable proofs that God would, by supernatural assistance, make him victorious.

3. He was most evidently disinterested, and void of ambition: he refused the kingdom when it was offered to him, and to his heirs after him. But, consistently with the belief he had in God, he could not accept it, as this would have been a complete alteration of the Jewish constitution, which acknowledged no ruler but God himself.

4. His motive in making of the ephod is not well understood: probably it was done with no reprehensible design. But the act was totally wrong; he had no divine authority to make such an innovation in the religious worship of his country. The ark was at Shechem: and there was the proper and only accredited priest. The act, therefore, can never be excused, whatever may be said of his motive.

5. His private character does not appear to have been very exemplary: he had many wives; and seventy sons by them, besides one by a concubine, which he kept at Shechem; where he was often obliged to go as judge, for the purpose of administering justice. In short, there is scarcely a trait in his character worthy to be compared with any thing in the conduct of the Redeemer of mankind.

6. Parallels to Christ, and the work of his spirit in the salvation of men, have been diligently sought in the Sacred Writings, by both commentators and preachers: and we have had voluminous treatises on types and antitypes: and how little has sound doctrine or true piety derived from them! They have often served to unsettle the former, and have been rather inimical, than favourable, to the interests of the latter. When the Spirit of God says such things are types, and such things are allegories, it is our duty to believe and examine: when men produce their types and metaphors, it may be our duty to doubt—he suspicious—and pass on.

CHAPTER IX.

Abimelech is made king; and, to secure himself in the kingdom, slays his brethren: Jotham, the youngest, only escapes, 1—6. Jotham reproves him and the Shechemites by a curious and instructive parable, 7—21. Abimelech having reigned three years, the Shechemites, headed by Gaal, the son of Ebed, conspire against him, 22—29. Zebul, governor of the city, apprizes Abimelech of the insurrection, who comes with his forces, and discomfits Gaal, 30—40. Abimelech assaults the city, takes, beats it down, and sows it with salt, 41—45. Several of the Shechemites take refuge in the temple of Baal-berith; Abimelech sets fire to it, and destroys in it about one thousand men and women, 46—50. He afterward besieges and takes Thebez; but while he is assaulting the citadel, a woman threw a piece of a millstone upon his head, and killed him. Thus God requited him and the men of Shechem for their wickedness, and their ingratitude to the family of Gideon, 51—57.

Verse 1. Abimelech—went to Shechem] We have already seen that Abimelech was the son of Gideon, by his concubine at Shechem. His going thither immediately after his father's death was to induce his townsmen to proclaim him governor, in the place of his father. Shechem was the residence of his mother, and of all her relatives.

Verse 2. Whether is better for you, either that all the sons] This was a powerful argument:

Whether will you have seventy tyrants, or only one? For, as he had no right to the government, and God alone was King at that time in Israel; so he must support his usurped rule by whatever means were most likely to effect it; a usurped government is generally supported by oppression and the sword.

Probably shekels; and this was the whole of his exchequer. As he was now usurping the government of God, he begins with a contribution from the idol temple. A work begun under the name and influence of the devil, is not likely to end to the glory of God, or to the welfare of man.

Hired vain and light persons] אנשים ריקים anashim reykim upochazim, "worthless and dissolute men;" persons who were living on the public, and had nothing to lose. Such was the foundation of his Babel government. By a cunning management of such rascals most revolutions have been brought about.

Verse 5. Slew his brethren] His brothers by the father's side, ch. viii. 30. This was a usual way of securing an ill-gotten throne; the person who had no right destroying all those that had right, that he might have no competitors.

Yet Jotham—was left] That is, all the seventy were killed except Jotham, if there were not seventy besides Jotham. All the histories of all the nations of the earth are full of cruelties, similar to those of Abimelech: cousins, uncles, brothers, husbands, and fathers, have been murdered by their cousins, nephews, brothers, wives, and children, in order that they might have the undisturbed possession of an ill-gotten throne. Europe, Asia, and Africa, can witness all this. Even now, some of these horribly obtained governments exist.

Verse 6. And all the house of Millo] If Millo be the name of a place, it is nowhere else mentioned in the Sacred Writings. But it is probably the name of a person of note and influence in the city of Shechem; The men of Shechem, and the family of Millo.

Verse 7. Stood in the top of mount Gerizim] Gerizim and Ebal were mounts very near to each other; the former lying to the north, the latter to the south; and at the foot of them Shechem.

That God may hearken unto you.] It appears that Jotham received this message from God; and that he spoke on this occasion by divine inspiration.

Verse 8. The trees went forth on a time] This is the oldest, and, without exception, the best fable or apologue in the world. See the observations at the end of this chapter.

It is not to be supposed that a fable, if well formed, requires much illustration: every part of this, a few expressions excepted, illustrates itself, and tells its own meaning.

To anoint a king] Hence it appears, that anointing was usual in the installation of kings long before there was any king in Israel: for there is much evidence that the Book of Judges was written before the days of Saul and David.

The olive tree] The olive was the most useful of all the trees in the field or forest, as the bramble was the meanest and the most worthless.

Verse 9. Wherewith—they honour God and man] I believe the word אלהים elohim here, should be translated gods; for the parable seems to be accommodated to the idolatrous state of the Shechemites. Thus it was understood by the Vulgate, Arabic, and others. It is true that olive oil was often used in the service of God:
 the priests were anointed with it; the lamps in the tabernacle lighted with it; almost all the offerings of fine flour, cakes prepared in the pan &c. had oil mingled with them; therefore Jotham might say that with it they honour God;
 and as priests, prophets, and kings, were anoint-ed, and their office was the most honourable, he might with propriety say, therewith they honour man. But I am persuaded he used the term in the first sense. See on ver. 13.

Verse 11. But the fig tree said—Should I forsake my sweetness] The fruit of the fig tree is the sweetest, or most luscious, of all fruits. A full ripe fig, in its own climate, has an indescri-bable sweetness; so much so, that it is almost impossible to eat them, till a considerable time after they are gathered from the trees, and have gone through an artificial preparation.
 This I have often noticed.

Verse 13. Which cheereth God and man] I same sense proposed on verse 9. Vast libations of wine, as well as much oil, were used in heathenish sacrifices and offerings; and it was their opinion that the gods actually partook of, and were delighted both with the wine and oil. The Pagan mythology furnishes the most exquisite wines to its gods in heaven; and hence the nectar and ambrosia so much talked of, and praised by the ancients. It is not reasonable to suppose that Jotham makes any reference here to the sacrifices, oblations, and perfumes, offered to the true God. This language the idolatrous Shechemites could scarcely understand. What could the worshippers of Baal-berith know of the worship of the God who gave his law to Moses? And it is not very likely that Jotham himself was well acquainted with the sacred rites of the Mosaic religion, as they had been little preached in his time.

Verse 14. Then said all the trees unto the bramble] The word אֲתָד, which we translate bramble, is supposed to mean the rhamnus, which is the largest of thorns, producing dreadful spikes, similar to darts. See Theodoret on Psa. lviii. 10.

There is much of the moral of this fable contained in the different kinds of trees mentioned.

1. The olive, the most profitable tree to its owner; having few equals, either for food or medicine. 2. The fig tree, one of the most fruitful of trees, and yielding one of the most delicious fruits, and superior to all others for sweetness. 3. The vine, which alone yields a liquor, which, when properly prepared, and taken in strict moderation, is friendly both to the body and mind of man; having a most direct tendency to invigorate both. 4. The bramble, or thorn, which, however useful as a hedge, is dangerous to come near; and is here the emblem of an impious, cruel, and oppressive king. As the olive, fig, and vine, are said in this fable to refuse the royalty, because, in consequence, they intimate they should lose their own privileges; we learn, that to be invested with power, for the public good, can be no privilege to the sovereign. If he discharge the office faithfully, it will plant his pillow with thorns, fill his soul with anxious cares, rob him of rest and quiet, and, in a word, will be to him a source of distress and misery. All this is represented here under the emblem of the trees losing their fatness, their sweetness, and good fruits, and their cheering influence. In short, we see, from this most sensible fable, that the beneficent, benevolent, and highly illuminated mind, is ever averse from the love of power; and that those who do seek it are the thoughtless, the vain, the ambitious, and those who wish for power merely for the purpose of self-gratification; persons who have neither the disposition nor the knowledge to use power for the advantage of the community; and who, while they boast great things, and trees, If in truth ye anoint me king over you, then come and put your trust in my "shadow; and if not, "let fire come out of the bramble, and devour the "cedars of Lebanon.

make great pretensions and promises, are the tyrants of the people; and often, through their ambition, like the bramble in the fable, kindle a flame of foreign or domestic war, in which their subjects are consumed.

The sleepless nights, and corroding cares, of sovereignty, are most forcibly described by a poet of our own, whose equal, in describing the inward workings of the human heart, in all varieties of character and circumstances, has never appeared, either in ancient or modern times. Hear what he puts in the mouth of two of his care-worn kings:

"How many thousand of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep?—Sleep, gentle sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frightened thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness?
Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody?
O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds; and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-case, or a common 'larum bell?
Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast
Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains
In cradle of the rude imperious surge;
And in the visitation of the winds,
Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them
With deaf'ning clamours in the slippery clouds
That, with the hurly, death itself awakes?
Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose
To the wet sea-boy, in an hour so rude;
And, in the calmest and most stillest night,
With all appliances and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Then happy low, lie down!
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown."——
"O hard condition! twin-born with greatness, Subjected to the breath of every fool,
Whose sense no more can feel but his own wringing!
What infinite heart's ease must kings neglect,
That private men enjoy?
And what have kings that privates have not too,
Save ceremony, save general ceremony?"——
"Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The inter-tissued robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running 'fore the king,
The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp
That beats upon the high shore of this world,
No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,
Not all these, laid in bed majestical,
Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave.

Shakspeare.

This is precisely the same sentiment expressed in the denial of the olive, fig tree, and vine.

Verse 15. Come and put your trust in my shadow] The vain boast of the would-be sovereign; and of the man who is seeking to be put into power by the suffrages of the people. All promises, no performance.

Let fire come out of the bramble] A strong catachresis. The bramble was too low to give shelter to any tree; and so far from being able to consume others, that the smallest fire will reduce it to ashes, and that in the shortest time. Hence the very transitory mirth of fools is said to be like the crackling of thorns under a pot.

Abimelech was the bramble; and the cedars of Lebanon all the nobles and people of Israel. Could they, therefore, suppose, that such a low-born, uneducated, cruel, and murderous man, could be a proper protector, or a humane governor? He who could imbrue his hands in the blood of his brethren, in order to get into power, was not likely to stop at any means to secure that power when possessed. If, therefore, they took him for their king, they might rest assured that desolation and blood would mark the whole of his reign.

The condensed moral of the whole fable is this:—Weak, worthless, and wicked men, will ever be foremost to thrust themselves into power; and, in the end, to bring ruin upon themselves, and on the unhappy people over whom they preside.

Verse 20. Let fire come out from Abimelech] As the thorn, or bramble, may be the means of kindling other wood, because it may be easily ignited; so shall Abimelech be the cause of kindling a fire of civil discord among you, that shall consume the rulers and great men of your country. A prophetic declaration of what would take place.

Verse 21. Went to Beer] Mr. Maundrel, in his Journéy from Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 64. 5th edit. mentions a place of this name, which he thinks to be that to which Jotham fled, and supposed to be the same as Michmash, 1 Sam.

22 ¶ When Abimelech had reigned three years over Israel,

23 Then ^d God sent an evil spirit between Abimelech and the men of Shechem; and the men of Shechem ^e dealt treacherously with Abimelech;

24 ^f That the cruelty done to the threescore and ten sons of Jerubbaal might come, and their blood be laid upon Abimelech their brother, which slew them; and upon the men of Shechem, which ^g aided him in the killing of his brethren.

25 And the men of Shechem set liers in wait for him in the top of the mountains, and they robbed all that came along that way by them: and it was told Abimelech.

26 And Gaal the son of Ebed came with his brethren, and went over to Shechem: and the men of Shechem put their confidence in him.

27 And they went out into the fields, and gathered their vineyards, and trode the grapes, and made ^h merry, and went into ⁱ the house of their god, and did eat and drink, and cursed Abimelech.

xiv. It is situated, he says, toward the south, on an easy declivity; and has a fountain of excellent water, at the bottom of the hill, from which it has taken its name.

Verse 23. God sent an evil spirit] He permitted jealousies to take place, which produced factions; and these factions produced insurrections, civil contentions, and slaughter.

Verse 25. The men of Shechem set liers in wait] It pleased God to punish this bad man by the very persons who had contributed to his iniquitous elevation. So God often makes the instruments of men's sins the means of their punishment. It is likely that although Abimelech had his chief residence at Shechem, yet he frequently went to Ophrah, the city of his father; his claim to which there was none to oppose, as he had slain all his brethren. It was probably in his passage between those two places that the Shechemites had posted cut-throats, in order to assassinate him; as such men had no moral principle, they robbed and plundered all who came that way.

Verse 26. Gaal the son of Ebed] Of this person we know no more than is here told. He was probably one of the descendants of the Canaanites, who hoped, from the state of the public mind, and their disaffection to Abimelech, to cause a revolution, and thus to restore the ancient government as it was under Emmor, the father of Shechem.

28 And Gaal the son of Ebed said, ^k Who is Abimelech, and who is Shechem, that we should serve him? is not he the son of Jerubbaal? and Zebul his officer? Serve the men of ^l Hamor the father of Shechem; for why should we serve him?

29 And ^m would to God this people were under my hand! then would I remove Abimelech. And he said to Abimelech, Increase thine army, and come out.

30 ¶ And when Zebul the ruler of the city heard the words of Gaal the son of Ebed, his anger was ⁿ kindled.

31 And he sent messengers unto Abimelech ^o privily, saying, Behold, Gaal the son of Ebed and his brethren be come to Shechem; and, behold, they fortify the city against thee.

32 Now therefore up by night, thou and the people that is with thee, and lie in wait in the field.

33 And it shall be, that in the morning, as soon as the sun is up, thou shalt rise early, and set upon the city; and, behold, when he and the people that is with him come out against thee, then mayest thou do to them ^p as thou shalt find occasion.

36 And when Gaal saw the people, he said to Zebul, Behold, there come people down from the top of the mountains. And Zebul said unto him, Thou seest the shadow of the mountains as if they were men.

37 And Gaal spake again and said, See, there come people down by the ^r middle of the land, and another company come along by the plain of ^s Meonenim.

38 Then said Zebul unto him, Where is now thy mouth, wherewith thou saidst, Who is Abimelech, that we should serve him? Is not this the people that thou hast despised? go out, I pray now, and fight with them.

40 And Abimelech chased him, and he fled before him, and many were overthrown and wounded, even unto the entering of the gate.

41 And Abimelech dwelt at Arumah: and Zebul thrust out Gaal and his brethren, that they should not dwell in Shechem.

43 And he took the people, and divided them into three companies, and laid wait in the field, and looked, and, behold, the people were come forth out of the city: and he rose up against them, and smote them.

44 And Abimelech, and the company that was with him, rushed forward, and stood in the entering of the gate of the city: and the two other companies ran upon all the people that were in the fields, and slew them.

Verse 31. They fortify the city against thee] Under pretence of repairing the walls and towers, they were actually putting the place in a state of defence, intending to seize on the government as soon as they should find Abimelech coming against them. Fortifying the city may mean, seducing the inhabitants from their loyalty to Abimelech.

perpetual memorial of his achievements. The salt was not designed to render it barren, as some have imagined; for who would think of cultivating a city? But as salt is an emblem of incorruption and perpetuity, it was no doubt designed to perpetuate the memorial of this transaction; and as a token that he wished this desolation to be eternal. The sowing a place with salt, was a custom in different nations to express permanent desolation and abhorrence. Sigonius observes, that when the city of Milan was taken, in A. D. 1162, the walls were razed, and it was sown with salt. And Brantome informs us, that it was an ancient custom in France to sow the house of a man with salt, who had been declared a traitor to his king. Charles IX. king of France, the most base and perfidious of human beings, caused the house of the Admiral Coligni (whom he and the duke of Guise caused to be murdered, with thousands more of Protestants, on the eve of St. Bartholomew, 1572,) to be sown with salt! How many houses have been since sown with salt in France, by the just judgments of God, in revenge for the massacre of the Protestants on the eve of St. Bartholomew! Yet for all this God's wrath is not turned away; but his hand is stretched out still.

Verse 46. A hold of the house of the god Berith] This must mean the precincts of the 51 But there was a strong tower within the city, and thither fled all the men and women, and all they of the city, and shut it to them, and gat them up to the top of the tower.

temple, as we find there were a thousand men and women together in that place.

Verse 53. A piece of a millstone] מלה רכב pelach receb, a piece of a chariot-wheel: but the word is used in other places for upper millstones, and is so understood here by the Vulgate, Sep-tuagint, Syriac, and Arabic.

And all to break his skull.] A most nonsensical version of ורץ את גולגולתו vatarits eth gulgulto, which is literally, And she brake, or fractured his skull. Plutarch, in his Life of Pyrrhus, observes, that this king was killed at the siege of Thebes, by a piece of a tile, which a woman threw upon his head.

Verse 54. Draw thy sword, and slay me] It was a disgrace to be killed by a woman; on this account, Seneca, the tragedian, deplores the death of Hercules:—

Auctor feritur.*

Herc. Oetaeus, ver. 1177.

Abimelech was also afraid, that if he fell thus mortally wounded into the hands of his enemies, they might treat him with cruelty and insult.

Verse 56. Thus God rendered, &c.] Both the fratricide Abimelech, and the unprincipled men of Shechem, had the iniquity visited upon them, of which they had been guilty. Man's judgment may be avoided; but there is no escape from the judgments of God.

I HAVE said that the fable of Jotham is the oldest, and perhaps the best, in the world: and have referred for other particulars to the end of the chapter.

On the general subject of fable, apologue, and parable, the reader will find a considerable dissertation at the end of Matt. ch. xiii. I shall add but a few things here; and they shall refer to the oldest collection of fables extant. These are of Indian origin; and are preserved in the Sanscreeet, from which they have been translated into different languages, both Asiatic and European, under various titles. The collection is called Hitopadesa, and the author Veshnoo Sarma; but they are known in Europe by The Tales and Fables of Bidpay, or Pilpay, an ancient Indian philosopher. Of this collection Sir William Jones takes the following notice:—"The Fables of Veshnoo Sarma, whom we ridiculously call Pilpay, are the most beautiful, if not the most ancient, collection of apologues in the world. They were first translated from the Sanscreeet, in the sixth century, by Buzerchumihir, or bright as the sun, the chief physician, and afterward the vizir, of the great Anushirvan; and are extant under various names, in more than twenty languages. But their original title is Hitopadesa, or amicable instruction: and as the very existence of Æsop, whom the Arabs believe to have been an Abyssinian, appears rather doubtful; I am not disinclined to suppose that the first moral fables which appeared in Europe were of Indian or Ethiopian origin."

Mr. Frazer, in his collection of Oriental MSS. at the end of his History of Nadir Shah, gives us the following account of this curious and instructive work:—

"The ancient Brahmins of India, after a good deal of time and labour, compiled a treatise, (which they called Kurtuk Dumnik;) in which were inserted the choicest treasures of wisdom, and the most perfect rules for governing a people. This book they presented to their rajahs, who kept it with the greatest secrecy and care. About the time of Mohammed's birth, or the latter end of the sixth century, Noishervan the Just, who then reigned in Persia, discovered a great inclination to see that book; for which purpose Burzuvia, a physician, who had a surprising talent in learning several languages, particularly Sanskerritt, was introduced to him as the most proper person to be employed to get a copy of it. He went to India, where, after some years' stay, and great trouble, he procured it. It was translated into the Pehlvi (the ancient Persian language) by him and Buzrjumehr, the vizir. Noishervan, ever after, and all his successors, the Persian kings, had this book in high esteem, and took the greatest care to keep it secret. At last Abu Jaffer Munsour zu Nikky, who was the second caliph of the Abassi reign, by great search, got a copy of it in the Pehlvi language, and ordered Imâm Hassân Abdal Mokaffa, who was the most learned of the age, to translate it into Arabic. This prince ever after made it his guide, not only in affairs relating to the government, but also in private life.

"In the year 380 of Hegira, sultan Mahmud Ghazi put it into verse; and afterward, in the year 515, by order of Bheram Shah ben Mas-saud, that which Abdal Mokaffa had translated was retranslated into Persic by Abdul Mala Nasser Allah Mustofi; and this is that Kulila Dumna, which is now extant. As this latter had too many Arabic verses and obsolete phrases in it, Molana Ali ben Hessein Vaes, at the request of Emir Soheli, keeper of the seals to sultan Hossein Mirza, put it into a more modern style, and gave it the title of Anuar Soheli.

"In the year 1002, the great Moghul Jalal ô Din Mohommed Akbar ordered his own secretary and vizir, the learned Abul Fazl, to illustrate the obscure passages, abridge the long digression, and put it into such a style as would be most familiar to all capacities; which he accordingly did, and gave it the name of Ayar Danish, or the Criterion of Wisdom." Thus far Mr. Frazer under the word Ayar Danish.

"In the year 1709 (says Dr. Wilkins) the Kulila Dumna, the Persian version of Abul Mala Nasser Allah Mustofi, made in the 515th year of the Hegira, was translated into French, with the title of Les Conseils et les Maximes de Pilpay, Philosophe Indien, sur les divers Etats de la Vie. This edition resembles the Hitopadesa more than any other then seen; and is evidently the immediate original of the English 'Instructive and entertaining Fables of Pilpay, an ancient Indian Philosopher,' which, in 1775, had gone through five editions.

"The Anuar Soheli, above-mentioned, about the year 1540 was rendered into the Turkish language; and the translator is said to have bestowed twenty years' labour upon it. In the year 1724, this edition M. Galland began to translate into French, and the four first chapters were then published; but, in the year 1778, M. Cardonne completed the work, in three volumes, giving it the name of Contes et Fables Indiennes de Bidpai et de Lokman; traduites d'Ali Tcheleby ben Saleh, auteur Turc: 'Indian Tales and Fables of Bidpay and Lockman, translated from Aly Tcheleby ben Saleh, a Turkish author.'"

The Fables of Lockman were published in Arabic and Latin, with notes, by Erpenius, 4to. Amstel. 1636; and by the celebrated Goliush, at the end of his edition of Erpen's Arabic Grammar, Lugd. Bat. 1656, with additional notes; and also in the edition of the same grammar, by Albert Schultens, Lugd. Bat. 1748, 4to. They are only thirty-seven in number.

Of the Hitopadesa, or Fables of Vishnoo Sarma, we have two very elegant English translations from the original Sanscreeet: one by Sir William Jones, printed in his Works, 4to. vol. vi. Lond. 1799; the other by the father of Sanscreeet literature in Europe, Dr. Charles Wilkins, of the India House, 8vo. Bath, 1787, with a collection of very important notes.

The Bahar Danish, or Sea of Wisdom, abounds with maxims, apothegms, &c., similar to those in the preceding works: This was most faithfully translated from the Persian, by Dr. Jonathan Scott, late Persian secretary to his excellency Warren Hastings, published in three vols. 12mo. with notes. Shrewsbury, 1799. This is the most correct version of any Persian work yet offered to the public. The original is by Einaut Ullah. Of these works it may be said, they contain the wisdom of the Oriental world; and many of the numerous maxims interspersed through them yield in importance only to those in the Sacred Writings. The fables attributed to Æsop have been repeatedly published in Greek and Latin, as well as in all the languages of Europe; and are well known.

Those of Phædrus are in general only a metrical version of the Fables of Æsop. The compositions of La Fontaine, in French; and those of Mr. Gay, in English, are very valuable.

Tola judges Israel twenty-three years, 1, 2. Jair is judge twenty-two years, 3—5. After him the Israelites rebel against God, and are delivered into the hands of the Philistines and Ammonites eighteen years, 6—9. They humble themselves, and God reproves them, 10—14. They put away their strange gods, and gather together against the Ammonites, 15—17. The chiefs of Gilead inquire concerning a captain to head them against the Ammonites, 18.

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 1. Tola, the son of Puah] As this Tola continued twenty-three years a judge of Israel after the troubles of Abimelech's reign; it is likely that the land had rest, and that the enemies of the Israelites had made no hostile incursions into the land during his presidency and that of Jair; which, together, continued forty-five years.

Verse 4. He had thirty sons, &c.] It appears that there was both peace and prosperity during the time that Jair governed Israel: he had, it seems, provided for his family, and given a village to each of his thirty sons; which were, in consequence, called Havoth Jair, or the villages of Jair. Their riding on thirty ass colts seems to intimate that they were persons of consideration, and kept up a certain dignity in their different departments.

Verse 6. And served Baalim] They became universal idolaters; adopting every god of the surrounding nations. Baalim and Ashtaroth

9 Moreover the children of Ammon passed over Jordan to fight also against Judah, and against Benjamin, and against the house of Ephraim; so that Israel was sore distressed.

These are enumerated—1. The gods of Syria, Bel and Saturn; or Jupiter and Astarté. 2. Gods of Zidon, Ashtaroth, Astarté, or Venus. 3. The gods of Moab, Chemosh. 4. Gods of the children of Ammon, Milcom. 5. Gods of the Philistines, viz. Dagon. See 1 Kings xi. 33. and 1 Sam. i. 2. These are called gods, because their images and places of worship were multiplied throughout the land.

Verse 7. The anger of the LORD was hot] This divine displeasure was manifested in delivering them into the hands of the Philistines and the Ammonites. The former dwelt on the western side of Jordan; the latter, on the east: and it appears that they joined their forces on this occasion to distress and ruin the Israelites, though the Ammonites were the most active.

Verse 11. And the LORD said] By what means these reproofs were conveyed to the Israelites, we know not: it must have been by an angel, a prophet, or some holy man, inspired for the occasion.

Verse 15. We have sinned] The reprehension of this people was kind, pointed, and solemn; and their repentance deep. And they gave proofs that their repentance was genuine, by putting away all their idols: but they were ever fickle and uncertain.

Verse 16. And his soul was grieved for the misery of Israel] What a proof of the philanthropy of God! Here his compassions moved on a small scale; but it was the same principle that led him to give his Son Jesus Christ to be a sacrifice for the sins of the whole world. God grieves for the miseries to which his creatures are reduced by their own sins! Be astonished, ye heavens, at this! and shout for joy, all ye inhabitants of the earth: for, through the love whence this compassion flowed, God has visited and redeemed a lost world!

Verse 17. The children of Ammon were gathered together] Literally, they cried against Israel; they sent out criers in different directions, to stir up all the enemies of Israel; and, when they had made a mighty collection, they encamped in Gilead.

Verse 18. What man is he that will begin to fight] It appears that, although the spirit of patriotism had excited the people at large to come forward against their enemies, yet they had no general; none to lead them forth to battle. God, however, who had accepted their sincere repentance, raised them an able captain in the person of Jephthah; and in him the suffrages of the people were concentrated, as we shall see in the following chapter.

In those ancient times, much depended on the onset; a war was generally terminated in one battle: the first impression was, therefore, of great consequence, and it required a person skilful, valorous, and strong, to head the attack. Jephthah was a person in whom all these qualifications appear to have met. When God purposes to deliver, he, in the course of his providence, will find out, employ, and direct, the proper means.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. Now Jephthah was—the son of a harlot] I think the word zonah, which we here render harlot, should be translated, as is contended for on Josh. ii. 1. viz. a hostess, keeper of an inn or tavern, for the accommodation of travellers: and thus it is understood by the Targum of Jonathan on this place, וְהָיָה בָּרְ פְּהֻיָּה בָּרְ תִּתְּתָהּ פֻּדְקֵיתָהּ, “and he was the son of a woman, a tavern-keeper.”

See the note referred to above. She was very probably a Canaanite, as she is called, ver. 2. a strange woman, אִשָּׁה אַחֵרֶת ishah achereth, a woman of another race; and on this account his brethren drove him from the family, as he could not have a full right to the inheritance, his mother not being an Israelite.

Verse 3. There were gathered vain men to Jephthah] אֲנָשִׁים רְיָקִים anashim reykim, “empty men;” persons destitute of good sense, and there were gathered ^o vain men to Jephthah, and went out with him.

4 ¶ And it came to pass ^o in process of time, that the children of Ammon made war against Israel.

5 And it was so, that when the children of Ammon made war against Israel, the elders of Gilead went to fetch Jephthah out of the land of Tob :

6 And they said unto Jephthah, Come, and be our captain, that we may fight with the children of Ammon.

7 And Jephthah said unto the children of Gilead, ^o Did not ye hate me, and expel me out of my father's house ? and why are ye come unto me now when ye are in distress ?

8 ^h And the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah, Therefore we ^o turn again to thee now, that thou mayest go with us, and fight against the children of Ammon, and be ^o our head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

9 And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead, If ye bring me home again to fight against the children of Ammon, and the LORD deliver them before me, shall I be your head ?

10 And the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah, ^o The LORD ^m be witness between us, if we do not so according to thy words.

profligate in their manners. The word may, however, mean in this place, poor persons; without property, and without employment. The versions, in general, consider them as plunderers.

Verse 4. The children of Ammon made war] They had invaded the land of Israel, and were now encamped in Gilead. See chap. x. 17.

Verse 6. Come, and be our captain] The Israelites were assembled in Mizpeh, but were without a captain to lead them against the Ammonites. And we find, from the conclusion of the preceding chapter, that they offered the command to any that would accept it.

Verse 8. Therefore we turn again to thee now] We are convinced that we have dealt unjustly by thee; and we wish now to repair our fault, and give thee this sincere proof of our regret, for having acted unjustly; and of our confidence in thee.

Verse 11. Jephthah went with the elders] The 12 ¶ And Jephthah sent messengers unto the king of the children of Ammon, saying, What hast thou to do with me, that thou art come against me to fight in my land ?

13 And the king of the children of Ammon answered unto the messengers of Jephthah, ^o Because Israel took away my land, when they came up out of Egypt, from Arnon even unto ^o Jabbok, and unto Jordan: now therefore restore those lands again peaceably.

14 And Jephthah sent messengers again unto the king of the children of Ammon:

15 And said unto him, Thus saith Jephthah, ^o Israel took not away the land of Moab, nor the land of the children of Ammon:

16 But when Israel came up from Egypt, and ^o walked through the wilderness unto the Red sea, and ^o came to Kadesh;

17 Then ^o Israel sent messengers unto the king of Edom, saying, Let me, I pray thee, pass through thy land: ^o but the king of Edom would not hearken thereto. And in like manner they sent unto the king of Moab: but he would not consent: and Israel ^o abode in Kadesh.

18 Then they went along through the wilderness, and ^o compassed the land elders had chosen him for their head; but, to be valid, this choice must be confirmed by the people; therefore, it is said, the people made him head. But even this did not complete the business: God must be brought in a party to this transaction, and therefore Jephthah uttered all his words before the Lord; the terms made with the elders and the people, on which he had accepted the command of the army; and, being sure of the divine approbation, he entered on the work with confidence.

Verse 12. Jephthah sent messengers] He wished the Ammonites to explain their own motives for undertaking a war against Israel; as then the justice of his cause would appear more forcibly to the people.

Verse 13. From Arnon even unto Jabbok, and unto Jordan] That is, all the land that had formerly belonged to the Amorites, and to the Moabites; who it seems, were confederates on this occasion.

Verse 22. From the wilderness even unto Jordan.] From Arabia Deserta on the east to Jordan on the west.

Verse 23. The LORD God of Israel hath dispossessed the Amorites.] Jephthah shows that the Israelites did not take the land of the Moabites or Ammonites, but that of the Amorites, which they had conquered from Sihon their king, who had, without cause or provocation, attacked them: and although the Amorites had taken the lands in question from the Ammonites, yet the title by which Israel held them was good; because they took them not from the Ammonites, but conquered them from the Amorites.

So now the LORD—hath dispossessed the Amorites.] The circumstances in which the Israelites were when they were attacked by the Amorites plainly proved that, unless Jehovah had helped them, they must have been overcome. God defeated the Amorites, and made a grant of their lands to the Israelites; and they had in consequence possessed them for three hundred years, ver. 26.

Verse 24. Will not thou possess that which Chemosh thy god giveth thee?] As if he had said, "It is a maxim with you, as it is among all nations, that the lands which they conceive to be given them by their gods they have an absolute right to, and should not relinquish them to any kind of claimant. You suppose that the land which you possess was given you by your god Chemosh; and, therefore, you will not relinquish what you believe you hold by a divine 24 Wilt not thou possess that which ^a Chemosh thy god giveth thee to possess? So whomsoever ^b the LORD our God shall drive out from before us, them will we possess.

25 And now, art thou any thing better than ^c Balak, the son of Zippor, king of Moab? did he ever strive against Israel, or did he ever fight against them,

26 While Israel dwelt in ^d Heshbon and her towns, and in ^e Aroer and her towns, and in all the cities that be along by the coasts of Arnon, three hundred years? why therefore did ye not recover them within that time?

27 Wherefore I have not sinned against thee, but thou doest me wrong to war against me: the LORD ^f the Judge ^g be judge this day between the children of Israel and the children of Ammon.

28 Howbeit the king of the children of Ammon hearkened not unto the words of Jephthah which he sent him.

29 ¶ Then ^h the Spirit of the LORD right. Now, we know that Jehovah, our God, who is the Lord of heaven and earth, has given the Israelites the land of the Amorites; and, therefore, we will not give it up." The ground of Jephthah's remonstrance was sound and good.

1. The Ammonites had lost their lands in their contests with the Amorites.

2. The Israelites conquered these lands from the Amorites, who had waged a most unprincipled war against them.

3. God, who is the Maker of heaven and earth, had given those very lands as a divine grant to the Israelites.

4. In consequence of this they had possession of them for upwards of three hundred years.

5. These lands were never reclaimed by the Ammonites, though they had repeated opportunities of doing it, while the Israelites dwelt in Heshbon, in Aroer, and in the coasts of Arnon; but they did not reclaim them, because they knew that the Israelites held them legally. The present pretensions of Ammon were unsupported, and unjustifiable.

Verse 27. The LORD the Judge be judge—between the children of Israel.] If you be right, and we be wrong, then Jehovah, who is the Sovereign and incorruptible Judge, shall determine in your favour; and to him I submit the righteousnessness of my cause.

Verse 29. Then the Spirit of the LORD came upon Jephthah.] The Lord qualified him for the work he had called him to do; and thus gave came upon Jephthah, and he passed over Gilead and Manasseh, and passed over Mizpeh of Gilead, and from Mizpeh of Gilead he passed over unto the children of Ammon.

30 And Jephthah ^vvowed a vow unto the LORD, and said, If thou shalt without fail deliver the children

Verse 31. Shall surely be the LORD's, and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering. The text is, והיה לה' והעליתינהו vehaiyah Layhovah, vechaalithihuh olah; the translation of which, according to the most accurate Hebrew scholars, is this: I will consecrate it to the LORD; or, I will offer it for a burnt-offering; that is, "If it be a thing fit for a burnt-offering, it shall be made one; if fit for the service of God, it shall be consecrated to him." That conditions of this kind must have been implied in the vow is evident enough; to have been made without them, it must have been the vow of a heathen or a madman. If a dog had met him, this could not have been made a burnt-offering; and if his neighbour or friend's wife, son, or daughter, &c. had been returning from a visit to his family, his vow gave him no right over them. Besides, human sacrifices were ever an abomination to the LORD; and this was one of the grand reasons why God drove out the Canaanites, &c. because they offered their sons and daughters to Molech, in the fire, i. e. made burnt-offerings of them, as is generally supposed. That Jephthah was a deeply pious man, appears in the whole of his conduct; and that he was well acquainted with the law of Moses, which prohibited all such sacrifices, and stated what was to be offered in sacrifice, is evident enough from his expostulation with the king and people of Ammon, ver. 14. to 27. Therefore it must be granted that he never made that rash vow which several suppose he did; nor was he capable, if he had, of executing it in that most shocking manner which some Christian writers (tell it not in Gath) have contended for. He could not commit a crime, which himself had just now been an executor of God's justice to punish in others.

It has been supposed that "the text itself might have been read differently in former times: if, instead of the words והעליתינהו I will offer it a burnt-offering, we read והעליתינהו I will offer HIM (i. e. the LORD) a burnt-offering; this will make a widely different sense, more consistent with every thing that is sacred; and it is formed by the addition of only a single letter, (א aleph), and the separation of the pronoun from the verb. Now the letter א is so like the letter פ ain, which immediately follows it in the word olah, that the one might easily have been lost in the other, and thus the pronoun be joined to the verb, as at present, where it expresses the thing to be sacrificed, instead of the person to whom the sacrifice was to be made. With this emendaof Ammon into mine hands, 31 Then it shall be, that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the LORD's, and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering.

32 ¶ So Jephthah passed over unto

^t See Leviticus 27. 2, 3, &c. 1 Samuel 1. 11, 28. & 2. 18. ^u Or, or I will offer it, &c.—^v Psalm 66. 13. See Leviticus 27. 11, 12.

tion the passage will read thus: Whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me—shall be the LORD's; and I will offer HIM a burnt-offering. For this criticism there is no absolute need, because the pronoun hu, in the above verse, may, with as much propriety, be translated him as it. The latter part of the verse is literally, And I will offer him a burnt-offering, והוא olah, not והוא olah, for a burnt-offering, which is the common Hebrew form when for is intended to be expressed. This is strong presumption that the text should be thus understood: and this avoids the very disputable construction which is put on the vau, in והעליתינהו vehaalithihuh, or I will offer it up, instead of AND I will offer HIM a burnt-offering.

"From ver. 39. it appears evident that Jephthah's daughter was not sacrificed to God, but consecrated to him in a state of perpetual virginity; for the text says, She knew no man, for this was a statute in Israel, והיה חוק בישראל vatehi chok beyishrael; viz. that persons thus dedicated, or consecrated to God, should live in a state of unchangeable celibacy. Thus this celebrated place is, without violence to any part of the text, or to any proper rule of construction, cleared of all difficulty, and caused to speak a language consistent with itself, and with the nature of God."

Those who assert that Jephthah did sacrifice his daughter, attempt to justify the opinion from the barbarous usages of those times: but, in answer to this, it may be justly observed, that Jephthah was now under the influence of the Spirit of God, ver. 29., and that spirit could not permit him to embroil his hands in the blood of his own child; and especially under the pretence of offering a pleasing sacrifice to that God who is the Father of mankind, and the fountain of love, mercy, and compassion.

The versions give us but little assistance in clearing the difficulties of the text. In the Targum of Jonathan there is a remarkable gloss, which should be mentioned, and from which it will appear that the Targumist supposed that the daughter of Jephthah was actually sacrificed: "And he fulfilled the vow, which he had vowed, upon her; and she knew no man: and it was made a statute in Israel, [that no man should offer his son or his daughter for a burnt-offering; as did Jephthah the Gileadite, who did not consult Phineas, the priest; for, if he had consulted Phineas the priest, he would have redeemed her with money.]"

The Targumist refers here to the law, Lev xxvii. 4. where the Lord prescribes the price at which either males or females, who had been vowed to the Lord, might be redeemed. When a man shall make a singular vow, the persons shall be for the Lord at thy estimation: the male from twenty years old even unto sixty, shall be fifty shekels of silver; and if it be a female, then thy estimation shall be thirty shekels; and from five years old unto twenty years, the male twenty shekels, and for the female ten. This also is an argument that the daughter of Jephthah was not sacrificed; as the father had it in his power, at a very moderate price, to have redeemed her: and surely the blood of his daughter must have been of more value in his sight than thirty shekels of silver!

Dr. Hales has entered largely into the subject: his observations may be seen at the end of this chapter.

Verse 33. Twenty cities] That is, he either took or destroyed twenty cities of the Ammonites, and completely routed their whole army.

Verse 34. With timbrels and with dances] From this instance, we find that it was an ancient custom that women went out to meet returning conquerors with musical instruments, songs, and dances; and that it was continued afterward is evident, from the instance given 1 Sam. xviii. 6. where David was met (on his return from the defeat of Goliath and the Philistines) by women from all the cities of Israel, with singing, and dancing, and various instruments of music.

Verse 35. Thou hast brought me very low] He was greatly distressed to think that his daughter, who was his only child, should be, in consequence of his vow, prevented from continuing his family in Israel; for it is evident that he had not any other child: for, besides the LORD, ^f do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth; forasmuch as ^g the LORD hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, even of the children of Ammon.

37 And she said unto her father, Let this thing be done for me; let me alone two months, that I may ^h go up and down upon the mountains, and bewail my virginity, I and my fellows.

38 And he said, Go. And he sent her away for two months: and she went with her companions, and bewailed her virginity upon the mountains.

39 And it came to pass, at the end of two months, that she returned unto her father, who ⁱ did with her according to his vow which he had vowed: and she knew no man. And it was a ^k custom in Israel, her, says the text, he had neither son nor daughter, ver. 34. He might, therefore, be well grieved that thus his family was to become extinct in Israel.

40 That the daughters of Israel went ^l yearly ^m to lament the daughter of Jephthah the Gileadite four days in a year.

Verse 36. And she said unto him] What a pattern of filial piety and obedience! She was at once obedient, pious, and patriotic. A woman to have no offspring was considered to be in a state of the utmost degradation among the Hebrews; but she is regardless of all this, seeing her father is in safety, and her country delivered.

Verse 37. I and my fellows] Whether she meant the young women of her own acquaintance, or those who had been consecrated to God in the same way, though on different accounts, is not quite clear; but it is likely she means her own companions: and her going up and down upon the mountains may signify no more than her paying each of them a visit at their own houses, previously to her being shut up at the tabernacle; and this visiting of each, at their own home, might require the space of two months. This, I am inclined to think, is the meaning of this difficult clause.

Verse 40. To lament the daughter of Jephthah] I am satisfied that this is not a correct translation of the original לָמְנוּ לְבַת יִפְתָּח letan-noth lebat yiphtach. Houbigant translates the whole verse thus: Sed iste mos apud Israel invaluit, ut virgines Israel, temporibus diversis, irent ad filiam Jephthe—ut eam quotannis dies quatuor, consolarentur; “But this custom prevailed in Israel, that the virgins of Israel went at different times, four days in the year, to the daughter of Jephthah, that they might comfort her." This verse also gives evidence that the daughter of Jephthah was not sacrificed: nor does it appear that the custom, or statute referred to here, lasted after the death of Jephthah's daughter.

The following is Dr. Hales' Exposition of Jephthah's vow:

"When Jephthah went forth to battle against the Ammonites, he vowed a vow unto THE LORD, and said, If thou wilt surely give the children of Ammon into my hand, then it shall be that whatsoever cometh out of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall either be the Lord's, or I will offer it up (for) a burnt-offering, Judg. xi. 29, 30. According to this rendering of the two conjunctions, וּ וְ, in the last clause, 'either,' or, which is justified by the Hebrew idiom, thus: 'He that curseth his father and his mother,' Exod. xxi. 17. is necessarily rendered disjunctively, ('His father or his mother,') by the Septuagint, Vulgate, Chaldee, and English, confirmed by Matt. xv. 4. (the paucity of connecting particles in that language, making it necessary that this conjunction should often be understood disjunctively,) the vow consisted of two parts: 1. That what person soever met him should be the Lord's, or be dedicated to his service; and, 2. That what beast soever met him, (if clean,) should be offered up for a burnt-offering unto THE LORD.

"This rendering, and this interpretation, is warranted by the Levitical law about vows.

"The וְ נָדַר, or vow, in general, included either persons, beasts, or things, dedicated to the Lord for pious uses; which, if it was a simple vow, was redeemable at certain prices, if the person repented of his vow, and wished to commute it for money, according to the age or sex of the person, Lev. xxvii. 1—3: this was a wise regulation to remedy rash vows. But if the vow was accompanied with חֵרֶם cherem, devotion, it was irredeemable, as in the following case, Lev. xxvii. 28.

"Notwithstanding, no devotion, which a man shall devote unto THE LORD, (either) of man, or beast, or of land of his own property, shall be sold or redeemed. Every thing devoted is most holy unto the Lord.

"Here the three וְ אֵלֶּם, in the original, should necessarily be rendered disjunctively; or, as the last actually is in our translation; because there are three distinct subjects of devotion to be applied to distinct uses, the man to be dedicated to the service of the Lord, as Samuel, by his mother Hannah, 1 Sam. i. 11.; the cattle, if clean, such as oxen, sheep, goats, turtle-doves, or pigeons, to be sacrificed; and if unclean, as camels, horses, asses, to be employed for carrying burdens in the service of the tabernacle, or temple; and the lands to be sacred property.

"This law, therefore, expressly applied in its first branch to Jephthah's case, who had devoted his daughter to the Lord; or, opened his mouth to the Lord, and therefore could not go back; as he declared in his grief, at seeing his daughter, and only child, coming to meet him with timbrels and dances: she was, therefore, necessarily devoted, but with her own consent, to perpetual virginity in the service of the tabernacle, chap. xi. 36, 37.: and such service was customary; for, in the division of the spoils taken in the first Midianite war, of the whole number of captive virgins, THE LORD'S tribute was thirty-two persons, Numb. xxxi. 35—40. This instance appears to be decisive of the nature of her devotion.

"Her father's extreme grief on the occasion, and her requisition of a respite for two months to bewail her virginity, are both perfectly natural. Having no other issue, he could only look forward to the extinction of his name or family; and a state of celibacy, which is reproachful among women every where, was peculiarly so among the Israelites; and was, therefore, no ordinary sacrifice on her part; who, though she generously gave up, could not but regret, the loss of becoming 'a mother in Israel.' And he did with her according to his vow, which he had vowed; and 'she knew no man,' or remained a virgin all her life, ver. 34—39.

"There was also another case of devotion, which was irredeemable, and follows the former, Lev. xxvii. 29. This case differs materially from the former.

"1. It is confined to PERSONS devoted, omitting beasts and lands. 2. It does not relate to private property, as in the foregoing. And, 3. The subject of it was to be utterly destroyed, instead of being most holy unto THE LORD. This law, therefore, related to aliens, or public enemies, devoted to destruction either by God, the people, or by the magistrate. Of all these we have instances in Scripture.

"1. The Amalekites and Canaanites were devoted by God himself. Saul was, therefore, guilty of a breach of this law for sparing Agag, the king of the Amalekites, as Samuel reproached him, 1 Sam. xxv. 23. 'And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord;' not as a sacrifice, according to Voltaire; but as a criminal, whose sword had made many women childless. By this law, the Midianite women, who had been spared in battle, were slain, Numb. xxxi. 14, 17.

"2. In mount Hor, when the Israelites were attacked by Arad, king of the southern Canaanites, who took some of them prisoners, they vowed a vow unto THE LORD that they would utterly destroy the Canaanites and their cities, if the Lord should deliver them into their hand, which THE LORD ratified; whence the place was called Hormah, because the vow was accompanied by cherem, or devotion to destruction, Numb. xxi. 1—3. and the vow was accomplished, Judg. i. 17.

"3. In the Philistine war, Saul adjured the people, and cursed any one who should taste food till the evening. His own son, Jonathan, inadvertently ate a honeycomb, not knowing his father's oath, for which Saul sentenced him to die. But the people interposed, and rescued him, for his public services: thus assuming the power of dispensing, in their collective capacity, with an unreasonable oath. This latter case, therefore, is utterly irrelevant to Jephthah's vow, which did not regard a foreign enemy, or a domestic transgressor, devoted to destruction; but, on the contrary, was a vow of thanksgiving; and, therefore, properly came under the former case. And, that Jephthah could not possibly have sacrificed his daughter (according to the vulgar opinion,) may appear from the following considerations:—

"1. The sacrifice of children to Molech, was an abomination to the Lord, of which, in numberless passages, he expresses his detestation; and it was prohibited by an express law, under pain of death, as a defilement of God's sanctuary, and a profanation of his holy name, Lev. xxii. 2, 3. Such a sacrifice, therefore, unto the Lord himself, must be a still higher abomination; and there is no precedent of any such under the law, in the OLD TESTAMENT.

"2. The case of Isaac, before the law, is irrelevant, for Isaac was not sacrificed; and it was only proposed for a trial of Abraham's faith.

"3. No father, merely by his own authority, could put an offending (much less an innocent) child to death, upon any account, without the sentence of the magistrate, Deut. xxi. 18—21. and the consent of the people, as in Jonathan's case.

"4. The Mischna, or traditional law of the Jews, is pointedly against it, ver. 212. 'If a Jew should devote his son or daughter, his man or maid-servant, who are Hebrews, the devotion would be void; because no man can devote what is not his own, or whose life he has not the absolute disposal of.' These arguments appear to be decisive against the sacrifice; and that Jephthah could not have devoted his daughter to celibacy against her will, is evident from the history, and from the high estimation in which she was always held by the daughters of Israel for her filial duty and her hapless fate; which they celebrated by a regular anniversary commemoration, four days in the year." Judg. xi. 40. New Analysis of Chronology, vol. iii. p. 319.

The celebrated sacrifice of Iphigenia has been supposed, by many learned men, to be a fable founded on this account of Jephthah's daughter; and M. De Lavour, Conférence de la Fable avec l'Histoire Sainte, has thus traced the parallel:—

"The fable of Iphigenia, offered in sacrifice by Agamemnon, her father, sung by so many poets, related after them by so many historians, and celebrated in the Greek and French theatres, has been acknowledged by all those who knew the Sacred Writings, and who have paid a particular attention to them, as a changed copy of the history of the daughter of Jephthah, offered in sacrifice by her father. Let us consider the several parts particularly, and begin with an exposition of the original, taken from the 9th chapter of the book of Judges.

"The sacred historian informs us, that Jephthah, the son of Gilead, was a great and valiant captain. The Israelites, against whom God was irritated, being forced to go to war with the Ammonites, (nearly about the time of the siege of Troy;) assembled themselves together, to oblige Jephthah to come to their succour, and chose him for their captain against the Ammonites. He accepted the command on condition that, if God should give him the victory, they would acknowledge him for their prince. This they promised by oath; and all the people elected him in the city of Mizpeh, in the tribe of Judah. He first sent ambassadors to the king of the Ammonites, to know the reason why he had committed so many acts of injustice, and so many ravages on the coasts of Israel. The other made a pretext of some ancient damages his people had suffered by the primitive Israelites, to countenance the ravages he committed; and would not accord with the reasonable propositions made by the ambassadors of Jephthah.

Having now supplicated the Lord, and being filled with his Spirit, he marched against the Ammonites; and being zealously desirous to acquit himself nobly, and to ensure the success of so important a war, he made a vow to the Lord to offer in sacrifice, or as a burnt-offering, the first thing that should come out of the house to meet him, at his return from victory.

"He then fought with, and utterly discomfited the Ammonites; and returning victorious to his house, God so permitted it, that his only daughter was the first who met him. Jephthah was struck with terror at the sight of her; and, tearing his garments, he exclaimed, Alas! alas! my daughter, thou dost exceedingly trouble me; for I have opened my mouth against thee unto the Lord, and I cannot go back. His daughter, full of courage and piety, understanding the purport of his vow, exhorted him to accomplish what he had vowed to the Lord, which to her would be exceedingly agreeable, seeing the Lord had avenged him of his and his country's enemies; desiring liberty only to go on the mountains with her companions, and to bewail the dishonour with which sterility was accompanied in Israel; because each hoped to see the Messiah born of his or her family. Jephthah could not deny her this request. She accordingly went; and at the end of two months returned, and put herself into the hands of her father, who did with her according to his vow.

"Several of the rabbins, and many very learned Christian expositors, believe that Jephthah's daughter was not really sacrificed; but, that her virginity was consecrated to God, and she separated from all connexion with the world; which, indeed, seems to be implied in the sacred historian's account: And she knew no man. This was a kind of mysterious death, because it caused her to lose all hope of the glory of a posterity from which the Messiah might descend. From this originated the custom, observed afterward in Israel, that on a certain season of the year, the virgins assembled themselves on the mountains to bewail the daughter of Jephthah, for the space of four days. Let us now consider the leading characters of the fable of Iphigenia. According to good chronological reckonings, the time of the one and of the other very nearly agree. The opinion that the name of Iphigenia is taken from the daughter of Jephthah, appears well founded: yea, the conformity is palpable. By a very inconsiderable transposition, Iphigenia makes Iphthygenia, which signifies, literally, the daughter of Jephthah. Agamemnon, who is described as a valiant warrior, and admirable captain, was chosen by the Greeks for their prince and general against the Trojans, by the united consent of all Greece, assembled together at Aulis, in Boeotia.

"As soon as he had accepted the command, he sent ambassadors to Priam, king of Troy, to demand satisfaction for the rape of Helen, of which the Greeks complained. The Trojans refusing to grant this, Agamemnon, to gain over to his side the gods, who appeared irritated against the Greeks, and opposed to the success of their enterprise, after having sacrificed to them, went to consult their interpreter Chalcas, who declared that the gods, and particularly Diana, would not be appeased but by the sacrifice of Iphigenia, the daughter of Agamemnon.

"Cicero, in his Offices, says, that Agamemnon, in order to engage the protection of the gods in his war against the Trojans, vowed to sacrifice to them the most beautiful of all that should be born in his kingdom; and as it was found that his daughter Iphigenia surpassed all the rest in beauty, he believed himself bound by his vow to sacrifice her. Cicero condemns this; rightly judging, that it would have been a lesser evil to have falsified his vow, than to have committed parricide. This account of Cicero, renders the fable entirely conformable to the history.

"Agamemnon was at first struck with and troubled at this order, nevertheless consented to it; yet afterward regretted the loss of his daughter. He is represented by the poets as deliberating, and being in doubt whether the gods could require such a parricide: but, at last, a sense of his duty and honour overcame his paternal affection; and his daughter, who had warmly exhorted him to fulfil his vow to the gods, was led to the altar amidst the lamentations of her companions; as Ovid and Euripides relate, see Met. lib. 13.

"Some authors have thought she really was sacrificed; but others, more humane, say, she was caught up in a cloud by the gods, who, contented with the intended sacrifice, substituted a hind in her place, with which the sacrifice was completed. Dictys Cretensis says, that this animal was substituted to save Iphigenia.

"The chronology of times so remote cannot, in many respects, but be uncertain. Both the Greeks and Romans grant, that there was nothing else than fables before the first Olympiad; the beginning of which was at least four hundred and fifty years after the destruction of Troy, and two hundred and forty years after Solomon. As to the time of Solomon, nothing can be more certain than what is related in the sixth chapter of the First Book of Kings, that from the going out of Egypt, under Moses, till the time in which he began to build the temple, was four hundred and eighty years.

"According to the common opinion, the taking of Troy is placed one hundred and eighty years before the reign of Solomon; but his reign preceded Homer three centuries, according to some learned men, and always at least one century by those who related it lowest. Indeed, there is much uncertainty in fixing the express time in which Homer flourished.

"Pausanias found so much difference concerning this in authors, that he was at a loss how to judge of it. However, it is sufficient for us that it was granted, that Solomon was at least a century before Homer, who wrote more than two centuries after the taking of Troy, and who is the most ancient historian of this famous siege."

NOTES ON CHAPTER XII.

Verse 1. The men of Ephraim gathered themselves together] pyri wayitsack; they called each other to arms; summoning all their tribe and friends to arm themselves to destroy Jephthah and the Gileadites, being jealous lest they should acquire too much power.

Verse 3. I put my life in my hands] I exposed myself to the greatest difficulties and dangers. But whence did this form of speech arise? Probably from a man's laying hold of his sword, spear, or bow. "This is the defender of my life; on this, and my proper use of it, my life depends." When a man draws his sword against his foe, his enemy will naturally aim at his life; and his sword in his hand is then his sole defence. It is now, fight and conquer, or die. Thus Jephthah took his life in his hand. This phrase occurs in some other places of Scripture, see 1 Sam. xix. 5. xxviii. 21. And the words of the conqueror, Isa. lxiii. 5. seem to confirm the above view of the subject: I looked, and there was none to help: and I wondered there was none to uphold: therefore, mine own arm brought salvation unto me: &c. By mine own arm I saved my life, and brought destruction on mine enemies.

Verse 4. And fought with Ephraim] Some commentators suppose that there were two battles in which the Ephraimites were defeated; the first, mentioned in the above clause; and the second, occasioned by the taunting language mentioned in the conclusion of the verse; Ye Gileadites are fugitives of Ephraim.

perceivable by the ear; else it would be impossible to determine the root of a word into which either of these letters entered, except by guessing, unless by pronunciation the sounds were distinct. One to whom the Arabic is vernacular, hearing a native speak, discerns it in a moment; but the delicate enunciation of the characteristic difference between those letters, ^ש sheen, and ^ס samech, and ^ש sheen, and ^ص swad, is seldom caught by a European.
Had there been no distinction between the seen and samech but what the Masoretic point gives now, then ^ס samech would not have been used in the word שכלו sibboleth, but ^ש seen, thus שכלו: but there must have been a very remarkable difference in the pronunciation of the Ephraimites, when instead of שכלו shibboleth, an ear of corn, (see Job xxiv. 24.) they said שכלו sibboleth, which signifies a burden: Exod.
vi. 6. and a heavy burden were they obliged to bear, who could not pronounce this test letter. It is likely that the Ephraimites were, in reference to the pronunciation of sh, as different from the Gileadites as the people in some parts of the north of England are, in the pronunciation of the letter R, from all the other inhabitants of the land. The sound of th cannot be pronounced by the Persians in general; and yet it is a common sound among the Ara-bians. To this day, multitudes of the German Jews cannot pronounce ר th, but put ss in the stead of it: thus, for בית beith, (a house,) they say bess.

Mr. Richardson, in his "Dissertation on the Languages, Literature, and Manners, of the Eastern Nations," prefixed to his Persian and Arabic Dictionary, p. ii. 4to. edition, makes some observations on the different dialects which prevailed in Arabia Felix, the chief of which were the Hamyaret and Koreish; and, to illustrate the point in hand, he produces the following story from the Mohammedan writers:

—"An envoy from one of the feudatory states, having been sent to the tobba, (the sovereign,) that prince, when he was introduced, pronounced the word T'heb, which in the Hemy-aret implied Be seated; unhappily it signified, in the native dialect of the ambassador, precipitate thyself; and he, with a singular deference for the orders of his sovereign, threw himself instantly from the castle wall and perished." Though the Ephraimites had not a different dialect, they had, it appears, a different pronunciation, which confounded, to others, letters of the same organ; and thus produced not only a different sound, but even an opposite meaning. This was a sufficient test to find out an Ephraimite; and he who spake not as he was commanded, at the fords of Jordan, spoke against his own life.

For he could not frame to pronounce it right]
This is not a bad rendering of the original, וְלֹא יָכִין לְדַבֵּר כֵּן וְלֹא יָכִין לְדַבֵּר כֵּן and they did not direct to speak it thus." But instead of יָכִין, yakin, to direct, thirteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. with two ancient editions, read יָבִין, yabin, "they did not understand to speak it thus."

The versions take great latitude in this verse.
The Vulgate makes a paraphrase: Dic ergo Schibboleth, quod interpretatur spica: qui re-spondebat Sibboleth; eadem litera spica exprimere non valens. "Say, therefore, Shibboleth; which, interpreted, is an ear of corn: but he answered Sibboleth, not being able to express an ear of corn by that letter." In my very ancient copy of the Vulgate, probably the editio princeps, there is sebboloth, in the first instance, as the test word; and thebboloth, as the Ephraimite pronunciation. But cebboloth is the reading of the Complutensian Polyglott; and is supported by one of my own MSS., yet the former reading, thebboloth, is found in two of my MSS. The Chaldee has שובלת shubbaltha, for the Gileaditish pronunciation; and סבלת sabbaltha, for that of Ephraim. The Syriac has שבל shebla, and סבל sebla. The Arabic has the same word, with ש sheen, and س seen; and adds, "He said Sebla, for the Ephraimites could not pronounce the letter sheen." These notices, however trivial at first

Verse 8. And after him Ibzan] It appears that during the administration of Jephthah, six years; Ibzan, seven years; Elon, ten years; and Abdon, eight years; in the whole thirty-one years; the Israelites had peace in all their borders: and we shall find, by the following chapter, that, in this time of rest, they corrupted themselves, and were afterward delivered into the power of the Philistines.

1. We find that Ibzan had a numerous family, sixty children; and Abdon had forty sons and thirty grandsons: and that they lived splendidly, which is here expressed by their riding on seventy young asses;—what we could express

by they all kept their carriages: for the riding on fine asses, in those days, was not less dignified than riding in coaches in ours.

2. It does not appear that any thing particular took place in the civil state of the Israelites during the time of these latter judges; nothing is said concerning their administration, whether it was good or bad: nor is any thing mentioned of the state of religion. It is likely that they enjoyed peace without, and their judges were capable of preventing discord and sedition within. Yet, doubtless, God was at work among them, though there were none to record the operations either of his hand or his spirit: but the people who feared him no doubt bore testimony to the word of his grace.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Israelites corrupt themselves, and are delivered into the hands of the Philistines forty years, 1. An angel appears to the wife of Manoah, and foretells the birth of her son, and gives her directions how to treat both herself and her child, who was to be a deliverer of Israel, 2—5. She informs her husband of this transaction, 6, 7. Manoah prays that the angel may reappear: he is heard, and the angel appears to him and his wife, and repeats his former directions concerning the mother and the child, 8—14. Manoah presents an offering to the Lord, and the angel ascends in the flame, 15—20. Manoah is alarmed, but is comforted by the judicious reflections of his wife, 21—23. Samson is born, and begins to feel the influence of the Divine Spirit, 24, 25.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

Verse 1. Delivered them into the hand of the Philistines] It does not appear that after Shamgar, to the present time, the Philistines were in a condition to oppress Israel; or God had not permitted them to do it: but now they have a commission, the Israelites having departed from the Lord. Nor is it evident that the Philistines had entirely subjected the Israelites, as there still appears to have been a sort of commerce between the two people. They had often vexed and made inroads upon them; but they had them not in entire subjection: see chap. xv. 21.

Verse 2. A certain man of Zorah] A town in the tribe of Judah, but afterward given to Dan.

Verse 3. The angel of the LORD] Generally supposed to have been the same that appeared to Moses, Joshua, Gideon, &c. and no other than the Second Person of the ever blessed Trinity.

Verse 4. Beware—drink not wine] As Samson was designed to be a Nazarite from the womb, it was necessary that while his mother carried and nursed him, she should live the life of a Nazarite; neither drinking wine nor any inebriating liquor; nor eating any kind of forbidden meat. See the account of the Nazarite and his vow, in the notes on Numb. vi. 2, &c.

Olymp. 381. 5 For, lo, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son: and no razor shall come on his head; for the child shall be a Nazarite unto God from the womb; and he shall begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines.

6 ¶ Then the woman came and told her husband, saying, A man of God came unto me, and his countenance was like the countenance of an angel of God, very terrible: but I asked him not whence he was, neither told he me his name:

7 But he said unto me, Behold, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; and now drink no wine nor strong drink, neither eat any unclean thing: for the child shall be a Nazarite to God from the womb to the day of his death.

8 ¶ Then Manoah entreated the LORD, and said, O my LORD, let the man of God, which thou didst send, come again unto us, and teach us what we shall do unto the child that shall be born.

9 And God hearkened to the voice of Manoah; and the angel of God came again unto the woman as she sat in the field: but Manoah her husband was not with her.

10 And the woman made haste, and ran, and showed her husband, and said unto him, Behold, the man hath appeared unto me that came unto me the other day.

11 And Manoah arose, and went after his wife, and came to the man, and said unto him, Art thou the man that spakest unto the woman? And he said, I am.

12 And Manoah said, Now let thy words come to pass. ° How shall we order the child? and how shall we do unto him?

13 And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah, Of all that I said unto the woman let her beware.

14 She may not eat of any thing that cometh of the vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing: all that I commanded her let her observe.

15 ¶ And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD, I pray thee, let us detain thee until we shall have made ready a kid for thee.

16 And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah, Though thou detain me, I will not eat of thy bread; and if thou wilt offer a burnt-offering, thou must offer it unto the LORD. For Manoah knew not that he was an angel of the LORD.

17 And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD, What is thy name, that when thy sayings come to pass we may do thee honour?

18 And the angel of the LORD said unto him, Why askest thou thus after my name, seeing it is secret?

Verse 5. He shall begin to deliver Israel] Samson only began this deliverance; for it was not till the days of David that the Israelites were completely redeemed from the power of the Philistines.

Verse 6. But I asked him not whence he was, neither told he me his name] This clause is rendered very differently by the VULGATE, the negative not being omitted: Quem cum interrogassem quis esset, et unde venisset, et quo nomine vocaretur, noluit mihi dicere; sed hoc respondit; "Whom, when I asked who he was, and whence he came, and by what name he was called, would not tell me: but this he said," &c.

The negative is also wanting in the Septuagint, as it stands in the Complutensian Polyglott: Και ἤρῳταν αὐτὸν ποθεν ἐστίν, καὶ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, οὐκ ἀπηγγέλλεν μοι: and "I asked him whence he was, and his name; but he did not tell me." This is also the reading of the Codex Alexandrinus; but the Septuagint, in the London Polyglott, together with the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, read the negative particle with the Hebrew text, I asked not his name. &c.

Verse 9. The angel of God came again] This second appearance of the angel was probably essential to the peace of Manoah, who might have been jealous of his wife, had he not had this proof that the thing was of the Lord.

Verse 15. Until we shall have made ready a kid] Not knowing his quality, Manoah wished to do this as an act of hospitality.

Verse 16. I will not eat of thy bread] As I am a spiritual being, I subsist not by earthly food.

And if thou wilt offer a burnt-offering] Neither shall I receive that homage which belongs to God: thou must, therefore, offer thy burnt-offering to Jehovah.

Verse 18. Seeing it is secret] It was because it was secret that they wished to know it. The angel does not say that it was secret, but הַשְׁתָּהּ hu pelli, it is wonderful: the very character that is given to Jesus Christ, Isa. ix. 6.

Verse 22. We shall surely die, because we have seen God.] See the note on chap. vi. 22.

Verse 23. If the LORD was pleased to kill us, &c.] This is excellent reasoning, and may be of great use to every truly religious mind, in cloudy and dark dispensations of divine providence. It is not likely that God, who has preserved thee so long, borne with thee so long, and fed and supported thee all thy life long, girding thee when thou knewedst him not, is less willing to save and provide for thee and thine now, than he was when probably thou trustedst less in him. He who made, and gave his Son to redeem thee, can never be indifferent to thy welfare; and if he give thee power to pray to and trust in him, is it at all likely that he is now seeking an occasion against thee, in order to destroy thee? Add to this, the very light that shows thee thy wretchedness, ingratitude, and disobedience, is, in itself, a proof that he is waiting to be gracious to thee; and the penitential pangs thou feelest, and thy bitter regret for thy unfaithfulness, argue that the light and fire are of God's own kindling; and are sent to direct and refine, not to drive thee out of the way, and destroy thee. would he have told thee such things of his love, mercy, and kindness, and unwillingness to destroy sinners, as he has told thee in his Sacred Word, if he had been determined not to extend his mercy to thee.

Verse 24. And called his name Samson] The original שִׁמְשׁוֹן Shimshon, which is from the root שָׁמַשׁ shamash, to serve, (whence shemesh, the sun,) probably means either a little sun, or a little servant; and this latter is so likely a name to be imposed on an only son, by maternal fondness, that it leaves but little doubt of the propriety of the etymology.

And the LORD blessed him.] Gave evident proofs that the child was under the peculiar protection of the Most High; causing him to increase daily in stature, and extraordinary strength.

Verse 23. The Spirit of the LORD began to move him] He felt the degrading bondage of his countrymen, and a strong desire to accomplish something for their deliverance. These feelings and motions he had from the Divine Spirit.

Camp of Dan] Probably the place where his parents dwelt, for they were Danites: and the place is supposed to have its name from its being the spot where the Danites stopped when they sent some men of their company to rob Micah of his teraphim, &c. See chap. xviii.

As he had these influences between Zorah and Eshtaol, it is evident that this was while he dwelt at home with his parents; for Zorah was the place where his father dwelt; see ver. 2. Thus God began, from his infancy, to qualify him for the work to which he had called him.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIV.

Verse 1. Went down to Timnath. A frontier town of the Philistines, at the beginning of the lands belonging to the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 57. but afterward given up to Dan, Josh. xix. 41. David took this place from the Philistines; but they again got possession of it in the reign of Ahaz, 2 Chron. xxviii. 18.

Verse 3. Is there never a woman. To marry with any that did not belong to the Israelitish stock was contrary to the law, Exod. xxxiv. 16. Deut. vii. 3. But this marriage of Samson was said to be of the Lord, ver. 4. that is, God permitted it, (for in no other sense can we understand the phrase,) that it might be a means of bringing about the deliverance of Israel.

For she pleaseth me well [כי היא ישרה בעיני ki hi yoshreh beini, "for she is right in my eyes."] This is what is supposed to be a sufficient reason to justify either man or woman in their random choice of wife or husband: the maxim is the same with that of the poet—

"Thou hast no fault, or I no fault can spy; Thou art all beauty, or all blindness I."

When the will has sufficient power, its determinations are its own rule of right. That will should be pure and well directed that says, it shall be so, because I will it should be so. A reason of this kind is similar to that which I have seen in a motto on the brass ordnance of Lewis XIV. ULTIMA RATIO REGUM, the sum of regal logic; i. e. My will, backed by these instruments of destruction, shall be the rule of right and wrong. The rules and principles of this logic are now suspected; and it is not likely

6 And ^k the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him, and he rent him as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand: but he told not his father or his mother what he had done.

7 And he went down, and talked with the woman; and she pleased Samson well.

8 ¶ And after a time he returned to take her, and he turned aside to see the carcass of the lion: and, behold, there was a swarm of bees and honey in the carcass of the lion.

10 ¶ So his father went down unto the woman: and Samson made there a feast; for so used the young men to do.

Verse 5. A young lion roared against him. Came fiercely out upon him, ready to tear him in pieces.

Verse 6. He rent him as he would have rent a kid. Now it is not intimated that he did this by his own natural strength, but by the Spirit of the Lord coming mightily upon him; so that his strength does not appear to be his own, nor to be at his command: his might was, by the will of God, attached to his hair and to his nazareate.

Verse 7. And talked with the woman. That is, concerning marriage; thus forming the espousals.

Verse 8. And after a time. Probably about one year; as this was the time that generally elapsed between espousing and wedding.

A swarm of bees and honey in the carcass. By length of time the flesh had been entirely consumed off the bones, and a swarm of bees had formed their combs within the region of the thorax;—nor was it an improper place, nor was the thing unfrequent, if we may credit ancient writers; the carcasses of slain beasts becoming a receptacle for wild bees. The beautiful episode in the 4th Georgic of Virgil, proves that the ancients believed that bees might be engendered in the body of a dead ox. See particularly Georg. iv. ver. 550.

Verse 10. Samson made there a feast. The marriage feast, when he went to marry his espoused wife.

Verse 11. They brought thirty companions. These are called in Scripture children of the 12 ¶ And Samson said unto them, I will now ¹put forth a riddle unto you: if ye can certainly declare it me ^m within the seven days of the feast, and find it out, then I will give you thirty ^a sheets, and thirty ^o change of garments:

bride-chamber, and friends of the bridegroom. See the whole of this subject particularly illustrated in the observations at the end of John, chap. iii.

Verse 12. I will now put forth a riddle] Probably this was one part of the amusements at a marriage feast; each, in his turn, proposing a riddle, to be solved by any of the rest on a particular forfeit; the proposer forfeiting, if solved, the same which the company must forfeit if they could not solve it.

Thirty sheets] I have no doubt that the Arab hayk, or hyke, is here meant; a dress in which the natives of the East wrap themselves, as a Scottish highlander does in his plaid. In Asiatic countries the dress scarcely ever changes; being nearly the same now that it was 2000 years ago. Mr. Jackson, in his account of the empire of Morocco, thus mentions the Moorish dress: "It resembles," says he, "that of the ancient patriarchs, as represented in paintings; (but the paintings are taken from Asiatic models;) that of the men consists of a red cap and turban, a (kumja) shirt, which hangs outside of the drawers, and comes down below the knee: a (caftan) coat, which buttons close before, and down to the bottom, with large open sleeves; over which, when they go out of doors, they throw carelessly, and sometimes elegantly, a hayk, or garment of white cotton, silk, or wool, five or six yards long, and five feet wide. The Arabs often dispense with the caftan, and even with the shirt, wearing nothing but the hayk." When an Arab does not choose to wrap himself in the hayk, he throws it over his left shoulder, where it hangs till the weather, &c. obliges him to wrap it round him. The hyke is either mean or elegant, according to the quality of the cloth, and of the person who wears it. I have myself seen the natives of Fez, with haykes, or hykes, both elegant and costly. By the changes of garments, it is very likely that the kumja and caftan are meant; or, at least, the caftan; but, most likely, both, for the Hebrew חלצה חליפות chalipoth begadim, changes, or succession, of garments. Samson, therefore, engaged to give or receive thirty haykes, and thirty kumjas and caftans, on the issue of the interpretation or non-interpretation of his riddle: these were complete suits.

Verse 14. And he said unto them] Thus he states or proposes his riddle:

Out of the eater came forth meat,
And out of the strong came forth sweetness.

Instead of strong, the Syriac and Arabic have bitter. I have no doubt that the riddle was in poetry; and perhaps the two hemistichs above preserve its order. This was scarcely a fair then shall ye give me thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. And they said unto him, Put forth thy riddle, that we may hear it.

14 And he said unto them, Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness. And they could not in three days expound the riddle.

riddle: for, unless the fact to which it refers were known, there is no rule of interpretation by which it could be found out. We learn from the Scholiast, on Aristophanes, Vespæ, v. 20. that it was a custom among the ancient Greeks to propose, at their festivals, what were called griphoi, γριφοι, riddles, enigmas, or very obscure sayings, both curious and difficult; and to give a recompense to those who found them out; which generally consisted in either a festive crown, or a goblet full of wine. Those who failed to solve them were condemned to drink a large portion of fresh water, or of wine mingled with sea water, which they were compelled to take down at one draught, without drawing their breath, their hands being tied behind their backs. Sometimes they gave the crown to the deity in honour of whom the festival was made: and if none could solve the riddle, the reward was given to him who proposed it."

Of these enigmas, proposed at entertainments, &c. we have numerous examples in ATHENÆUS, Deipnosoph, lib. x. c. 15. p. 142. edit. Argentarot. and some of them very like this of Samson; for example—

Δίδους τις ουκ ἔδωκεν, οὐδ' ἔχων ἔχει;

Who gives and does not give?
Who has not, and yet has?

This may be spoken of an enigma and its proposer: he gives it, but he does not give the sense; the other has it, but has not the meaning.

Ἐστὶ φύσις θηλεία βρεφὸς σοφούσ' ὑπο κολποῖς

"There is a feminine nature, fostering her children in her bosom; who, although they are dumb, send forth a distinct voice over every nation of the earth, and every sea; to whomsoever they please. It is possible for those who are absent to hear; and for those who are deaf, to hear also."

The relater brings in Sappho, interpreting it thus:—

Θηλεία μὲν οὐ γὰρ ἐστὶ φύσις, ἐπίτολῃ.
Βρεφὸν δ' ἐν αὐτῇ περιφέρει τὰ γράμματα·
Αἴφᾳ δ' οὐτὰ ταῦτα τοῖς πορρωτάτοις,

"The nature, which is feminine, signifies an epistle; and her children whom she bears are alphabetical characters: and these, being dumb, speak and give counsel to any, even at a distance; though he who stands nigh to him who is silently reading, hears no voice."

16 And Samson's wife wept before him, and said, 'Thou dost but hate me, and lovest me not: thou hast put forth a riddle unto the children of my people, and hast not told it me. And he said unto her, Behold, I have not told it my father nor my mother, and shall I tell it thee?

Here is another attributed by the same author to Theodectes:—

Τὴν φύσιν ὅσα γαῖα φέρει τροφὸς οὐδ' ὅσα πόντος
Οὐτε βροτοῖσιν εἶναι γυναικὶν αὐξήσιν ὅμοιον.
Ἄλλ' ἐν μὲν γένεσι πρὸς πορὴν ἐστὶ μέγιστη,
Ἐν δὲ μέσταις ἀκμαίᾳ μίσηται, γῆρα δὲ πρὸς αὐτῇ
Μορφή καὶ μὲνδεὶς μείζων πάλιν ἐστὶν ἀπάντων.

“Neither does the nourishing earth so bear by nature; nor the sea; nor is there among mortals a like increase of parts; for, at the period of its birth it is greatest; but in its middle age it is small; and in its old age, it is again greater in form and size than all.”

This is spoken of a shadow. At the rising of the sun in the east, the shadow of an object is projected illimitably across the earth, toward the west: at noon, if the sun be vertical to that place, the shadow of the object is entirely lost; at sunset, the shadow is projected toward the east, as it was in the morning toward the west.

Here is another from the same author:—

Εἰσι κασιγνήται διτταί, ἀνὴρ μὴ τίς τις
Τὴν ἑτέραν, αὐτὴ δὲ τέκουσ' ὑπὸ τοῦδε τέκνεται.

“There are two sisters, the one of whom begets the other; and she who is begotten produces her who begat her.”

Day and night solve this enigma.

The following I have taken from Theognis:—

Ἦδη γὰρ με κεκλήμεθα θαλαττίος οἰκαδὲ νεκρός, Τεθνηκώς ζωῇ φθεγγόμενος στοματί.

THEOGN. Gnom. in fine.

“A dead seaman calls me to his house;

And, although he be dead, he speaks with a living mouth.”

This dead seaman is a conch, or large shell-fish, of which the poet was about to eat. The mouth by which it spoke signifies its being used as a horn; as it is well known to produce, when opened at the spiral end and blown, a very powerful sound.

Verse 17. And she wept before him] Not through any love to him, for it appears she had none; but to oblige her paramours: and of this he soon had ample proof.

my bed, she would not have been unfaithful to my secret: and you, being her paramours, your interest was more precious to her than that of her husband. She has betrayed me through her attachment to you.

Calmet has properly remarked, in quoting the Septuagint, that to plough with one's heifer, or to plough in another man's ground, are delicate turns of expression, used both by the Greeks and Latins, as well as the Hebrews, to point out a wife's infidelities.

Thus Theognis, Gnom. v. 581.—

Ἐχθαίρω δὲ γυναῖκα περιδρομένην, ἀνδρά τε μαρτυροῦν
Ὅς τὴν ἀλλοτρίην βούλει ἀρουραν αἰετοῦ.

“I detest a woman who gads about; and also a libidinous man: and whosoever wishes to plough in another man's ground.”

Fundum alienum arat, incultum familiarem deserit Plautus.

“He ploughs another's farm, and leaves his own heritage uncultivated.”

Milo domi non est, peregrus at Milone profecto Arva vacat, uxor non minus inde parit. Martial.

There is the same metaphor in the following lines of Virgil:—

Hoc faciunt nimio ne luxu obtusior usus,
Sit genitali arva, sulcosque oblimet inertes.

Geor. iii. v. 135.

In this sense Samson's words were understood by the Septuagint, by the Syriac, and by Rabbi Levi. See BOCHART, Hierozoic, p. 1. lib. ii. cap. 41. col. 406.

The metaphor was a common one; and we need seek for no other interpretation of the words of Samson.

Verse 20. But Samson's wife was given to his companion] This was the same kind of person who is called the friend of the bridegroom, John iii. 29. And it is very likely that she loved this person better than she loved her husband; and went to him as soon as Samson had gone to his father's house at Zorah. She might, however, have thought herself abandoned by him; and, therefore, took another: this appears to have been the persuasion of her father, chap. xv. 2. But her betraying his secret and his interests to his enemies, was a full proof he was not very dear to her; though, to persuade him to the contrary, she shed many crocodile tears: see ver. 16. He could not keep his own secret; and he was fool enough to suppose that another would be more faithful to him than he was to himself. Multitudes complain of the treachery of friends betraying their secrets, &c. never considering that they themselves have been their first betrayers, in confiding to others what they pretend to wish should be a secret to the whole world! If a man never let his secret out of his own bosom, it is impossible that he should ever be betrayed.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

Verse 1. Visited his wife with a kid] On her betraying him, he had, no doubt, left her in great disgust. After some time his affection appears to have returned; and, taking a kid, or perhaps a fawn, as a present, he goes to make reconciliation, and finds her given to his bride-man: probably the person to whom she betrayed his riddle.

Verse 2. Thou hadst utterly hated her] As he was conscious she had given him great cause so to do.

Her younger sister] The father appears to have been perfectly sincere in this offer.

Verse 4. Went and caught three hundred foxes] There has been much controversy concerning the meaning of the term שׁוּאִלִּים shu'alim; some supposing it to mean foxes, or jackals; and others, handsful, or sheaves of corn. Much of the force of the objections against the common version will be diminished by the following considerations:

1. Foxes, or jackals, are common and gregarious in that country.

2. It is not hinted that Samson collected them alone; he might have employed several hands in this work.

3. It is not said he collected them all in one day; he might have employed several days, as well as many persons, to furnish him with these means of vengeance.

4. In other countries, where ferocious beasts were less numerous, great multitudes have been exhibited at once. Sylla, in a public show to the Roman citizens, exhibited one hundred lions; Cæsar, four hundred; and Pompey, nearly six hundred. The emperor Probus let loose in the theatre, at one time, one thousand ostriches, one thousand stags, one thousand wild boars, one thousand does, and a countless multitude of other wild animals: at another time he exhibited one hundred leopards from Libya, one hundred from Syria, and three hundred bears. See Flavius Vopiscus, in the life of Probus, cap. xix. beginning with Dedit Romanis etiam voluptates, &c.

That foxes, or the creature called shual, were plenty in Judea, is evident, from their frequent mention in Scripture, and from several places bearing their name. 1. It appears they were on fire, he let them go into the standing corn of the Philistines, and burnt up both the shocks, and also the standing corn, with the vineyards and olives.

6 Then the Philistines said, Who hath done this? And they answered, Samson, the son-in-law of the Timnite, because he had taken his wife, and given her to his companion. ⁸ And the Philistines came up, and burnt her and her father with fire.

so numerous, that even their cubs ruined the vineyards, see Cant. ii. 15. Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil our vines. Jeremiah complains that the foxes had occupied the mountains of Judea, Lam. v. 18. They are mentioned as making incursions into enclosures. &c. Neh. iv. 3. Ezekiel compares the numerous false prophets to these animals, chap. xiii. 4. In Josh. xv. 28. we find a place called Hazer Shual, the court of the foxes: and in chap. xix. 42. a place called Shaalabim, “the foxes;” no doubt from the number of those animals in that district. And mention is made of the land of Shual, or of the fox, 1 Sam. xiii. 17.

The creature called shual is represented by travellers and naturalists who have been in Judea, as an animal between a wolf and a fox. Hasselquist, who was on the spot, and saw many of them, calls it the little eastern fox. They are frequent in the East; and often destroy infirm persons and children.

Dr. Kennicott, however, objects to the common interpretation; and gives reasons, some of which are far from being destitute of weight. “The three hundred foxes,” says he, “caught by Samson, have been so frequently the subject of banter and ridicule, that we should consider whether the words may not admit a more rational interpretation: for, besides the improbability arising here from the number of these foxes, the use made of them is also very strange. If these animals were tied tail to tail, they would probably pull contrary ways, and consequently stand still; whereas a firebrand, tied to the tail of each fox singly, would have been far more likely to answer the purpose here intended. To obviate these difficulties, it has been well remarked, that the word שְׁיָלִים shualim, here translated foxes, signifies also handsful, Ezek. xiii. 19. handsful of barley, if we leave out that one letter vau, which has been inserted or omitted elsewhere, almost at pleasure. No less than seven Hebrew MSS. want that letter here, and read שְׁיָלִים shoalim. Admitting this version, we see that Samson took three hundred handsful, or sheaves of corn, and one hundred and fifty firebrands; that he turned the sheaves end to end, and put a firebrand between the two ends, in the midst; and then, setting the brands on fire, sent the fire into the standing corn of the Philistines. The same word is now used twice in one chapter, (Ezek. xiii. 4, and 19.) in the former verse signifying foxes, in the latter, handsful: and in

The reasoning of Dr. Kennicott, in the first part of this criticism has already been answered; other parts shall be considered below. Though there are seven MSS. which agree in the reading contended for by Dr. Kennicott, yet all the versions are on the other side. I see no improbability in the common version.

Turned tail to tail] Had he put a firebrand to each, which Dr. Kennicott thinks more reasonable, the creature, naturally terrified at a fire, would have instantly taken to cover; and thus the design of Samson would have been frustrated; but tying two of them together by their tails, they would frequently thwart each other in running, pull hither and thither, and thus make the greater devastation. Had he tied them all together, the confusion would have been so great that no execution could have been done.

Verse 6. Burnt her and her father] This was probably done to appease Samson: as they saw he had been unjustly treated both by his wife and her father; therefore they destroyed them both, that they might cause his wrath to cease from them. And this indeed seems intimated in the following verse: And Samson said—Though ye have done this, yet will I be avenged of you; that is, I am not yet satisfied ye have done me great wrongs, I must have proportionate redress; then I shall rest satisfied.

Verse 8. He smote them hip and thigh] This also is variously understood; but the general meaning seems plain; he appears to have had no kind of defensive weapon, therefore he was obliged to grapple with them; and, according to the custom of wrestlers, trip up their feet and then bruise them to death. Some translate heaps upon heaps; others, he smote horsemen and footmen; others, he wounded them from their legs to their thighs, &c. &c. See the different versions. Some think, in their running away from him, he kicked them down, and then trod them to death; thus his leg or thigh, was against their hip: hence the expression.

The top of the rock Etam.] It is very likely that this is the same place as that mentioned 1 Chron. iv. 32.; it was in the tribe of Simeon and on the borders of Dan; and probably a fortified place.

And they answered, To 11 Then three thousand men of Judah went to the top of the rock Etam; and said to Samson, Knowest thou not that the Philistines are ^r rulers over us ? what is this that thou hast done unto us ? And he said unto them, As they did unto me, so have I done unto deliver thee into the hand of the Philistines. And Samson said unto them, Swear unto me, that ye will not fall upon me yourselves.

13 And they spake unto him, saying,
No; but we will bind thee fast, and deliver thee into their hand: but surely we will not kill thee. And they bound him with two new cords, and brought him up from the rock.

14 ¶ And when he came unto Lehi, the Philistines shouted against him: and

It seems they did not wish to come to an open rupture with the Israelites; provided they would deliver up him who was the cause of their disasters.

Verse 11. Three thousand men of Judah went]
It appears evidently from this that Samson was strongly posted; and they thought that no less than three thousand men were necessary to reduce him.

Verse 12. That ye will not fall upon me yourselves.] He could not bear the thought of contending with, and slaying his own countrymen; for there is no doubt that he could have as easily rescued himself from their hands, as from those of the Philistines.

Verse 13. They bound him with two new cords] Probably his hands with one, and his legs with the other.

Verse 14. When he came unto Lehi] This was the name of the place to which they brought him, either to put him to death, or keep him in perpetual confinement.

Shouted against him] His capture was a matter of public rejoicing.

Verse 15. He found a new jaw-bone of an ass]
I rather think that the word new teriah, which we translate new, and the margin moist, should be understood as signifying the tabid, or putrid state of the ass from which this jaw-bone was taken. He found there a dead ass, in a state of putrefaction; on which account he could the more easily separate the jaw from its integuments: this was a circumstance proper to be recorded by the historian, and a mark of the providence of God. But, were we to under-away the jaw-bone out of his hand, and called that place ^r Ramath-lehi.

18 ¶ And he was sore athirst, and called on the LORD, and said, ^s Thou stand it of a fresh jaw-bone, very lately separated from the head of an ass, the circumstance does not seem worthy of being recorded.

With the jaw-bone of an ass, heaps upon heaps] I cannot see the propriety of this rendering of the Hebrew words בלתי החמור חמור חמור bele-chi huchamor, chamor, chamoratayim: I believe it should be translated thus:—

“With the jaw-bone of this ass, an ass (the foal) of two asses;

“With the jaw-bone of this ass I have slain a thousand men.”

This appears to have been a triumphal song on the occasion; and the words are variously rendered both by the versions and by expositors.

Verse 17. Ramath-lehi.] The lifting up, or casting away, of the jaw-bone. Lehi was the name of the place before; Ramath was now added to it here: he lifted up the jaw-bone against his enemies, and slew them.

Verse 18. I die for thirst] The natural consequence of the excessive fatigue he had gone through in this encounter.

Verse 19. God clave a hollow place that was in the jaw אשר בלתי asher balechi, “that was in Lehi:” that is, there was a hollow place in this Lehi, and God caused a fountain to spring up in it. Because the place was hollow, it was capable of containing the water that rose up in it, and thus of becoming a well.

Verse 20. He judged Israel—twenty years. In the margin it is said, He seems to have judged southwest Israel during twenty years of their servitude of the Philistines, chap. xiii. 1. Instead of שנים עשרים esrim shanah, "twenty years," the Jerusalem Talmud has שנים ארבעים arbaim shanah, "forty years;" but this reading is not acknowledged by any MS. or version. According to Calmêt, the twenty years of the judicature of Samson began the eighteenth year of the subjection of Israel to the Philistines; and these twenty years are included in the judicature of the high priest Eli.

THE burning of the Philistines' corn by the means of foxes and firebrands, is a very remarkable circumstance; and there is a story told by Ovid, in the 4th book of his Fasti, that bears a striking similitude to this; and is supposed by some learned men to allude to Samson and his foxes. The poet is at a loss to account for this custom; but brings in an old man of Carseolum, with what must have appeared to himself a very unsatisfactory solution. The passage begins as follows:—

*Tertia post Hyadas cum luxerit orta remotas
Carcere partitos Circus habebit equos.
Cur igitur missæ vinetis ardentia tædis
Terga ferant vulpes, causa docenda mihi?
Vid. Ovid. Pastor. lib. iv. ver. 679.*

The substance of the whole account, which is too long to be transcribed, is this: it was a custom in Rome, celebrated in the month of April, to let loose a number of foxes in the circus, with lighted flambeaux on their backs; and the Roman people took pleasure in seeing these animals run about till roasted to death by the flames with which they were enveloped. The poet wishes to know what the origin of this custom was; and is thus informed by an old man of the city of Carseolum: "A frolicsome young lad, about ten years of age, found a fox near a thicket, who had stolen away many fowls from the neighbouring roosts. Having enveloped his body with hay and straw, he set it on fire, and let the fox loose. The animal, in order to avoid the flames, took to the standing corn which was then ready for the sickle; and the wind driving the flames with double violence, the crops were every where consumed. Though this transaction is long since gone by, the commemoration of it still remains; for, by a law of this city, every fox that is taken is burnt to death. Thus the nation awards to the foxes the punishment of being burnt alive, for the destruction of the ripe corn formerly occasioned by one of these animals."

Both Serrarius and Bochart reject this origin of the custom given by Ovid; and insist that the custom took its rise from the burning of the Philistines' corn by Samson's foxes. The origin ascribed to the custom by the Carseolian, they consider as too frivolous and unimportant to be commemorated by a national festival. The time of the observation does not accord with the time of harvest about Rome, and in Italy; but it perfectly accords with the time of harvest in Palestine, which was at least as early as April. Nor does the circumstance of the fox wrapped in hay; which being set on fire, and he let loose, bear any proper resemblance to the foxes let loose in the circus, with burning brands on their backs.

These learned men, therefore, conclude, that it is much more natural to suppose that the Romans derived the custom from Judea; where, probably, the burning of the Philistines' corn might, for some time, have been annually commemorated.

The whole account is certainly very singular; and has not a very satisfactory solution in the old man's tale, as related by the Roman poet.

All public institutions have had their origin in facts; and if, through the lapse of time, or loss of records, the original facts be lost; we may legitimately look for them in cases where there is so near a resemblance as in that above.

CHAPTER XVI.

Samson comes to Gaza; they lay wait for him; he rises by night, and carries away the city gates, 1—3. Falls in love with Delilah, 4. The lords of the Philistines promise her money if she will obtain from Samson the secret in which his strength lay, 5. By various artifices, she at last obtains this; and communicates it to the Philistines, who seize him, bind, put out his eyes, and cause him to grind in the prison-house, 6—21. At a public festival to Dagon, he is brought out to make sport; when, being weary, he requests to be placed between the two pillars which supported the roof of the house, on which three thousand men and women were stationed to see him make sport, 22—27. He prays to God to strengthen him, and pulls down the pillars; by which (the house falling) both himself, the lords of the Philistines, and a vast multitude of the people, are slain, 28—30. His relatives come and take away his body, and bury it, 31.

Gaza was situated near the Mediterranean sea, and was one of the most southern cities of Palestine. It has been supposed by some to have derived its name from the treasures deposited there by Cambyzes, king of the Persians; because, they say, Gaza, in Persian, signifies treasure: so Pomponius Mela, and others. But it is more likely to be a Hebrew word, and this city to have derived its name, from azatha, from azah, strength; it being a strong or well-fortified place.

The Hebrew yain, in this word, is, by the Septuagint, the Arabic, and the Vulgate, rendered G; hence, instead of azatha, with a strong guttural breathing, we have Gaza, a name by which this town could not be recognised by an ancient Hebrew.

Verse 2. They compassed him in] They shut up all the avenues, secured the gates, and set persons in ambush near them, that they might attack him on his leaving the city early the next morning.

Verse 3. Took the doors of the gate] Though Samson was a very strong man, yet we do not find that he was a giant; consequently, we may conjecture that the gates of the city were not very large, as he took at once the doors, the two posts, and the bar with him. The cities of those days would appear to disadvantage among modern villages.

A hill—before Hebron] Possibly there were two Hebrons: it could not be the city generally understood by the word Hebron, as that was about twenty miles distant from Gaza; unless we suppose that the gates of the city were not very large, as he took at once the doors, the two posts, and the bar with him. The cities of those days would appear to disadvantage among modern villages.

Verse 4. He loved a woman in the valley of Sorek] Some think Samson took this woman for his wife; others, that he had her as a concubine. It appears she was a Philistine; and, however strong his love was for her, she seems to have had none for him. He always matched improperly; and he was cursed in all his matches. Where the valley, or brook, of Sorek was, is not easy to be ascertained. Eusebius and Jerom say, it lay southward of Eleutheropoli—but where was Eleuthropolis? Ancient writers take all their measurements from this city; but, as it is nowhere mentioned in the Scriptures, it is impossible to fix its station, for we know not its ancient name.

Verse 5. See wherein his great strength lieth] They saw that his stature was not remarkable; and that, nevertheless, he had most extraordinary strength; therefore they supposed that it was the effect of some charm, or amulet. The lords of the Philistines were the five following: Gaza, Gath, Askalon, Ekron, and Ashdod. All these considered Samson as a public enemy; and they promise this bad woman a large sum of money if she will obtain from him the important secret wherein his strength lay, that, depriving him of this supernatural power, they might be able to reduce him to bondage.

Verse 7. Seven green withes] That is, any kind of pliant, tough wood, twisted in the form of a cord, or rope. Such are used in many countries, formed out of osiers, hazle, &c. And in Ireland, very long and strong ropes are made of the fibres of bog wood, or the larger roots of the fir, which is often digged up in the bogs, or mosses, of that country. But the Septuagint, by translating the Hebrew לחים yetherim lachim by νευραις ὑψαις, and the Vulgate by nervicis fimbis, understand these bonds to be cords made of the nerves of cattle; or perhaps rather out of raw hides: this also makes an exceeding strong cord. In some countries they take the skin of the horse, cut it lengthwise from the hide into thongs about two inches broad; and, after having laid them in salt for some time, take them out for use. This practice is frequent in the country parts of Ireland; and both customs, the wooden cord, and that made of the raw or green hide, are among the most ancient perhaps in the world. Among the Irish peasantry this latter species of cord is called the tug; and is chiefly used for agricultural purposes; particularly for drawing the 9 Now there were men lying in wait, abiding with her in the chamber: And she said unto him, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he brake the withes, as a thread of tow is broken when it toucheth the fire. So his strength was not known.

10 And Delilah said unto Samson, Behold, thou hast mocked me, and told me lies: now tell me, I pray thee, wherewith thou mightest be bound.

11 And he said unto her, If they bind me fast with new ropes^m that never were occupied, then shall I be weak, and be as another man.

12 Delilah therefore took new ropes, and bound him therewith, and said unto him, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And there were liers in wait abiding in the chamber. And he brake them off his arms like a thread:

Verse 9. Men lying in wait] They probably did not appear, as Samson immediately broke his bonds when this bad woman said, The Philistines be upon thee.

Verse 11. If they bind me fast with new ropes] Samson wishes to keep up the opinion which the Philistines held: viz. that his mighty strength was the effect of some charm; and therefore he says, Seven green withes which had not been dried; new ropes that were never occupied; weave the seven locks of my hair with the web, &c. the green withes, the new ropes, and the number seven, are such matters as would naturally be expected in a charm or spell.

Verse 13. The seven locks of my head] Probably Samson had his long hair plaited into seven divisions: and, as his vow of a Nazarite obliged him to wear his hair, so seven being a number of perfection among the Hebrews, his hair being divided into seven locks, might more particularly point out the perfection designed by his Nazarite state.

Every person must see that this verse ends abruptly, and does not contain a full sense. Houbigant has particularly noticed this, and corrected the text from the Septuagint, the reading of which I shall here subjoin: Εαν ὕψαις τὰς ἑπτὰ σείρας τῆς κεφαλῆς μου συν τῷ διασμάτι, καὶ ἐγκρούσῃς τῷ πάσσαλῳ εἰς τὸν στήχον, καὶ ἐσομαι ὡς εἰς τὸν ἀνθρώπου ασθενῆς. Καὶ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ κοιμασθαι αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἔλαβε Δαλὶδὰ τὰς ἑπτὰ σείρας τῆς κεφαλῆς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ὕψαιεν ἐν τῷ διασμάτι, καὶ ἐπῆξεν τῷ πάσσαλῳ εἰς τὸν στήχον.—If thou shalt weave the seven locks of my head with the web, and shalt fasten them with the pin in the wall, I shall become weak, like other men: and so it was, that, when he slept, Dalida took the seven locks of his head, and wove them with the web, and fastened it with the pin to the wall, and said unto him, &c. All the words printed here in italic, are wanting in the present Hebrew copies; but are preserved in the Septuagint, and are most obviously necessary to complete the sense: else Delilah appears to do something that she is not ordered to do, and to omit what she was commanded.

Verse 16. His soul was vexed unto death] What a consummate fool was this strong man! Might he not have seen, from what already took place, that Delilah intended his ruin? After trifling with her, and lying thrice, he at last commits to her his fatal secret; and thus became a traitor to himself and to his God. Well may we adopt the sensible observation of Calmet on this passage:—La faiblesse du cœur de Samson, dans toute cette histoire, est encore plus étonnante que la force de son corps. "The weakness of Samson's heart, in the whole of this history, is yet more astonishing than the strength of his body."

Verse 17. If I be shaven, then my strength will go from me] The miraculous strength of Samson must not be supposed to reside either in his hair, or in his muscles; but in that relation in which he stood to God, as a Nazarite; such a person being bound, by a solemn vow, to walk in a strict conformity to the laws of his Maker. It was a part of the Nazarite's vow to permit no razor to pass on his head; and his long hair was the mark of his Nazareate, and of his vow to God. When Samson permitted his hair to be shorn off, he renounced and broke his Nazar vow; in consequence of which God

out of his sleep, and said, I will go out was departed from him.

21 But the Philistines took him, and put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and bound him with fetters of brass; and he did grind in the prison-house.

22 Howbeit the hair of his head began to grow again, after he was shaven.

23 Then the lords of the Philistines gathered them together for to offer a great sacrifice unto Dagon their god, and to rejoice: for they said, Our god hath delivered Samson our enemy into our hand.

24 And when the people saw him, they praised their god; for they said; Our god hath delivered into our hands our enemy, and the destroyer of our country, which slew many of us.

25 And it came to pass, when their hearts were merry, that they said, Call for Samson, that he may make us their burgh, (city,) and shut him up in prison, and made him grind at their hand-querne." So late as half a century ago, I have seen these querns or hand-mills in these kingdoms.

Verse 22. The hair of his head began to grow again. And may we not suppose that, sensible of his sin and folly, he renewed his Nazar vow to the Lord; in consequence of which his supernatural strength was again restored?

Verse 23. Unto Dagon their god. Diodorus Siculus describes their god thus: Το μὲν προσωπον εχει γυναικος, το δ' αλλο σωμα παν ιχθυος. "If had the head of a woman, but all the rest of the body resembled a fish." Dagon was called Derceto among the heathens.

Horace, in the following piece, especially in the third and fourth lines, seems to have in view the image of Dagon.

Humano capiti cervicem pictor equinam

Desinat in piscem mulier formosa superne;

Verse 25. Call for Samson, that he may make us sport. What the sport was we cannot tell; probably it was an exhibition of his prodigious strength. This seems to be intimated by what is said, ver. 22. of the restoration of his hair; and the exertions which he was obliged to make will account for the weariness which gave him the pretence to ask for leave to lean against the pillars. Some think he was brought out to be a laughing-stock; and that he was variously insulted by the Philistines: hence the version of the Septuagint, καὶ ἀπαρριζον αὐτον, and they buffeted him. Josephus, Antiq.

Prov. 7. 26, 27.—t Numb. 14. 9, 42, 43. Josh. 7. 12. 1 Sam. 16. 14. & 18. 12. & 28. 15, 16. 2 Chron. 15. 2.

abandoned him; and, therefore, we are told, in ver. 20. that the Lord was departed from him.

Verse 19. She began to afflict him. She had probably tied his hands, slyly, while he was asleep; and after having cut off his hair, she began to insult him, before she called the Philistines, to try whether he were really reduced to a state of weakness. Finding he could not disengage himself, she called the Philistines; and he, being alarmed, rose up, thinking he could exert himself as before, and shake himself; i. e. disengage himself from his bonds and his enemies:—but he wist not that the Lord was departed from him; for, as Delilah had cut off his locks while he was asleep, he had not yet perceived that they were gone.

Verse 21. Put out his eyes. Thus was the lust of the eye, in looking after, and gazing on strange women, punished. As the Philistines did not know that his strength might not return, they put out his eyes, that he might never be able to plan any enterprise against them.

He did grind in the prison-house. Before the invention of wind and water-mills, the grain was at first bruised between two stones; afterward ground in hand-mills. This is practised in China, and in different parts of the East, still; and women and slaves are the persons who are obliged to turn these mills.

Such instruments were anciently used in this country, and called querns, from the Anglo-Saxon lweorn, and lweorn, Cweorn, and Cwyrn, which has the signification of a mill; hence lweorn stan Cweorn stan, a millstone: and as quern conveys the notion of grinding, hence lweornstod, Cweornsteth, the dentes molares, or grinders, in the jaws of animals. This clause of the verse is thus translated in the Saxon Octateuch:—And þa Philistea gefengon hme fona —J geleobdon hme afege—to heofa bryce. J on eceapterne belucon-heton hme gundan æt hwa handþeþpne. "And the Philistines laid their fangs, (seized) him soon, and led him away to sport. And they called for Samson out of the prison-house; and he made them sport: and they set him between the pillars.

26 ¶ And Samson said unto the lad that held him by the hand, Suffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the house standeth, that I may lean upon them.

27 Now the house was full of men and women; and all the lords of the Philistines were there: and there were upon the roof about three thousand men and women, that beheld while Samson made sport.

Jud. lib. v. c. 8. s. 12. says, He was brought out, ὅπως ἐνδοξάσιν αὐτὸν παρὰ τοῦ ποτοῦ, that they might insult him in their cups.

Verse 27. Now the house was full of men] It was either the prison-house, house of assembly, or a temple of Dagon, raised on pillars, open on all sides, and flat-roofed, so that it could accommodate a multitude of people on the top.

Verse 28. Samson called unto the Lord] It was in consequence of his faith in God, that he should be strengthened to overthrow his enemies, and the enemies of his country, that he is mentioned, Heb. xi. among those who were remarkable for their faith.

Verse 29. The two middle pillars upon which the house stood] Much learned labour has been lost on the attempt to prove, that a building like this might stand on two pillars. But what need of this? There might have been as many pillars here, as were in the temple of Diana, at Ephesus; and yet the two centre pillars be the key of the building: these being once pulled down, the whole house would necessarily fall.

Verse 30. So the dead which he slew] We are informed that the house was full of men and women; and about three thousand of both sexes on the top: now, as the whole house was pulled down; consequently, the principal-part of all these was slain; and among them we find there were the lords of the Philistines. The death of these, with so many of the inferior chiefs of the people, was such a crush to the Philistine ascendancy, that they troubled Israel no more for several years; and did not even attempt to hinder Samson's relatives from taking away and burying his dead body.

Verse 31. He judged Israel twenty years.] It is difficult to ascertain the time of Samson's magistracy, and the extent of country over which he presided. His jurisdiction seems to have been very limited; and to have extended no farther than over those parts of the tribe of listines for my two eyes. 29 And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars upon which the house stood, and on which it was borne up, of the one with his right hand, and of the other with his left.

30 And Samson said, Let me die with the Philistines. And he bowed himself with all his might; and the house fell upon the lords, and upon all the people that were therein. So the dead which he slew at his death were more than they which he slew in his life.

31 Then his brethren and all the house of his father came down, and took him, and brought him up, and buried him between Zorah and Eshtaol, in the burying-place of Manoah his father. And he judged Israel twenty years.

Dan contiguous to the lapd of the Philistines. This is what our margin intimates on ver. 20. of chap. xv. Many suppose that both he and Eli were contemporaries; Samson being rather an executor of the divine justice upon the enemies of his people, than an administrator of the civil and religious laws of the Hebrews. Allowing Eli and Samson to have been contemporaries, this latter part might have been entirely committed to the care of Eli.

1. SAMSON does not appear to have left any posterity. His amours with the different women mentioned in the history were unproductive as to issue: had he married, according to the laws of his country, he would have been both a more useful, and a more happy man; and not have come to a violent death.

2. We seldom find much mental energy dwelling in a body that in size and bulk greatly surpasses the ordinary pitch of man: and wherever there are great physical powers, we seldom find proportionate moral faculties. Samson was a man of a little mind, a slave to his passions, and the wretched dupe of his mistresses. He was not a great, though he was a strong man; and even his muscular force would have been lost or spent in beating the air, had he not been frequently under the impulse of the Divine Spirit. He often got himself into broils and difficulties, from which nothing but supernatural interposition could have saved him. His attacks upon the Philistines were never well planned, as he does not appear to have asked counsel from God: indeed, he seems to have consulted nothing but his own passions; particularly those of inordinate love and revenge; and the last effort of his extraordinary strength was not to avenge his people for the oppressions which they had suffered under the Philistinian yoke, or to avenge the quarrel of God's covenant against the enemies of his truth; but to be avenged of the Philistines for the loss of his two eyes.

3. Samson is a solemn proof how little corporeal prowess avails, where judgment and prudence are wanting; and how dangerous all such gifts are in the hands of any man, who has not his passions under proper discipline, and the fear of God continually before his eyes.

4. A parallel has been often drawn between Samson and our blessed Lord, of whom he has been supposed to be a most illustrious type. By a fruitful imagination, and the torture of words and facts, we may force resemblances every where; but that not one will naturally result from a cool comparison between Jesus Christ and Samson, is most demonstrable. A more exceptionable character is not to be found in the Sacred Oracles. It is no small dishonour to Christ to be thus compared. There is no resemblance in the qualities of Samson's mind, there is none in his moral conduct, that can entitle him even to the most distant comparison with the chaste, holy, benevolent, and immaculate Jesus. That man dishonours the law of unchangeable righteousness, who endeavours to make Samson a type of any thing or person that can be called holy, just, and pure.

5. Those who compare him to Hercules, have been more successful. Indeed, the heathen god of strength appears to have been borrowed from the Israelitish judge: but if we regard what is called the Choice of Hercules, his preference of virtue to pleasure; we shall find that the heathen is, morally speaking, vastly superior to the Jew. M. De Lavaur, in his Conférence de la Fable avec l'Histoire Sainte, has traced the parallel between Hercules and Samson in the following manner, of which what follows is an abridged, but literal translation. It is taken from vol. ii. page 1, &c. of the above curious work.

"Hercules was figured by the poets as supernatural, both in his birth and actions; and was, therefore, received by the people as a god of the first order. They attributed to him the miracles wrought by several illustrious chiefs among the people of God, which they found described in the Sacred Oracles, more ancient than their most ancient accounts; or which they had learned by tradition, and their commerce with the Egyptians and Phœnicians, who were spread through various countries, but particularly in Greece. It is also to the time of these chiefs, and to the government of the Israelites by their judges, that the heroes and grand events of fable owe their origin; to which time, indeed, they are referred by the common consent of authors, sacred and profane.

"Every ancient nation, which had writers who left monuments of their country's glory, had a Hercules of its own, forged on the same plan. Varro reckons more than forty, and Cicero reckons six. (Book iii. De Naturâ Deorum.)

"Herodotus (book ii. entitled Euterpe) only speaks of the Egyptian and Greek Hercules. Although a Greek himself, this father of history, as Cicero calls him, who lived the nearest of any of these writers to the period he describes, informs us, that Greece had borrowed its Hercules from Egypt; and that Amphitryon, his father, and Alcmena, his mother, were both Egyptians: so that, notwithstanding the desire the Greeks had to make Hercules a native of their country, they could not conceal his origin, which was either Egyptian or Hebrew; for the Greeks and Phœnicians looked upon the Israelites, who were settled in Canaan, or Phœnicia, as Egyptians, whose ancestors, after residing in Egypt some centuries, had certainly come from that country.

"M. Jaquelot, in his 'Treatise on the existence of God,' believes that the Tyrian Hercules, who was the most ancient, was no other than Joshua. But St. Augustin (City of God, book xviii. c. 19.) has made it appear that it was after Samson (because of his prodigious and incomparable strength) that they forged their Hercules: first in Egypt, afterward in Phœnicia, and, lastly, in Greece; each of whose writers has united in him all the miraculous actions of the others. In fact, it appears that Samson, judge of the Israelites, from about A. M. 2867 to 2887, celebrated in the Book of Judges, and mentioned by Josephus, in his history, is the original and essential Hercules of fable; and although the poets have united these several particulars, drawn from Moses and Joshua, and have added their own inventions; yet the most capital and considerable belong to Samson, and are distinguished by characters so peculiar to him, as to render him easily discerned throughout the whole.

"In Hebrew, the name of Samson שמסון signifies the sun, and in Syriac (servitium vel ministerium ejus) subjection to some one; servitude. Macrobius says, that the name of Hercules signifies only the sun; for he adds, in Greek, Heracles means, it is the glory of the air; or, the light of the sun. The Greeks and Egyptians have exactly followed the Syriac signification, by imposing on their Hercules, during the whole of his life, a subjection to Eurystheus in all his exploits, and who appointed him his famous enterprises. This necessity they attribute to fate, and the law of his birth. Having spoken of his name, we will now examine the circumstances of his birth, as mentioned in the Sacred Writings, Judges ch. xiii. and in the History of the Jews, ch. x.

"Manoah, of the tribe of Dan, had married a woman who was barren, which led them to pray earnestly that the Lord would bless them with an offspring. One day, this woman being alone, an angel appeared to her, and told her he was sent by God to inform her she should have a son, of the most extraordinary strength, who was to raise the glory of their nation, and to humble their enemies. Upon the arrival of her husband, she imparted to him the message and discourse of the angel. Some time after, this heavenly messenger showed himself to them both, as they were in the house together; and ascended up to heaven in their sight, after having confirmed the promises made before to the woman, who soon after became pregnant, and was, in due time, delivered of Samson.

"The singular birth of Hercules, in fable, is similar to the above account, with the trifling alteration, taken from the ideas the poets entertained of their gods. Amphitryon, the most considerable person, and the chief of the Thebans, had married Alcmena, whom he loved to distraction, but had not any children by her. Jupiter, desirous of making her the mother of Hercules, repaired to Alcmena one night, in the absence, and under the figure of her husband. On Amphitryon's return, his wife said she had seen him before, on such a night, mentioning the visit she had received. Amphitryon, transported with jealousy, and enraged with his wife, whatever good opinion he might entertain of her virtue, would neither be appeased nor consoled, till Jupiter appeared to vindicate her conduct : and, in order to convince Amphytrion of his being a god, visibly ascended up to heaven, after informing him, that he alone had visited Alcmena; assuring him of her virtue, and promising him a son, who was to be distinguished for his strength; whose glory was to confer honour on his race and family; who was to humble their enemies; and who, finally, was to be immortal.

“The Spirit of God, with which Samson was from the very first endowed, caused him, even in his youth, to effect prodigies of strength. He once met with a furious young lion, which attacked him: Samson, then unarmed, immediately rent the lion in pieces, as if it had been a lamb; and resolving to revenge himself upon the Philistines, who had grievously afflicted the children of Israel, he slew vast numbers of them at different times; weakened them excessively; and thus began to deliver Israel out of the hands of their enemies, as the angel had predicted.

“Fable, likewise, causes Hercules to perform exploits requiring prodigious strength; but, as its exaggerations are beyond all bounds, it attributes to him, while still an infant, the strangling enormous serpents, which fell upon him in his cradle; and the first and most illustrious exploit of his youth was, the defeat of a terrible lion in the Nemæan forest, which he slew, without the help of any weapon of defence: the skin of this lion he afterward wore as a garment. He likewise formed and executed the design of delivering his country from the tyrannic oppression of the Myrmidons. We ought not to be surprised that fable, which disfigures so many events, by transforming them to its fancy, has altered the other adventures of Samson; that it has added to them others of its own invention; that it attributes to him the actions of other chiefs and heroes; and ascribes some of the performances of Samson to other persons than Hercules; for this reason we find the account of the foxes Samson caught and tied by the tail preserved indeed, but transferred to another country.

“Fable then borrows, in favour of our hero, Hercules, the miracle which God wrought for Joshua, when he assisted the Gibeonites against the five kings of the Amorites; when the Lord cast down great stones upon them from heaven, so that more of those who fled from the Israelites perished by the hail, than did by the sword. In imitation of this miracle, fable, says (Pliny, book iii. c. 4. Pomponius Mela, De Situ Orbis, lib. ii. c. 5.) that when Hercules was engaged in a combat with the Ligurians, Jupiter assisted him by sending him a shower of stones. The quantity of stones which are still to be seen on the plains of Crau, (called by the ancients Campi Lapidei,) in Provence, has occasioned the poets to consider this place as the theatre of the above miracle.

“The jaw-bone of the ass, rendered so famous, from Samson having slain one thousand Philistines with it, has been changed for the celebrated club of Hercules, with which he defeated giants, and slew the many enemies which opposed him. The similarity of the Greek words χορρη, and χορμην, may have given rise to this alteration: corrê, signifying jaw, and ormênê, a mace, or club. The change of one of these words for the other is not difficult; especially as it seemed more suitable to arm Hercules with a club, than with the jaw-bone of an ass. But fable has, however, more clearly preserved the miracle of the spring of water that God produced in this bone, to preserve Samson from perishing with thirst, after the defeat of the Philistines; for it relates, that when Hercules had slain the dragon that guarded the golden apples in the garden of the Hesperides, and he was in danger of perishing with thirst in the scorching deserts of Libya, the gods caused a fountain to issue from a rock he struck with his foot, Apol. book xxxvi. of Argonauts, ver. 1446.

“The extraordinary strength of Samson was accompanied with a constant and surprising weakness; viz. his love for women. These two characteristics compose his history, and are equally conspicuous throughout the whole of his life: the latter, however, predominated; and, after having frequently exposed him to danger, at length completed his ruin. Fable has not omitted this characteristic weakness in its Hercules: in him this passion was excited by every woman that presented herself to his view; it led him to the performance of many base actions; and, after precipitating him into several dangers, at length put an end to his miserable existence. Samson, who well knew that his strength depended upon the preservation of his hair, was so imprudent as to impart this secret to Delilah, his mistress. This woman, whose sole design in importuning him, was to betray him, cut his hair off while asleep, and delivered him, thus deprived of all his strength, into the hands of the Philistines, who took from him both his liberty and eyesight, and treated him as the vilest and most wretched of slaves. Tradition, which spoils and disfigures the ancient histories, and those of distant countries, has transferred this adventure to Nisus, king of Megara, and his daughter Scylla. Megara was also the name of one of Hercules' wives, the daughter of Creon, king of Thebes. The name of Scylla is taken from the crime and impiety of the daughter of Nisus, from the Greek verb συλλα, syllao, which signifies to rob, or strip with impiety. The destiny or welfare of Nisus depended on the preservation of a lock of purple hair, which grew on his head. Scylla, having conceived an affection for Minos, who was at that time besieging the capital of her father's kingdom, betrayed her parent; cut off this lock of purple hair while he was asleep; and delivered him into the hands of his enemy. Nisus lost both his senses and his life; and, according to fable, was changed into a bird.—Ovid. Met. b. 8.

“But the most remarkable and striking event in the history of Samson, is that by which he lost his life. The Philistines, when offering solemn sacrifices to their god, by way of thanksgiving for his having delivered into their hands their formidable enemy, caused Samson to be brought out of prison, in order to make a laughing-stock of him. Samson, as though wishing to rest himself, requested his conductors to let him lean against the pillars which supported the temple, which was at that time filled with a great multitude of persons, among whom were many princes of the Philistines. Samson then, invoking the Lord, and exerting all his strength, which was returning with the growth of his hair, laid hold of the pillars with both his hands, and shook them so violently as to pull the building down upon the whole multitude therein assembled. By this fatal catastrophe Samson killed a greater number of Philistines than he had done during his life.

"Fable and tradition could not efface this event in the copy of Samson, which is Hercules. Herodotus relates it as a fabulous tradition, invented by the Greeks; and rejects it, as having no foundation either in the history itself, or in the manners and customs of the Egyptians; among whom, the Greeks say, this event had happened. They relate (says this historian, Book 2. entitled Euterpe, p. 47.) that Hercules, having fallen into the hands of the Egyptians, was condemned to be sacrificed by Jupiter. He was adorned like a victim, and led with much pomp to the foot of the altar: after permitting himself to be conducted thus far, and stopping a moment to collect his strength, he fell upon and massacred all those who were assembled to be either actors in, or spectators of, this pompous sacrifice, to the number of many thousands.

of Samson and Hercules is self-evident; and proves, beyond a doubt, that the fable of the one was composed from the history of the other. The remark of Herodotus, respecting the impossibility of this last adventure, according to the Greek tradition, and the folly of attributing it to the Egyptians, serves to confirm the truth of its having been borrowed, and of its being but a disfigured copy, whose original must be sought for elsewhere.

"In fact, it appears that Samson, judge of the Israelites, particularly mentioned in the Book of Judges, and by Josephus, Antiq. lib. v. c. 10. is the original and essential Hercules of fable: and, although the poets have united some particulars drawn from Moses and Joshua, and have added their own inventions, yet the most capital and considerable belong to Samson; and are distinguished by characters so peculiar to him, as render him easily discernible throughout the whole."

The above is the substance of what M. De Lavar has written on the subject; and contains, as some think, a very clear case; and is an additional proof how much the heathens have been indebted to the Bible.

CHAPTER XVII.

Micah, an Ephraimite, restores to his mother eleven hundred shekels of silver, which he had taken from her, 1, 2. She dedicates this to God; and out of a part of it makes a graven image and a molten image, and sets them up in the house of Micah, 3, 4. Who consecrates one of his sons to be his priest, 5. He afterward finds a Levite, whom he consecrates for a priest, and gives him annually ten shekels of silver, with his food and clothing, 6—13.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVII.

Verse 1. And there was a man of mount Ephraim] It is extremely difficult to fix the chronology of this and the following transactions. Some think them to be here in their natural order: others, that they happened in the time of Joshua, or immediately after the ancients, who outlived Joshua. All that can be said with certainty is this, that they happened when there was no king in Israel; i. e. about the time of the Judges, or in some time of the anarchy, ver. 6.

Verse 2. About which thou cursedst] Houbigant and others understand this of putting the young man to his oath. It is likely that when the mother of Micah missed the money, that she poured imprecations on the thief: that Micah, who had secreted it, hearing this, was alarmed, and restored the money, lest the curses should fall on him.

Verse 3. I had wholly dedicated] From this it appears that Micah's mother, though she made a superstitious use of the money, had no idolatrous design; for she expressly says, she had dedicated ליהוה Layhovah, to Jehovah; and this appears to have been the reason why she poured imprecations on him who had taken it.

Verse 4. A graven image and a molten image] What these images were we cannot positively say; they were, most probably, some resemblances of matters belonging to the tabernacle. See below.

Verse 5. The man Micah had a house of gods] Beith Elohim, בית אלהים, should, I think, be translated a house, or temple, of God; for it is very likely that both the mother and the son intended no more than a private or domestic chapel, in which they proposed to set up the worship of the true God.

8 And the man departed out of the city from Beth-lehem-judah, to sojourn where he could find a place: and he came to mount Ephraim to the house of Micah, as he journeyed.

9 And Micah said unto him, Whence comest thou? And he said unto him, I am a Levite of Beth-lehem-judah, case may be stated thus: Micah made a house of God, a chapel, in imitation of the sanctuary; a graven image, representing the ark; a molten image, to represent the mercy-seat; teraphim, to represent the cherubim above the mercy-seat; and an ephod, in imitation of the sacerdotal garments; and he consecrated one of his sons to be priest. Thus gross idolatry was not the crime of Micah; he only set up in his own house an epitome of the divine worship, as performed at Shiloh. What the teraphim were, see the note on Gen. xxxi. 19. For the ephod, see the note on Exod. xxv. 7.; and for the sacerdotal vestments, in general, see the note on Exod. xxviii. 4, &c.

Who became his priest.] Cohen, כהן which the Targum translates cumara. The word כהן cohen, is the common name in Hebrew for a priest of the true God; but sometimes it is applied to idolatrous priests. When it is to be understood in the former sense, the Targum renders it cohan; when in the latter, it uses the word כורמא cumara, by which it always understands an idolatrous priest. But that this was not a case of idolatry, and that the true God was worshipped here, is evident from the word Jehovah being used, ver. 4. and that oracular answers were given at this house, as we see from chap. xviii.

Verse 6. There was no king in Israel.] The word מלך melek, which generally means king, is sometimes taken for a supreme governor, judge, magistrate, or ruler, of any kind: see Gen. xxxvi. 31. and Deut. xxxiii. 5.: and it is likely it should be so understood here.

Every man did that which was right in his own eyes.] He was his own governor, and what he did he said was right; and, by his cunning and strength, defended his conduct. When a man's own will, passions, and caprice, are to be made the rule of law, society is in a most perilous and ruinous state. Civil government is of God; and without it the earth must soon be desolated. There was a time when there was no king in England; and that was, in general, a time of scandal to religion, and oppression to men.

10 And Micah said unto him, Dwell with me, and be unto me a father and a priest, and I will give thee ten shekels of silver by the year, and a suit of apparel, and thy victuals. So the Levite went in.

11 And the Levite was content to dwell with the man; and the young man was unto him as one of his sons.

12 And Micah consecrated the Levite; and the young man became his priest, and was in the house of Micah.

13 Then said Micah, Now know I that the Lord will do me good, seeing I have a Levite to my priest.

Verse 7. Of the family of Judah.] The word family may be taken here for tribe:—or the young man might have been of the tribe of Judah, by his mother; and of the tribe of Levi by his father; for he is called here a Levite: and it is probable that he might have officiated at Shiloh, in the Levitical office. A Levite might marry into any other tribe, provided the woman was not an heiress.

Verse 8. To sojourn where he could find.] He went about the country, seeking for some employment, for the Levites had no inheritance; besides, no secure residence could be found where there was no civil government.

Verse 10. Be unto me a father and a priest.] Thou shalt be master of my house, as if thou wert my father; and, as priest, thou shalt appear in the presence of God for me. The term father is often used to express honour and reverence.

Ten shekels of silver.] About thirty shillings per annum, with board, lodging, and clothes. Very good wages in those early times.

Verse 11. The Levite was content.] He thought the place a good one, and the wages respectable.

Verse 12. Micah consecrated the Levite.] יָדָה וּמָלָה vayimale et yad, he filled his hands; that is, he gave him an offering to present before the Lord, that he might be accepted by him. He appointed him to be priest; God was to accept and consecrate him; and for this purpose he filled his hand; i. e. furnished him with the proper offering which he was to present on his inauguration.

Verse 13. Now know I that the Lord will do me good.] As he had already provided an epitome of the tabernacle, a model of the ark, mercy-seat, and cherubim; and had got proper sacerdotal vestments, and a Levite to officiate; he took for granted that all was right, and that he should now have the benediction of God. Some think that he expected great gain from the concourse of the people to his temple; but of this there is no evidence in the text. Micah appears to have been perfectly sincere in all that he did.

I HAVE already remarked that there is no positive evidence that Micah or his mother intended to establish any idolatrous worship. Though they acted without any divine command in what they did, yet they appear not only to have been perfectly sincere, but also perfectly disinterested. They put themselves to considerable expense to erect this place of worship; and to maintain, at their own proper charges, a priest to officiate there; and without this the place, in all probability, would have been destitute of the worship and knowledge of the true God. His sincerity, disinterestedness, and attachment to the worship of the God of his fathers, are farther seen in the joy which he expressed on finding a Levite, who might legally officiate in his house. It is true, he had not a divine warrant for what he did; but the state of the land, the profligacy of his countrymen, his distance from Shiloh, &c. considered, he appears to deserve more praise than blame; though of the latter he has received a most liberal share from every quarter. This proceeds from that often noticed propensity in man, to take every thing which concerns the character of another by the worst handle. It cannot be considered any particular crime, should these notes be found at any time leaning to the other side.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Some Danites, seeking an inheritance, send five men to search the land, who arrive at the house of Micah, 1, 2. They employ the Levite, who served in his house as priest, to ask counsel for them of God, 3—5. He inquires, and promises them success, 6. They depart, and go to Laish, and find the inhabitants secure, 7. They return to their brethren, and encourage them to attempt the conquest of the place, 8—10. They send six hundred men, who, coming to the place where Micah dwelt, enter the house, and carry off the priest and his consecrated things, 11—21. Micah and his friends pursue them; but, being threatened, are obliged to return, 22—26. The Danites come to Laish, and smite it, and build a city there, which they call Dan, 27—29. They make the Levite their priest, and set up the images at this new city, 30, 31.

Verse 1. There was no king in Israel] See chap. xvii. 6. The circumstances related here show that this must have happened about the time of the preceding transactions.

The tribe of the Danites] That is, a part of this tribe; some families of it.

All their inheritance] That is, they had not got an extent of country sufficient for them. Some families were still unprovided for, or had not sufficient territory; for we find from Josh. chap. xix. 40, &c. that although the tribe of Dan did receive their inheritance with the rest of the tribes of Israel; yet their coast went out too little for them, and they went and fought against LESHEM, called here Laish, and took it, &c. This circumstance is marked here more particularly than in the book of Joshua. See the note on Josh. xix. 47.

Verse 2. Five men—men of valour] The Hebrew word bn chail, has been applied to personal prowess, to mental energy; and to earthly possessions. They sent those in whose courage, judgment, and prudence, they could safely confide.

Verse 3. They knew the voice of the young

Micah, they knew the voice of the young man the Levite: and they turned in thither, and said unto him, Who brought thee hither? and what makest thou in this place? and what hast thou here?

4 And he said unto them, Thus and thus dealeth Micah with me, and hath hired me, and I am his priest.

5 And they said unto him, Ask counsel, we pray thee, of God, that we may know whether our way which we go shall be prosperous.

man] They knew by his dialect, or mode of pronunciation, that he was not an Ephraimite. We have already seen, chap. xii. 6. that the Ephraimites could not pronounce certain letters. See the note there.

Verse 5. Ask counsel—of God] As the Danites use the word אלהים Elohim here for God, we are necessarily led to believe that they meant the true God; especially as the Levite answers, ver. 6. Before the LORD (יהוה Yehovah) is your way. Though the former word may be sometimes applied to idols, whom their votaries clothe with the attributes of God, yet the latter is never applied but to the true God alone. As the Danites succeeded according to the oracle delivered by the Levite, it is a strong presumption that the worship established by Micah was not of an idolatrous kind. It is really begging the question to assert, as many commentators have done, that the answer was either a trick of the Levite, or suggested by the devil; and that the success of the Danites was merely accidental. This is taking the thing by the worst handle, to support an hypothesis, and to serve a system. See the end of the preceding chapter.

Verse 7. After the manner of the Zidonians] Probably the people of Laish, or Leshem, were originally a colony of the Sidonians, who, it appears, were an opulent people; and, being in possession of a strong city, lived in a state of security, not being afraid of their neighbours. In this the Leshemites imitated them, though the sequel proves they had not the same reason for their confidence.

They were far from the Zidonians] Being, as above supposed, a Sidonian colony, they might naturally expect help from their countrymen; but as they dwelt a considerable distance from Sidon, the Danites saw that they could strike the blow before the news of invasion could reach Sidon; and, consequently, before the people of Laish could receive any succours from that city.

And had no business with any man] In the most correct copies of the Septuagint, this clause is thus translated: Καὶ λόγος οὐκ ἦν αὐτοῖς πρὸς Συρίας, and they had no transactions with Syria. Now it is most evident that, instead of אִם adam, MAN, they read אִרָם aram, SYRIA; words which are so nearly similar, that the difference which exists is only between the r resh and d daleth, and which, both in MSS. and printed books, is often indiscernible. 15 And they turned thitherward, and came to the house of the young man, the Levite, even unto the house of Micah, and ^asaluted him.

17 And ^cthe five men that went to spy out the land went up, and came in thither, and took ^dthe graven image, and the ephod, and the teraphim, and molten image: and the priest stood in the entering of the gate, with the six hundred men that were appointed with weapons of war.

reading is found in the Codex Alexandrinus, in the Complutensian Polyglott, in the Spanish Polyglott, and in the edition of the Septuagint published by Aldus. It may be proper to observe, that Laish was on the frontiers of Syria; but as they had no intercourse with the Syrians, from whom they might have received the promptest assistance, this was an additional reason why the Danites might expect success.

Verse 9. Arise, &c.] This is a very plain and nervous address; full of good sense, and well adapted to the purpose. It seems to have produced an instantaneous effect.

Verse 11. Six hundred men] These were not the whole; for we find they had children, &c. ver. 21.: but these appear to have been six hundred armed men.

Verse 12. Mahaneh-dan] "The camp of Dan;" so called from the circumstance of this armament encamping there. See chap. xiii. 25. which affords some proof that this transaction was previous to the days of Samson.

Verse 14. Consider what ye have to do] They probably had formed the design to carry off the priest and his sacred utensils.

Verse 18. These went into Micah's house] The five men went in, while the six hundred armed men stood at the gate.

19 And they said unto him, Hold thy peace, ' lay thine hand upon thy mouth, and go with us, ' and be to us a father and a priest: is it better for thee to be a priest unto the house of one man, or that thou be a priest unto a tribe and a family in Israel?

20 And the priest's heart was glad, and he took the ephod, and the teraphim, and the graven image, and went in the midst of the people.

21 So they turned and departed, and put the little ones, and the cattle, and the carriage, before them.

22 ¶ And when they were a good way from the house of Micah, the men that were in the houses near to Micah's house were gathered together, and overtook the children of Dan.

23 And they cried unto the children of Dan: and they turned their faces, and said unto Micah, What aileth thee, ^b that thou comest with such a company?

24 And he said, Ye have taken away my gods, which I made, and the priest, and ye are gone away; and what have I more? and what is this that ye say unto me, What aileth thee?

25 And the children of Dan said unto him, Let not thy voice be heard among us, lest ^b angry fellows run upon thee, and thou lose thy life, with the lives of thy household.

26 And the children of Dan went their way: and when Micah saw that they were too strong for him, he turned and went back unto his house.

27 ¶ And they took the things which Micah had made, and the priest which he had, and ⁱ came unto Laish, unto a people that were at quiet, and secure: ^k and they smote them with the edge of the sword, and burnt the city with fire.

28 And there was no deliverer, because it was ^l far from Zidon, and they had no business with any man; and it was in the valley that lieth ^m by Beth-rehob. And they built a city, and dwelt therein.

29 And ⁿ they called the name of the city ^o Dan, after the name of Dan their father, who was born unto Israel; howbeit the name of the city was Laish at the first.

30 ¶ And the children of Dan set up the graven image; and Jonathan, the son of Gershom, the son of Manasseh, he and his sons were priests to the tribe of Dan ^p until the day of the captivity of the land.

31 And they set them up Micah's graven image, which he made, ^r all the time that the house of God was in Shiloh.

Verse 19. Lay thine hand upon thy mouth] This was the token of silence. The god of silence, Harpocrates, is represented on ancient statues with his finger pressed on his lips.

Verse 20. Went in the midst of the people] He was glad to be employed by the Danites; and went into the crowd, that he might not be discovered by Micah or his family.

Verse 21. The little ones and the cattle, &c.] These men were so confident of success, that they removed their whole families, household goods, cattle, and all.

And the carriage] כבודא kebudah, their substance, precious things, or valuables; omne quod erat pretiosum, VULGATE: or rather the luggage, or baggage; what Cæsar calls, in his Commentaries, impedimenta; and what the Septuagint here translate βαρος, weight, or baggage. We are not to suppose that any wheel carriage is meant.

Verse 24. Ye have taken away my gods] As Micah was a worshipper of the true God, as we have seen, he cannot mean any kind of idols, by the word אלהי elohey, here used. He undoubtedly means those representations of divine things, and symbols of the divine presence; such as the teraphim, ephod, &c.; for they are all evidently included under the word elohey, which we translate gods.

Verse 25. And thou lose thy life] This was argumentum ad hominem; he must put up with the loss of his substance, or else lose his life! It was the mere language of a modern highwayman; Your life, or your money!

Verse 27. Unto a people—at quiet, and secure] They found the report given by the spies to be correct. The people were apprehensive of no danger, and were unprepared for resistance; hence they were all put to the sword, and their city burnt up.

Verse 28. There was no deliverer] They had no succour; because the Sidonians, from whom they might have expected it, were at too great a distance.

Verse 29. Called the name of the city Dan] This city was afterward very remarkable, as one of the extremities of the promised land. The extent of the Jewish territories was generally expressed by the phrase, from DAN to BEER-SHEBA; that is, from the most northern to the southern extremity.

Verse 30. The children of Dan set up the graven image] They erected a chapel, or temple, among themselves, as Micah had done before, having the same implements and the same priest.

And Jonathan, the son of Gershom] Either this was the name of the young Levite; or they had turned him off, and got this Jonathan in his place.

The son of Manasseh] Who this Manasseh was, none can tell; nor does the reading appear to be genuine. He could not be Manasseh the son of Joseph, for he had no son called Gershom; nor could it be Manasseh king of Israel, for he lived eight hundred years afterward.

Instead of משה Manasseh, the word should be read משה Mosheh, MOSES, as it is found in some MSS. in the Vulgate, and in the concessions of the most intelligent Jews. The Jews, as R. D. Kimchi acknowledges, have suspended the letter nun, over the word משה Moshe; thus משה—which, by the addition of the points, they have changed into MANASSEH, because they think it would be a great reproach to their legislator to have had a grandson who was an idolater. That Gershom, the son of Moses, is here intended, is very probable; see the arguments urged by Dr. Kennicott, Dissertat. i. p. 55, &c.; and see the Var. Lect. of De Rossi on this place.

Until the day of the captivity of the land.] Calmet observes, “The posterity of this Jonathan executed the office of priest in the city of Dan, all the time that the idol of Micah, (the teraphim, ephod, &c.) was there. But this was only while the house of the Lord was at Shiloh; and, consequently, the sons of Jonathan were priests at Dan only till the time in which the ark was taken by the Philistines, which was the last year of Eli, the high priest: for after that, the ark no more returned to Shiloh.” This is evident; and on this very ground Houbigant contends that, instead of הארץ haarets, the LAND, we should read הארון haaron, the ARK; for nothing is easier than the vau, and final nun, to be mistaken for the final y tsaddi, which is the only difference between the captivity of the LAND, and the captivity of the ARK. And this conjecture is the more likely, because the next verse tells us that Micah’s graven image, &c. continued at Dan all the time that the house of God was at Shiloh; which was till the ark was taken by the Philistines. Those who wish to see more on this subject may consult Calmet, and the writers in Pool’s Synopsis. This chapter is an important supplement to the conclusion of the 19th chapter of Joshua: on which it casts considerable light.

THE Danites were properly the first dissenters from the public established worship of the Jews; but they seem to have departed as little as possible from the Jewish forms, their worship being conducted in the same way, but not in the same place. Surely it was better to have had this, allowing it to be unconstitutional worship, than to have been wholly destitute of the ordinances of God.

I think we have not sufficient ground from the text to call these persons idolaters; I believe they worshipped the true God according to their light and circumstances, from a conviction that they could not prosper without his approbation; and that they could not expect that approbation if they did not offer to him a religious worship. They endeavoured to please him, though the means they adopted were not the most proper.

CHAPTER XIX.

A Levite and his concubine disagree; and she leaves him, and goes to her father’s house, 1, 2. He follows to bring her back, and is kindly entertained by her father five days, 3–8. He returns; and lodges the first night at Gibeah, in the tribe of Benjamin, 9–21. The men of Gibeah attack the house, and insist on abusing the body of the Levite; who, to save himself, delivers to them his concubine, whose life falls a victim to their brutality, 22–27. The Levite divides her dead body into twelve pieces, and sends one to each of the twelve tribes; they are struck with horror, and call a council on the subject, 28–30.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIX.

Verse 1. There was no king in Israel] All sorts of disorders are attributed to the want of civil government; justice, right, truth, and humanity, had fallen in the streets.

Took to him a concubine] We have already seen that the concubine was a sort of secondary wife; and that such connexions were not disreputable, being according to the general custom of those times. The word pilegash, concubine, is supposed by Mr. Parkhurst to be compounded of palag, to “divide,” or “share;” and nagash, “to approach;” because the husband shared or divided his attention and affections between her and the real wife, from whom she differed in nothing material, but in her posterity not inheriting.

Verse 2. Played the whore] Neither the Vulgate, Septuagint, Targum, nor Josephus, understand this word as implying any act of conjugal infidelity on the woman’s part. They merely state that the parties disagreed, and the woman returned to her father’s house. Indeed, all the circumstances of the case vindicate this view of the subject. If she had been a whore, or adulteress, it is not very likely that her husband would have gone after her, to speak friendly; literally, to speak to her heart, and entreat her to return. The Vulgate simply states, quæ reliquit eum, that she left him; the

3 And her husband arose, and went after her, to speak ^f friendly unto her, and to bring her again, having his servant with him, and a couple of asses: and she brought him into her father's house; and when the father of the damsel saw him, he rejoiced to meet him.

4 And his father-in-law, the damsel's father, retained him; and he abode with him three days: so they did eat and drink, and lodged there.

5 And it came to pass on the fourth day, when they arose early in the morning, that he rose up to depart: and the damsel's father said unto his son-in-law, ^g Comfort ^h thine heart with a morsel of bread, and afterward go your way.

6 And they sat down, and did eat and drink both of them together: for the damsel's father had said unto the man, Be content, I pray thee, and tarry all night, and let thine heart be merry.

7 And when the man rose up to depart, his father-in-law urged him; therefore he lodged there again.

8 And he arose early in the morning on the fifth day to depart: and the damsel's father said, Comfort thine heart, I pray thee. And they tarried ⁱ until afternoon, and they did eat both of them.

9 And when the man rose up to depart, he, and his concubine, and his servant, his father-in-law, the damsel's father, Septuagint, αγριος αυτου, that she was angry with him; the Targum, ובסתר עליו ubeserath alohi, that she despised him; Josephus, αλλοτριως αυτου, that she was alienated, or separated herself from him. Houbigant translates the clause quæ cum ab eo alienata esset, vel irata in eum esset eum reliquit; who, when she was alienated from him, or angry with him, left him: and he defends this version in his note. I think the true meaning to be among the above interpretations. They had contentions; she ceased to love him; her affections were alienated from him; and she left his house, and went home to her father.

Verse 3. He rejoiced to meet him.] He hoped to be able completely to reconcile his daughter and her husband.

Verse 8. And they tarried until afternoon.] Merely that they might avoid the heat of the day, which would have been very inconvenient in travelling.

said unto him, Behold, now the day ^k draweth toward evening, I pray you to tarry all night: behold, ^l the day groweth to an end; lodge here, that thine heart may be merry; and to-morrow get you early on your way, that thou mayest go ^m home.

10 But the man would not tarry that night, but he rose up and departed, and came ⁿ over against ^o Jebus, which is Jerusalem; and there were with him two asses saddled, his concubine also was with him.

11 And when they were by Jebus, the day was far spent; and the servant said unto his master, Come, I pray thee, and let us turn in into this city ^p of the Jebusites, and lodge in it.

12 And his master said unto him, We will not turn aside hither into the city of a stranger that is not of the children of Israel; we will pass over ^r to Gibeah.

13 And he said unto his servant, Come, and let us draw near to one of these places to lodge all night, in Gibeah, or in ^s Ramah.

14 And they passed on, and went their way; and the sun went down upon them when they were by Gibeah, which belongeth to Benjamin.

15 And they turned aside thither, to go in and to lodge in Gibeah: and when he went in, he sat him down in a street of the city; for there was no man that ^t took them into his house to lodging.

Verse 9. The day groweth to an end.] חמת היום chanoth haiyom, "the day is about to pitch its tent;" that is, it was near the time in which travellers ordinarily pitched their tents, to take up their lodging for the night.

Verse 11. When they were by Jebus.] This was Jerusalem, which though, after the death of Joshua, it appears to have been partly conquered by the tribe of Judah, yet the Jebusites kept the strong-hold of Zion till the days of David, by whom they were finally expelled. See the note on chap. i. 8.

Verse 15. No man—took them into his house to lodging.] There was probably no inn, or house of public entertainment, in this place; and, therefore, they could not have a lodging, unless furnished by mere hospitality. To say that there were no inns in those primitive times, is not true; there were such places, though not very frequent. Joseph's brethren found their money in their sacks when they loosed

16 ¶ And, behold, there came an old man from ^u his work out of the field at even, which was also of mount Ephraim; and he sojourned in Gibeah: but the men of the place were Benjamites.

17 And when he had lifted up his eyes, he saw a wayfaring man in the street of the city: and the old man said, Whither goest thou? and whence comest thou?

18 And he said unto him, We are passing from Beth-lehem-judah toward the side of mount Ephraim; from thence am I: and I went to Beth-lehem-judah, but I am now going to ^v the house of the LORD; and there is no man that ^w receiveth me to house.

them at an inn, Gen. xlii. 27. The house of Rahab was an inn, Josh. ii. 1. And the woman whose house Samson frequented at Gaza was a hostess, or one who kept a place of public entertainment.

Verse 19. There is both straw and provender for our asses] In the countries principally devoted to pasturage there was no hay; but as they raised some corn, they took great care of their straw, chopped it very small; and having mixed it with barley, beans, or the pounded kernels of dates, they made it into balls, and fed their cattle with it. Straw, cut into what is called chaff, is not unfrequently used in England for the same purpose.

Verse 20. All thy wants lie upon me] Here was genuine hospitality; — Keep your bread and wine for yourselves, and your straw and provender for your asses; you may need them before you finish your journey; I will supply all your wants for this night: therefore, do not lodge in the street."

Verse 22. Sons of Belial] Profligate fellows. See the notes on Deut. xiii. 13.

That we may know him] See Gen. xix. These were genuine Sodomites, as to their practice. Sons of Belial, rascals and miscreants of the deepest die; worse than brutes, being a compound of beast and devil inseparably blended.

22 ¶ Now as they were making their hearts merry, behold, ^b the men of the city, certain ^c sons of Belial, beset the house round about, and beat at the door, and spake to the master of the house, the old man, saying, ^d Bring forth the man that came into thine house, that we may know him.

23 And ^e the man, the master of the house, went out unto them, and said unto them, Nay, my brethren, nay, I pray you, do not so wickedly; seeing that this man is come into mine house, ^f do not this folly.

24 ^g Behold, here is my daughter, a maiden, and his concubine; them I will bring out now, and ^h humble ye them, and do with them what seemeth good unto you; but unto this man do not ⁱ so vile a thing.

25 But the men would not hearken to him: so the man took his concubine, and brought her forth unto them; and they ^k knew her, and abused her all the night until the morning: and when the day began to spring, they let her go.

Verse 24. Here is my daughter, a maiden] Such a proposal was made by Lot to the men of Sodom, Gen. xix. but nothing can excuse either. That the rights of hospitality were sacred in the East, and most highly regarded, we know; and that a man would defend, at the expense of his life, the stranger whom he had admitted under his roof, is true: but how a father could make such a proposal relative to his virgin daughter, must remain among those things which are incomprehensible.

Verse 25. So the man took his concubine] The word pnv yachazek, which we here translate simply took, signifies rather to take or seize by violence. The woman would not go out to them; but her graceless husband forced her to go, in order that he might save his own body. He could have but little love for her; and this was the cause of their separation before.

The men of Gibeah who wished to abuse the body of the Levite; the Levite, who wished to save his body at the expense of the modesty, reputation, and life, of his wife; and the old man, who wished to save his guest at the expense of the violation of his daughter; are all characters that humanity and modesty wish to be buried in everlasting oblivion.

When the day began to spring] Their turpitude could not bear the full light of the day:

26 Then came the woman in the dawning of the day, and fell down at the door of the man's house where her lord was, till it was light.

27 And her lord rose up in the morning, and opened the doors of the house, and went out to go his way; and, behold, the woman his concubine was fallen down at the door of the house, and her hands were upon the threshold.

28 And he said unto her, Up, and let us be going. But none answered. Then the man took her up upon an ass,

Verse 26. Fell down at the door] She had strength to reach the door, but not to knock for admittance: when she reached the door she fell down dead! The reason of this abominable and horrid catastrophe is strongly signified by the original words, ver. 25. וירקו אתה וירקלו בך כל הלילה vaiyedu otah, vaiyithalelu bah col hallailah, which we modestly translate, and they knew her, and they abused her all the night. More literally, but still not fully: Illi cum ea rem habuerunt, et alternatim in eam, tota nocte ascenderunt. The hithpahel used here in the verb וירקלו greatly increases the sense. Conjugatio hithpahel frequentiam actus, et immanem libidinem designat. The Arabic is not too strong: Exercuerunt in ea cupiditates suas, et machati sunt in ea ad matutinam usque.

Verse 29. Divided her—into twelve pieces] There is no doubt that with the pieces he sent to each tribe a circumstantial account of the barbarity of the men of Gibeah; and it is very likely that they considered each of the pieces as expressing an execration, "If ye will not come and avenge my wrongs, may ye be hewn in pieces like this abused and murdered woman!"

It was a custom among the ancient Highlanders, in Scotland, when one clan wished to and the man rose up, and gat him unto his place.

29 ¶ And when he was come into his house, he took a knife, and laid hold on his concubine, and divided her, together with her bones, into twelve pieces, and sent her into all the coasts of Israel.

30 And it was so, that all that saw it said, There was no such deed done nor seen, from the day that the children of Israel came up out of the land of Egypt unto this day: consider of it, take advice, and speak your minds.

call all the rest to avenge its wrongs, to take a wooden cross, dip it in blood, and send it by a special messenger through all the clans. This was called the fire cross, because, at sight of it, each clan lighted a fire or beacon, which gave notice to all the adjoining clans that a general rising was immediately to take place.

Verse 30. There was no such deed done nor seen] They were all struck with the enormity of the crime; and considered it a sovereign disgrace to all the tribes of Israel.

Consider of it] Literally, put it to yourselves:—Take counsel upon it;—and speak. This was the prelude to the council held, and the subsequent operations, which are mentioned in the following chapter.

I have passed over the abominable transactions of this chapter as lightly as I could; and shall make no apology to the learned or unlearned reader, for leaving some things untranslated.

What a blessing are wholesome laws and a vigorous and attentive magistracy! These wretched people had no form of government, and every one did what was right in his own eyes: their own eye (corrupt inclination) was the measure and rule of their conduct; and how bad a rule, the abuse and murder of the Levite's wife testify. Reader, bless God for civil government.

CHAPTER XX.

The heads of the eleven tribes come before the Lord in Mizpeh; and examine the Levite relative to the murder of his wife, who gives a simple narrative of the whole affair, 1—7. They unanimously resolve to avenge the wrong; and make provision for a campaign against the Benjamites, 8—11. They desire the Benjamites to deliver up the murderers; they refuse, and prepare for battle, having assembled an army of twenty-six thousand seven hundred men, 12—16. The rest of the Israelites amount to four hundred thousand, who, taking counsel of God, agree to send the tribe of Judah against the Benjamites, 17, 18. They attack the Benjamites, and are routed with the loss of twenty-two thousand men, 19—21. They renew the battle next day; and are discomfited with the loss of eighteen thousand men, 22—25. They weep, fast, and pray, and offer sacrifices; and again inquire of the Lord, who promises to deliver Benjamin into their hands, 26—28. They concert plans, attack the Benjamites, and rout them, killing twenty-five thousand one hundred men; and destroy the city of Gibeah, 29—37. 2 And the chief of all the people, even of all the tribes of Israel, presented themselves in the assembly of the people of God, four hundred thousand footmen ^a that drew sword.

3 (Now the children of Benjamin heard that the children of Israel were gone up to Mizpeh.) Then said the children of Israel, Tell us, how was this wickedness?

4 And ^ethe Levite, the husband of the woman that was slain, answered and said, I came into Gibeah that belongeth to Benjamin, I and my concubine, to lodge:

5 ^fAnd the men of Gibeah rose against me, and beset the house round about upon me by night, and thought to have slain me: ^hand my concubine have they ⁱforced, that she is dead.

6 And ^kI took my concubine, and cut her in pieces, and sent her throughout all the country of the inheritance of Israel; for they ^lhave committed lewdness and folly in Israel.

7 Behold, ye are all children of Israel; ^mgive here your advice and counsel.

8 ¶ And all the people arose as one man, saying, We will not any of us go to his tent, neither will we any of us turn into his house:

consulted, as well as at Shiloh: in 1 Maccab. iii. 46. we read, In Maspha was the place where they prayed aforetime in Israel. These two passages cast light on each other.

Some think that Shiloh is meant, because the ark was there: but the phrase before the Lord may signify no more than meeting in the name of God, to consult him, and make prayer and supplication. Wherever God's people are, there is God himself; and it ever was true, that wherever two or three were assembled in his name, he was in the midst of them.

Verse 2. The chief of all the people] The corners γωνια pinoth: for as the corner-stones are the strength of the walls, so are the chiefs the strength of the people. Hence Christ is called the chief corner-stone.

In the assembly of the people of God] The Septuagint translate, And all the tribes of Israel stood up before the face of the Lord, ἐκκλησία τοῦ λαοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, in the church of the people of God. Here was a church, though there was no priest; for, as Tertulian says, Ubi tres, ecclesia est, licet laici. "Wheresoever three are gathered together in the name of the Lord, there is a church, although there be none but the laity."

10 And we will take ten men of a hundred throughout all the tribes of Israel, and a hundred of a thousand, and a thousand out of ten thousand, to fetch victual for the people, that they may do, when they come to Gibeah of Benjamin, according to all the folly that they have wrought in Israel.

11 So all the men of Israel were gathered against the city, ^aknit together as one man.

12 ¶ ^bAnd the tribes of Israel sent men through all the tribe of Benjamin, saying, What wickedness is this that is done among you?

13 Now therefore deliver us the men; ^cthe children of Belial, which are in Gibeah, that we may put them to death, and ^dput away evil from Israel. But the children of Benjamin would not hearken to the voice of their brethren the children of Israel:

14 But the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together out of the cities unto Gibeah, to go out to battle against the children of Israel.

Verse 3. Tell us, how was this wickedness?] They had heard before, by the messengers he sent with the fragments of his wife's body; but they wish to hear it, in full council, from himself.

Verse 8. We will not any of us go to his tent] We will have satisfaction for this wickedness before we return home.

Verse 10. Ten men of a hundred] Expecting that they might have a long contest, they provide sutlers for the camp; and it is probable that they chose these tenths by lot.

Verse 13. Deliver us the men] Nothing could be fairer than this. They wish only to make the murderers answerable for their guilt.

Benjamin would not hearken] Thus making their whole tribe partakers of the guilt of the men of Gibeah. By not delivering up those bad men, they in effect said, "We will stand by them in what they have done; and would have acted the same part had we been present." This proves that the whole tribe was excessively depraved.

Verse 15. Twenty and six thousand] Some copies of the Septuagint have twenty-three thousand, others twenty-five thousand. The Vulgate has this latter number; the Complutensian Polyglott, and Josephus, have the same.

of Gibeah, which were numbered seven hundred chosen men.

16 Among all this people there were seven hundred chosen men left-handed; every one could sling stones at a hair-breadth, and not miss.

17 And the men of Israel, besides Benjamin, were numbered four hundred thousand men that drew sword: all these were men of war.

18 ¶ And the children of Israel arose, and went up to the house of God, and asked counsel of God, and said, Which of us shall go up first to the battle against the children of Benjamin? And the LORD said, Judah shall go up first.

19 And the children of Israel rose up in the morning, and encamped against Gibeah.

* Ch. 3. 15. 1 Chron. 12. 2.—† Ver. 23, 26.

Verse 16. Left-handed] They were ambidexters; could use the right hand and the left with equal ease and effect. See the note on chap. iii. ver. 15.

Could sling stones at a hair—and not miss] וְיָצֵחַ וְלֹא יִשָּׁחֵט velo yachetah, and not sin: נֹסֵם אֶחָד εξαμαρτάνοντες, Sept. Here we have the true import of the term sin: it signifies simply to miss the mark; and is well translated in the New Testament by αμαρταν, from a negative, and μαρτα, to hit the mark. Men miss the mark of true happiness in aiming at sensual gratifications; which happiness is to be found only in the possession and enjoyment of the favour of God, from whom their passions continually lead them. He alone hits the mark, and ceases from sin, who attains to God through Christ Jesus.

It is worthy of remark that the Persian خطا کردن khuta kerden, which literally signifies to sin, or mistake, is used by the Mohammedans to express to hit the mark.

The sling was a very ancient warlike instrument; and, in the hands of those who were skilled in the use of it, it produced astonishing effects. The inhabitants of the isles called Baleares, now Majorca and Minorca, were the most celebrated slingers of antiquity. They did not permit their children to break their fast till they had struck down the bread they were to eat from the top of a pole, or some distant eminence. They had their name Baleares from the Greek word βαλλειν, to dart, cast, or throw.

Concerning the velocity of the ball out of the sling there are strange and almost incredible things told by the ancients. The leaden ball, when thus projected, is said to have melted in its course. So Ovid. Met. lib. ii. ver. 726.

*Obstupuit formâ Jove natus: et æthere pendens.
Non secus exarsit, quam cum balaerica plumbum
Fundâ jecit: volat illud, et incandescit eundo, Et quas non habuit, sub nubibus invenit ignes.*

20 And the men of Israel went out to battle against Benjamin: and the men of Israel put themselves in array to fight against them at Gibeah.

21 And the children of Benjamin came forth out of Gibeah, and destroyed down to the ground of the Israelites that day twenty and two thousand men.

22 ¶ And the people, the men of Israel, encouraged themselves, and set their battle again in array, in the place where they put themselves in array the first day.

23 ^v (And the children of Israel went up and wept before the LORD until even, and asked counsel of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up again to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother? And the LORD said, Go up against him.)

Hermes was fired as in the clouds he hung;
So the cold bullet that, with fury slung
From Balaeric engines, mounts on high,
Glows in the whirl, and burns along the sky. Dryden.

This is not a poetic fiction: SENECA, the philosopher, in lib. iii. Quest. Natural. c. 57. says the same thing:—Sic liquescit excussa glans funda, et adtritu aeris velut igne distillat. "Thus the ball projected from the sling, melts; and is liquefied by the friction of the air, as if it were exposed to the action of fire." I have often, by the sudden and violent compression of the air, produced fire; and by this alone inflamed tinder, and lighted a match.

Vegetius de Re Militari, lib. ii. cap. 23. tells us that slingers could, in general, hit the mark, at six hundred feet distance. Funditores scopas—pro signo ponebant; ita ut sexcentos pedes removerentur a signo,—signum sapius tangerent. These things render credible what is spoken here of the Benjamite slingers.

Verse 18. Went up to the house of God] Some think that a deputation were sent to Shiloh, where Phineas, the high priest, was; to inquire, not concerning the expediency of the war, nor of its success, but which of the tribes should begin the attack. Having so much right on their side, they had no doubt of the justice of their cause. Having such a superiority of numbers, they had no doubt of success. See the note on ver. 1.

And the LORD said, Judah] But he did not say that they should conquer.

Verse 21. Destroyed down to the ground—twenty-two thousand men.] That is, so many were left dead on the field of battle.

Verse 23. Go up against him] It appears most evident that the Israelites did not seek the protection of God. They trusted in the goodness of their cause, and in the multitude of their army. God humbled them, and delivered them into the hands of their enemies; and showed them that the race was not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong.

24 And the children of Israel came near against the children of Benjamin the second day.

25 And Benjamin went forth against them out of Gibeah the second day, and destroyed down to the ground of the children of Israel again eighteen thousand men; all these drew the sword.

26 ¶ Then all the children of Israel, and all the people, went up, and came unto the house of God, and wept, and sat there before the LORD, and fasted that day until even, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the LORD.

27 And the children of Israel inquired of the LORD, (for the ark of the covenant of God was there in those days, 28 And Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, stood before it in those days,) saying, Shall I yet again go out to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother, or shall I cease? And the LORD said, Go up; for tomorrow I will deliver them into thine hand.

29 And Israel set liers in wait round about Gibeah.

30 And the children of Israel went up against the children of Benjamin on the third day, and put themselves in array against Gibeah, as at other times.

31 And the children of Benjamin went out against the people, and were drawn away from the city; and they began to smite of the people, and kill, as at other times, in the highways, of which one goeth up to the house of God, and the other to Gibeah in the field, about thirty men of Israel.

32 And the children of Benjamin said, They are smitten down before us as at the first. But the children of Israel said, Let us flee, and draw them from the city unto the highways.

33 And all the men of Israel rose up out of their place, and put themselves in array at Baal-tamar: and the liers in wait of Israel came forth out of their places, even out of the meadows of Gibeah.

34 And there came against Gibeah ten thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and the battle was sore: but they knew not that evil was near them.

35 And the LORD smote Benjamin before Israel: and the children of Israel destroyed of the Benjamites that day twenty and five thousand and a hundred men: all these drew the sword.

36 So the children of Benjamin saw that they were smitten; for the men of Israel gave place to the Benjamites, because they trusted unto the liers in wait which they had set beside Gibeah.

37 And the liers in wait hastened, and rushed upon Gibeah; and the liers in wait drew themselves along, and smote all the city with the edge of the sword.

Verse 26. And wept] Had they humbled themselves, fasted, and prayed, and offered sacrifices at first, they had not been discomfited.

And fasted that day until even] This is the first place where fasting is mentioned as a religious ceremony; or as a means of obtaining help from God. And in this case, and many since, it has been powerfully effectual. At present it is but little used; a strong proof that self-denial is wearing out of fashion.

Verse 28. Phinehas, the son of Eleazar] This was the same Phinehas who is mentioned Numb. xxv.; and consequently these transactions must have taken place shortly after the death of Joshua.

Verse 29. Israel set liers in wait] Though God had promised them success, they knew they could expect it only in the use of the proper means. They used all prudent precaution; and employed all their military skill.

Verse 32. Let us—draw them from the city] They had two reasons for this:—1. They had placed an ambuscade behind Gibeah, which was to enter and burn the city as soon as the Benjamites had left it. 2. It would seem that the slingers, by being within the city and its fortifications, had great advantage against the Israelites by their slings, whom they could not annoy with their swords, unless they got them to the plain country.

Verse 33. Put themselves in array at Baal-tamar] The Israelites seem to have divided their army into three divisions: one was at Baal-tamar; a second behind the city in ambush; and the third skirmished with the Benjamites before Gibeah.

Verse 35. Twenty and five thousand and a hundred] As the Benjamites consisted only of twenty-six thousand and seven hundred slingers: or, as the Vulgate, Septuagint, and others read, twenty-five thousand, which is most probably the true reading: then the whole of the Benjamites were cut to pieces, except six hundred men; who we are informed fled to the rock Rimmon, where they fortified themselves.

38 Now there was an appointed ¹ sign between the men of Israel ² and the liers in wait, that they should make a great ¹ flame with smoke to rise up out of the city.

41 And when the men of Israel turned again, the men of Benjamin were amazed: for they saw that evil ^p was come upon them.

42 Therefore they turned their backs before the men of Israel unto the way of the wilderness; but the battle overtook them; and them which came out of the cities they destroyed in the midst of them.

Verse 38. Now there was an appointed sign] From this verse to the end of the chapter we have the details of the same operations which are mentioned in a general way, in the preceding part of the chapter.

Verse 45. Unto the rock of Rimmon] This was some strong place; but where situated is not known. Here they maintained themselves four months; and it was by these alone that the tribe of Benjamin was preserved from utter extermination. See the following chapter.

round about, and chased them, and trode them down with ease ³ over against Gibeah toward the sunrising.

44 And there fell of Benjamin eighteen thousand men; all these were men of valour.

45 And they turned, and fled toward the wilderness unto the rock of ^t Rimmon: and they gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men, and pursued hard after them unto Gidom, and slew two thousand men of them.

46 So that all which fell that day of Benjamin were twenty and five thousand men that drew the sword: all these were men of valour.

47 ^u But six hundred men turned, and fled to the wilderness unto the rock Rimmon, and abode in the rock Rimmon four months.

48 And the men of Israel turned again upon the children of Benjamin, and smote them with the edge of the sword, as well the men of every city, as the beast, and all that ^v came to hand: also they set on fire all the cities that ^w they came to.

It is scarcely possible to imagine any thing more horrid than the indiscriminate and relentless slaughter of both innocent and guilty, mentioned in this chapter. The crime of the men of Gibeah was great; but there was no adequate cause for this relentless extermination of a whole tribe. There was neither justice nor judgment in this case: they were on all sides brutal, cruel, and ferocious; and no wonder; there was no king in Israel; no effective civil government; and every man did what was right in his own eyes.

CHAPTER XXI.

The Israelites mourn because of the desolation of Benjamin, and consult the Lord, 1—4. They inquire who of Israel had not come to this war, as they had vowed that those who would not make this a common cause, should be put to death, 5, 6. They consult how they shall procure wives for the six hundred men who had fled to the rock Rimmon, 7. Finding that the men of Jabesh-gilead had not come to the war, they send twelve thousand men against them, smite them, and bring off four hundred virgins, which they give for wives to those who had taken refuge in Rimmon, 8—14. To provide for the two hundred dwell which remained, they propose to carry off two hundred virgins of the daughters of Shiloh, who might come to the annual feast of the Lord, held at that place, 15—22. They take this counsel, and each carries away a virgin from the feast, 23—25.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXI.

Verse 1. Now the men of Israel had sworn] Of this oath we had not heard before: but it appears they had commenced this war with a determination to destroy the Benjamites utterly; and that if any of them escaped the sword, no man should be permitted to give him his daughter to wife. By these means the remnant of the tribe must soon have been annihilated.

and lifted up their voices,
and wept sore;

3 And said, O LORD God of Israel, why is this come to pass in Israel, that there should be to-day one tribe lacking in Israel?

4 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the people rose early, and built there an altar, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings.

5 And the children of Israel said,
Who is there among all the tribes of Israel that came not up with the congregation unto the LORD? ^d for they had made a great oath concerning him that came not up to the LORD to Miz-peh, saying, He shall surely be put to 6 And the children of Israel repented them for Benjamin their brother, and said, There is one tribe cut off from Israel this day.

7 How shall we do for wives for them that remain, seeing we have sworn by the LORD that we will not give them of our daughters to wives?

knoweth the lying with man.

Literally the people came באו אל to Beth-el: this is considered as the name of a place by the Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic, and Septuagint.

And wept sore] Their revenge was satisfied; and now reflection brings them to contrition for what they had done.

Verse 3. Why is this come to pass] This was a very impertinent question. They knew well enough how it came to pass. It was right that the men of Gibeah should be punished; and it was right that they who vindicated them should share in that punishment: but they carried their revenge too far; they endeavoured to exterminate both man and beast, ch. xx. 48.

Verse 4. Built there an altar] This affords some evidence that this was not a regular place of worship, else an altar would have been found in the place: and their act was not according to the law, as may be seen in several places of the Pentateuch. But there was neither king nor law among them, and they did whatever appeared right in their own eyes.

Verse 7. How shall we do for wives for them] From this it appears that they had destroyed all the Benjamitish women and children! They had set out with the purpose of exterminating the whole tribe; and, therefore, they massacred the women, that if any of the men escaped, they might neither find wife nor daughter; and they bound themselves under an oath not to give any besb-gilead to the assembly.

9 For the people were numbered, and behold, there were none of the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead there.

10 And the congregation sent thither twelve thousand men of the valiantest, and commanded them, saying, Go and smite the inhabitants of Jabeshgilead with the edge of the sword, with the women and the children.

11 And this is the thing that ye shall do, ^g Ye shall utterly destroy every male, and every woman that hath ^h lain by man.

12 And they found among the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead four hundred ⁱ young virgins, that had known no man by lying with any male; and they brought them unto the camp to ^k Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan.

13 And the whole congregation sent some ^l to speak to the children of Benjamin ^m that were in the rock Rimmon, and to ⁿ call peaceably unto them.

14 And Benjamin came again at that time; and they gave them wives which they had saved alive of the women of Jabesh-gilead: and yet so they sufficed them not.

of their females to any of the remnant of this tribe; that thus the whole tribe might utterly perish.

Verse 8. There came none to the camp from Jabesh-gilead] As they had sworn to destroy those who would not assist in this war, ver. 5.
they determined to destroy the men of Jabesh, and to leave none alive except the virgins; and to give these to the six hundred Benjamites that had escaped to the rock Rimmon. So twelve thousand men went, smote the city, and killed all the males, and all the married women. The whole account is dreadful; and none could have been guilty of all these enormities, but those who were abandoned of God. The crime of the men of Gibeah was of the deepest die; the punishment, involving both the guilty and innocent, was extended to the most criminal excess; and their mode of redressing the evil which they had occasioned, was equally abominable.

Verse 13. And to call peaceably unto them.] To proclaim peace to them; to assure them that the enmity was all over; and that they might, with safety, leave their strong-hold.

Verse 14. Yet so they sufficed them not.] There were six hundred men at Rimmon, and all the young women they saved from Jabesh were only four hundred; therefore there were two hundred still wanting.

Verse 19. There is a feast of the Lord] What this feast was, is not known: it might be either the passover, pentecost, or the feast of tabernacles; or indeed some other, peculiar to this place. All the above feasts were celebrated at that time in the year when the vines were in full leaf; therefore, the Benjamites might easily conceal themselves in the vineyards; and the circumstances will answer to any of those feasts.

On the east side of the highway, &c.] I can see no reason for this minute description; unless it intimates that this feast was to be held this year in rather a different place to that which was usual; and, as the Benjamites had been shut up in their strong-hold in Rimmon, they might not have heard of this alteration; and it was necessary, in such a case, to give them the most circumstantial information, that they might succeed in their enterprise without being discovered.

Verse 21. And catch you every man his wife] That is, let each man of the two hundred Benjamites seize and carry off a woman, whom he is, from that hour, to consider as his wife.

Verse 22. Be favourable unto them] They promise to use their influence with the men of Shiloh to induce them to consent to a connexion, thus fraudulently obtained; and which the necessity of the case appeared to them to justify.

We reserved not to each man his wife in the war] The reading of the Vulgate is very remarkable:—Miseremini eorum, non enim rapuerunt eas jure bellantium atque victorum, sed rogantibus ut acciperent, non dedistis, et à vestra parte peccatum est; “Pardon them, for they have not taken them as victors take captives in war; but when they requested you to give them, you did not; therefore the fault is your own.” Here it is intimated that application had been made to the people of Shiloh to furnish

20 Therefore they commanded the children of Benjamin, saying, Go, and lie in wait in the vineyards;

21 And see, and behold, if the daughters of Shiloh come out ^u to dance in dances; then come ye out of the vineyards, and catch you every man his wife of the daughters of Shiloh, and go to the land of Benjamin.

22 And it shall be, when their fathers or their brethren come unto us to complain, that we will say unto them, ^v Be favourable unto them for our sakes; because we reserved not to each man his wife in the war: for ye did not give unto them at this time, that ye should be guilty.

23 And the children of Benjamin did so, and took them wives, according to their number, of them that danced, these two hundred Benjamites with wives, and that they had refused: and it was this refusal that induced the Benjamites to seize and carry them off. Does not St. Jerom, the translator, refer to the history of the rape of the Sabine virgins? See below. Houbigant translates the Hebrew thus; Veniam quæso illis date; non enim ad bellum duxerant suam quisque uxorem; et nisi eas illis nunc concedetis, delicti rei eritis; “Pardon them, I beseech you, for they have not each taken his wife to the war; and, unless you now give these to them, you will sin.” This intimates that, as the Benjamites had not taken their wives with them to the war, where some, if not all of them, might have escaped, and the Israelites found them in the cities, and put them all to the sword; therefore the people of Shiloh should give up those two hundred young women to them for wives; and if they did not, it would be a sin, the circumstances of the case being considered.

Our translation seems to give, as a reason to the men of Shiloh why they should pardon this rape, that, as they had not permitted the women to live, in their war with Benjamin, therefore these men are now destitute: and the concession which they wish them to make may be considered as more of an obligation to the Israelites than to the Benjamites. It is an obscure sentence; and the reader, if not pleased with what is laid down, may endeavour to satisfy himself with others, which he may find in different versions and commentators. The Vulgate gives a good sense to the passage; but probably Houbigant comes nearest to the meaning.

Verse 23. They went and returned unto their inheritance] It appears that the Benjamites acted in the most honourable way by the women whom they had thus violently carried off; and we may rest assured they took them to an inheritance at least equal to their own; for it does not appear that any part of the lands of the Benjamites, was alienated from them: and the six hundred men in question shared, for the present, the inheritance of many thousands.

Verse 24. Every man to his tribe] Though this must have been four months after the war with Benjamin, chap. xx. 47. yet it appears the armies did not disband till they had got the remnant of Benjamin settled, as is here related.

Verse 25. In those days there was no king in Israel] Let no man suppose that the sacred writer, by relating the atrocities in this and the preceding chapters, justifies the actions themselves: by no means. Indeed they cannot be justified; and the writer, by relating them, gives the strongest proof of the authenticity of the whole, by such an impartial relation of facts as was highly to the discredit of his country.

I HAVE already referred to the rape of the Sabine virgins. The story is told by Livy, Hist. lib. i. cap. 9. the substance of which is as follows:—Romulus, having opened an asylum at his new-built city of Rome for all kinds of persons, the number of men who flocked to his standard was soon very considerable; but, as they had few women, or, as Livy says, penuria mulierum, a dearth of women, he sent to all the neighbouring states to invite them to make intermarriages with his people. Not one of the tribes around him received the proposal; and some of them insulted his ambassadors, and said, Ecquod feminis quoque asylum aperuissent? Id enim demum compar connubium fore: "Why have you not also opened an asylum for women, which would have afforded you suitable matches?" This exasperated Romulus, but he concealed his resentment; and, having published that he intended a great feast to Neptune Equestor, invited all the neighbouring tribes to come to it; they did so, and were received by the Romans with the greatest cordiality and friendship. The Sabines, with their wives and children, came in great numbers; and each Roman citizen entertained a stranger. When the games began, and each was intent on the spectacles before them, at a signal given, the young Romans rushed in among the Sabine women, and each carried off one; whom, however, they used in the kindest manner, marrying them according to their own rites, with due solemnity; and admitting them to all the rights and privileges of the new commonwealth. The number carried off on this occasion amounted to near seven hundred: but this act of violence produced disastrous wars between the Romans and the Sabines, which were at last happily terminated by the mediation of the very women whose rape had been the cause of their commencement. The story may be seen at large in Livy, Plutarch, and others.

Thus ends the Book of Judges; a work which, while it introduces the history of Samuel, and that of the kings of Judah and Israel, forms, in some sort, a supplement to the Book of Joshua; and furnishes the only account we have of those times of anarchy and confusion, which extended nearly from the times of the elders, who survived Joshua, to the establishment of the Jewish monarchy, under Saul, David, and their successors. For other uses of this book see the preface.

PREFACE

BOOK OF RUTH.

WHEN and by whom the Book of Ruth was written, are points not agreed on among critics and commentators.

As to the transactions recorded in it, they are variously placed. In the book itself there is no other notation of time than merely this, that the things came to pass in the days when the Judges ruled: therefore, some have placed these transactions under Ehud, others under Gideon, others under Barak, others under Abimelech, and others under Shamgar. This last is the opinion of Archbishop Ussher; and most chronologers adopt it. The book is evidently an appendix to the Book of Judges, and contains a perfect history in itself; and, therefore, should not be inserted in any part of that book. It also seems as an introduction to the books of Samuel, in which the history of David is contained, as it gives the genealogy of this prince. It is also not without its use in matters which respect the Gospel, as it ascertains the line by which Jesus Christ came.

As to the author, he is as uncertain as the time. It has been attributed to Hezekiah, to Ezra, and to Samuel; and it is most likely that the author of the two books of Samuel was also the writer of this little book, as it seems necessary to complete his plan of the history of David. See the Preface to the First Book of Samuel.

The sum of the history contained in this book is the following:—A man of Beth-lehem, named Elimelech, with his wife Naomi, and his two sons, Mahlon and Chilion, left his own country in the time of a famine, and went to sojourn in the land of Moab. There he died; and Naomi married her two sons to two Moabitish women: Mahlon married Ruth, who is the chief subject of this book: and Chilion married one named Orpah. In about ten years both these brethren died: and Naomi, accompanied by her two daughters-in-law, set out to return to the land of Judah, she having heard that plenty was again restored to her country. On the way, she besought her daughters to return to their own country and kindred. Orpah took her advice; and, after an affectionate parting, returned: but Ruth insisted on accompanying her mother-in-law. They arrived in Beth-lehem about the time of harvest; and Ruth went into the fields to glean for their support. The ground on which she was accidentally employed belonged to Boaz, one of the relatives of Elimelech, her father-in-law: who, finding who she was, ordered her to be kindly treated, and appointed her both meat and drink with his own servants. Finding that she was by marriage his kinswoman, he purposed to take her to wife, if a nearer kinsman, who was then living, should refuse. He was accordingly applied to, refused to take Ruth, and surrendered his right to her, according to the custom of those times, at the gate of Beth-lehem, before the elders of the city. Boaz then took her to wife, by whom she had Obed, who was father to Jesse, the father of David.

To the questions, Who was Boaz? and who was Ruth? no satisfactory answer can be given. All we know, for certain, is that Boaz was an Ephraimite, of Beth-lehem; and Ruth a Moabitess, and consequently educated a heathen. But what we want in certainty, several have attempted to supply by conjecture: with them Boaz was the same as Ibzan, Judges xii. 8—10. and Ruth was the daughter of Egton, king of Moab. This is the opinion maintained by the Chaldee Targum, on this book; to which I shall, in the course of the notes, have farther occasion to refer. The rabbins say that Elimelech was brother to Salmon, who married Rahab; and that Naomi was his niece.

The genealogy of David, as stated in this book, is as follows:

A. M. 2236. Judah, Pharez, Ezron, called also Hezron, Aram, called also Ram, Aminadab,	 	Nahshon, Salmon, who married Rahab; Boaz, who married Ruth; Obed, who begat Jesse, A. M. 2919. David born.

This chronology is according to Archbishop Ussher: and includes, from Judah to David, six hundred and seventy years.

THE BOOK OF RUTH.

Year before the common Year of Christ, 1186.—Year from the Flood, 1162.—Year before the first Olympiad, 410.—Creation from Tisi, or September, 2818.—This chronology is upon the supposition that Obed was forty years of age at the birth of Jesse; and Jesse fifty at the birth of David.

CHAPTER I.

Elimelech, his wife Naomi, and their two sons, Mahlon and Chilion, flee from a famine in the land of Israel, and go to sojourn in Moab, 1, 2. Here his two sons married; and, in the space of ten years, both their father and they died, 3—6. Naomi sets out on her return to her own country, accompanied by her daughters-in-law, Orpah and Ruth; whom she endeavours to persuade to return to their own people, 7—13. Orpah returns, but Ruth accompanies her mother-in-law, 14—18. They arrive at Beth-lehem in the time of the barley-harvest, 19—22.

NOW it came to pass, in the days when the judges ruled, that there was a famine in the land. And a certain man of Beth-lehem-judah went to sojourn in the country of Moab, he, and his wife, and his two sons.

2 And the name of the man was Elimelech, and the name of his wife Naomi, and the name of his two sons Mahlon and Chilion, Ephrathites of Beth-lehem-judah. And they came into the country of Moab, and continued there.

3 And Elimelech, Naomi's husband, died, and she was left, and her two sons.

4 And they took them wives of the women of Moab; the name of the one was Orpah, and the name of the other Ruth: and they dwelt there about ten years.

5 And Mahlon and Chilion died also both of them; and the woman was left of her two sons and her husband.

6 ¶ Then she arose with her daughters-in-law, that she might return from the country of Moab: for she had heard in the country of Moab how that the LORD had visited his people in giving them bread.

7 Wherefore she went forth out of the place where she was, and her two daughters-in-law with her; and they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. When the judges ruled] We know not under what judge this happened; some say under Ehud, others under Shamgar. See the preface.

There was a famine] Probably occasioned by the depredations of the Philistines, Ammonites, &c. carrying off the corn as soon as it was ripe; or destroying it on the field.

The Targum says, "God has decreed ten grievous famines to take place in the world, to punish the inhabitants of the earth, before the coming of Messiah the King. The first, in the days of Adam; the second, in the days of Lamech; the third, in the days of Abraham; the fourth, in the days of Isaac; the fifth, in the days of Jacob; the sixth, in the days of Boaz, who is called Abtsan, (Ibzan,) the Just, of Beth-lehem-judah; the seventh, in the days of David, king of Israel; the eighth, in the days of Elijah the prophet; the ninth, in the days of Elishah, in Samaria; the tenth is yet to come; and it is not a famine of bread or of water, but of hearing the word of prophecy from the mouth of the Lord; and even now this famine is grievous in the land of Israel."

Verse 2. Elimelech] That is, God is my king.

Naomi] Beautiful, or amiable.

Mahlon] Infirmity.

Chilion] Finished, completed.

Verse 3. Elimelech—died] Probably a short time after his arrival in Moab.

Verse 4. And they took them wives] The Targum very properly observes, that they transgressed the decree of the word of the Lord, and took to themselves strange women.

Verse 5. And Mahlon and Chilion died] The Targum adds, And because they transgressed the decree of the word of the Lord, and joined affinity with strange people, therefore their days were cut off. It is very likely that there is more here than conjecture.

Verse 6. She had heard] By the mouth of an angel, says the Targum.

The LORD had visited his people] "Because of the righteousness of Ibzan the judge, and because of the supplications of pious Boaz." Targum.

It is imagined, and not without probability, that Mahlon and Chilion are the same with Joash and Saraph, mentioned 1 Chron. iv. 22. where the Hebrew should be thus translated, And Joash and Saraph, who married in Moab, and dwelt in Lehem. See the Hebrew.

8 And Naomi said unto her two daughters-in-law, ^k Go, return each to her mother's house: ^l the LORD deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with ^m the dead, and with me.

9 The LORD grant you that ye may find ⁿ rest, each of you in the house of her husband. Then she kissed them; and they lifted up their voice, and wept.

10 And they said unto her, Surely we will return with thee unto thy people.

11 And Naomi said, Turn again, my daughters: why will ye go with me? are there yet any more sons in my womb, ^o that they may be your husbands?

12 Turn again, my daughters; go your way; for I am too old to have a husband. If I should say, I have hope, ^p if I should have a husband also to-night, and should also bear sons,

13 Would ye ^q tarry for them till they

Verse 11. Are there yet any more sons] This was spoken in allusion to the custom that when a married brother died, without leaving posterity, his brother should take his widow; and the children of such a marriage were accounted the children of the deceased brother. There is something very persuasive and affecting in the address of Naomi to her daughters-in-law:—let us observe the particulars.

1. She intimates that she had no other sons to give them.

2. That she was not with child; so there could be no expectation.

3. That she was too old to have a husband.

4. That though she should marry that night, and have children, yet they could not wait till such sons were marriageable: she, therefore, begs them to return to their own country, where they might be comfortably settled among their own kindred.

Verse 14. And Orpah kissed her mother-in-law] The Septuagint add, Και ετεσπεφεν εις τον λαον αυτης, And returned to her own people. The Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, are to the same purpose.

Verse 15. Gone back—unto her gods] They were probably both idolaters: their having been proselytes is an unfounded conjecture. Chemosh was the grand idol of the Moabites. The conversion of Ruth probably commenced at this time.

Verse 16. And Ruth said] A more perfect surrender was never made of friendly feelings to a friend: I will not leave thee; I will follow thee: I will lodge where thou lodgest; take the same fare with which thou meetest:—thy people shall be my people; I most cheerfully abandon my own country, and determine to end my days in thine. I will also, henceforth, have no god but thy God; and be joined with thee in worship as I am in affection and consanguinity. I were grown? would ye stay for them from having husbands? nay, my daughters; for ^s it grieveth me much for your sakes, that ^t the hand of the LORD is gone out against me.

14 And they lifted up their voice, and wept again: and Orpah ^u kissed her mother-in-law; but Ruth ^v clave unto her.

15 And she said, Behold, thy sister-in-law is gone back unto her people, and unto ^w her gods: ^x return thou after thy sister-in-law.

16 And Ruth said, ^y Entreat ^z me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: ^a thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.

17 Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: ^b the LORD

^u Eccles. 12. 9.—^v Prov. 17. 17. & 18. 24.—^w Judg. 11. 24. ^x See Josh. 24. 15, 19. 2 Kings 2. 2. Luke 24. 28.—^y Or, Be not against me.—^z 2 Kings 2. 2, 4, 6.—^a Chap. 2. 11, 12. ^b 1 Sam. 3. 17. & 25. 22. 2 Sam. 19. 13. 2 Kings 6. 31.

will cleave unto thee even unto death, die where thou diest, and be buried, if possible, in the same grave. This was a most extraordinary attachment, and evidently without any secular motive.

The Targum adds several things to this conversation between Naomi and Ruth: I shall subjoin them. "And Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee, for I desire to become a proselyte." And Naomi said, We are commanded to keep the sabbath, and other holy days; and on it not to travel more than two thousand cubits. And Ruth said, "Whither thou goest, I will go." And Naomi said, We are commanded not to lodge with the Gentiles. Ruth answered, "Where thou lodgest, I will lodge." And Naomi said, We are commanded to observe the one hundred and thirteen precepts. Ruth answered, What thy people observe, that will I observe; as if they had been my people of old. And Naomi said, We are commanded not to worship with any strange worship. Ruth answered, "Thy God shall be my God." Naomi said, We have four kinds of capital punishments for criminals; stoning, burning, beheading, and hanging. Ruth answered, "In whatsoever manner thou diest, I will die." Naomi said, We have a house of burial. Ruth answered, "And there will I be buried."

It is very likely that some such conversation as this took place between the elders and those who were becoming proselytes. This verse is famous among those who strive to divine by the Bible. I should relate the particulars, but am afraid they might lead to a continuance of the practice.

Verse 17. The LORD do so to me, and more] May he inflict any of those punishments on me, and any worse punishment, if I part from thee till death. And it appears that she was true to her engagement; for Naomi was nourished in the house of Boaz in her old age, and became the fosterer and nurse of their son Obed, chap.

iv. 15, 16.

Verse 19. All the city was moved about them
It appears that Naomi was not only well known, but highly respected also, at Beth-lehem; a proof that Elimelech was of high consideration in that place.

Verse 20. Call me Mara] That is, bitter;
one whose life is grievous to her.

The Almighty] [†] Shaddy, he who is suffi- sufficient has taken away the props and supports of my life.

Verse 21. I went out full] Having a husband, and two sons:—

The Lord hath brought me home again empty] Having lost all three by death. It is also likely that Elimelech took considerable property with him into the land of Moab; for, as he fled from the face of the famine, he would naturally take his property with him; and on this Naomi subsisted till her return to Bethlehem, which she might not have thought of till all was spent.

Verse 22. In the beginning of barley-harvest.
This was in the beginning of spring, for the barley-harvest began immediately after the passover; and that feast was held the 15th of the month Nisan, which corresponds nearly with our March.

The Targum says, "They came to Beth-le-hem on that day in which the children of Israel began to mow the sheaf of barley which was to be waved before the Lord." This circumstance is the more distinctly marked, because of Ruth's gleaning, mentioned in the succeeding chapter.

1. THE native, the amiable simplicity in which the story of the preceding chapter is told, is a proof of its genuineness. There are several sympathetic circumstances reorded here which no forgery could have invented.
There is too much of nature to admit any thing of art.

Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me.

21 I went out full, ⁱ and the LORD hath brought me home again empty: why then call ye me Naomi, seeing the LORD hath testified against me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me?

22 So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, with her, which returned out of the country of Moab: and they came to Bethlehem ^k in the beginning of barley-harvest.

2. On the marriage of Orpah and Ruth, and the wish of Naomi that they might find rest in the house of their husbands, there are some pious and sensible observations in Mr. Ness' History and Mystery of the Book of Ruth; from which I shall lay the following extract before my readers:

"A married estate is a state of rest: so it is called here, and in chap. iii. 1. Hence mari-riage is called portus juventutis, the port or haven of young people; whose affections, while unmarried, are continually floating, or tossed to and fro, like a ship upon the waters, till they come into this happy harbour. There is a natural propension in most persons toward nuptial communion; as all created beings have a natural tendency toward their proper centre, (leve sursum, et grave deorsum), and are restless out of it: so the rabbins say, Requirit vir costam suam, et requirit femina sedem suam.
The man is restless while he misses his rib that was taken out of his side, and the woman is restless till she get under the man's arm, from whence she was taken." Oh! look up to God then, ye unmarried ones, and cry with good Naomi, The Lord grant me rest, (for my roving affections,) in the house of some good consort, that I may live in peace and plenty, with content and comfort, all my days. Know that your marriage is, (of all your civil affairs,) of the greatest importance, having an influence upon your whole life. It is either your making or marring in this world; 'tis like a stratagem in war, wherein a miscarriage cannot be recalled when we will; for we marry for life. I am thine, and thou art mine, brevis quidem canticu- cula est, is a short song; sed longum habet epi- phonema, but it hath a long under-song. So an error here is irrecoverable; you have need of Argus' hundred eyes, to look withal before you leap." This is good advice:—but who, among the persons concerned, will have grace enough to take it?

CHAPTER II.

Ruth goes to glean in the field of Boaz, 1—3. Boaz finds her, and inquires who she is, 4—7. He speaks kindly to her, gives her permission to follow his reapers, and orders them to use her well, 8—16. She returns in the evening to Naomi, and tells her of her fare; from whom she receives encouragement and advice, 17—23.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. A mighty man of wealth] We have already seen that some suppose Boaz to have been one of the judges of Israel: he was, no doubt, a man of considerable property.

Verse 2. Glean ears of corn] The word glean comes from the French glaner, to gather ears, or grains of corn. This was formerly a general custom in England and Ireland: the poor went into the fields and collected the straggling ears of corn after the reapers; and it was long supposed that this was their right, and that the law recognised it. But although it has been an old custom, I find that it is now settled by a solemn judgment of the court of Common Pleas, that a right to glean in the harvest-field cannot be claimed by any person at common law: see Law Dictionary, article gleaning. Any person may permit or prevent it in his own grounds.
By the Irish acts, 25 Hen. VIII. c. 1. and 28
Hen. VIII. c. 24. gleaning and leasing are so restricted as to be, in fact, prohibited in that part of the United Kingdom. See the note on Lev. xix. 10.

After him in whose sight I shall find grace]
She did not mean Boaz: but she purposed to go out where they were now reaping, and glean after any person who might permit her, or use her in a friendly manner. The words seem to intimate that, notwithstanding the law of Moses, the gleaners might be prevented by the owner of the field.

Verse 3. And her hap was] So she was accidentally, or providentially, led to that part of the cultivated country which belonged to Boaz.

Verse 4. Boaz came from Bethlehem] This salutation between Boaz and his reapers is worthy of particular regard; he said, יהוה עמכם Yehovah immakem, "Jehovah be with you!"
They said, יהוה עמך Yehrekeka Yehovah, "May Jehovah bless thee!" Can a pious mind read these godly salutations without wishing for a return of those simple primitive times? The words may be thus paraphrased: "May God be with you to preserve you from accidents, and strengthen you to accomplish your work!"
"May God bless THEE with the increase of the 5 Then said Boaz unto his ^g servant that was set over the reapers, Whose damsel is this?

6 And the servant that was set over the reapers answered and said, It is the Moabitish damsel ^h that came back with Naomi out of the country of Moab.

7 And she said, I pray you, let me glean and gather after the reapers among the sheaves: so she came, and hath continued even from the morning until now, that she tarried a little in the house.

field, and grace to use his bounty to the glory of the giver!"

Verse 5. His servant that was set over the reapers] This was a kind of steward, or hind, who had the under management of the estate.
Some think that an officer of this kind is intended in the description given by Homer of the labours of a harvest-field, as represented by Vulcan on one compartment of the shield which he made for Achilles:—

Εν δ' ἐτίθει τέμενος· βαθυλήϊον· ἔνθα δ' ἐρίβοι

Iliad xviii. v. 550.

There too he formed the likeness of a field
Crowded with corn, in which the reapers toil'd,
Each with a sharp-tooth'd sickle in his hand.
Along the furrow here, the harvest fell
In frequent handfuls; there, they bound the sheaves.
Three binders of the sheaves their sultry task
All plied industrious; and behind them boys Attended, filling with the corn their arms,
And offering still their bundles to be bound.
Amid them, staff in hand, the master stood,
Enjoying, mute, the order of the field:
While shaded by an oak apart, his train
Prepared the banquet; a well thriven ox
New slain, and the attendant maidens mix'd Large supper for the hinds, of whitest flour. Cowper.

This scene is well described; and the person who acts as overseer is here called βασιλεὺς, king, and his staff is called σκηπτρον, a sceptre;
and he stands in mute dignity, merely to see that the work is well done, and that each performs his task; and there appear to me to be gleaners in the description—viz. the boys who gather the handfuls after the three binders. See the Greek.

Verse 7. That she tarried a little in the house.]
It seems as if the reapers were now resting in their tent; and that Ruth had just gone in with them, to take her rest also.

8 Then said Boaz unto Ruth, Hearst thou not, my daughter? Go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence, but abide here fast by my maidens:

9 Let thine eyes be on the field that they do reap, and go thou after them: have I not charged the young men that they shall not touch thee? and when thou art athirst, go unto the vessels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn.

10 Then she ^b fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger?

11 And Boaz answered and said unto her, It hath fully been showed me, ⁱ all that thou hast done unto thy mother-in-law since the death of thine husband; and how thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knewest not heretofore.

Verse 8. Abide here fast by my maidens] These were probably employed in making bands, and laying on them enough to form a sheaf, which the binders would tie and form into shocks or thraves. When the maidens had gathered up the scattered handfuls thrown down by the reapers, Ruth picked up any straggling heads or ears which they had left.

Verse 9. The young men that they shall not touch thee] This was peculiarly necessary, as she was a stranger, and unprotected.

Verse 10. Then she fell on her face] Prostrated herself, as was the custom in the East when inferiors approached those of superior rank. The Targum adds to the conversation between Ruth and Boaz: "How, says she, have I obtained grace in thy sight, that thou shouldst acknowledge me who am a stranger, and one of the daughters of Moab, of whom it is said the unclean shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord? And Boaz answered, It has been certainly told me by the word of the wise, that what the Lord hath decreed he has not decreed concerning the women, but the men. And it has been surely said to me by prophecy, that kings and prophets shall proceed from thee because of the good which thou hast done," &c.

Verse 12. The Lord recompense thy work] The dutiful respect which thou hast paid to thy husband, and thy tender and affectionate attachment to thy aged mother-in-law.

And a full reward be given thee] This is spoken with great modesty and piety: the 15 And when she was risen up to glean, Boaz commanded his young men, saying, Let her glean even among the sheaves, and ^s reproach her not:

kindness I show thee is little in comparison of thy desert; God alone can give thee a full reward for thy kindness to thy husband and mother-in-law; and he will do it, because thou art come to trust under his wings; to become a proselyte to his religion. The metaphor is taken from the young of fowls; who, seeing a bird of prey, run to their mother to be covered by her wings from danger; and also take shelter from storms, tempests, cold, &c. It is evident from this, that Ruth had already attached herself to the Jewish religion.

Verse 13. Not like unto one of thine handmaidens] I am as unworthy of thy regards as any of thy own maid-servants; and yet thou showest me distinguished kindness.

Verse 14. Dip thy morsel in the vinegar] The grn chomets, which we here translate vinegar, seems to have been some refreshing kind of acid sauce used by the reapers to dip their bread in, which both cooled and refreshed them. Vinegar, robb of fruits, &c. are used for this purpose in the East to the present day. And the custom of the Arabs, according to Dr. Shaw, is to dip the bread and hand together into these cooling and refreshing articles.

Parched corn] This was a frequent repast among the ancients in almost all countries; see the notes on Lev. ii. 1—14.

Verse 15. Let her glean even among the sheaves] This was a privilege: for no person should glean till the sheaves were all bound, and the shocks set up.

Verse 17. An ephah of barley.] Not less and it was about an ephah of barley.

18 ¶ And she took it up, and went into the city : and her mother-in-law saw what she had gleaned : and she brought forth, and gave to her 'that she had reserved' after she was sufficed.

19 And her mother-in-law said unto her, Where hast thou gleaned to-day ? and where wroughtest thou ? Blessed be he that did ' take knowledge of thee. And she showed her mother-in-law with whom she had wrought, and said, The man's name with whom I wrought to-day is Boaz.

20 And Naomi said unto her daughter-in-law, ' Blessed be he of the LORD, who hath not left off his kindness to the living and to the dead. And Naomi said unto her, The man is near of kin unto us, ' one ' of our next kinsmen.

21 And Ruth the Moabitess said, He said unto me also, 'Thou shalt keep fast by my young men, until they have ended all my harvest.

22 And Naomi said unto Ruth her daughter-in-law, It is good, my daughter, that thou go out with his maidens, that they ' meet thee not in any other field.

23 So she kept fast by the maidens of Boaz to glean unto the end of barley-harvest, and of wheat-harvest ; and dwelt with her mother-in-law.

than seven gallons and a half ; a good day's work. On Hebrew measures of capacity see the note on Exod. xvi. 16.

Verse 18. And gave to her that she had reserved] As Ruth had received a distinct portion at dinner-time, of which she had more than she could eat, ver. 14. it appears she brought the rest home to her mother-in-law, as is here related.

Verse 20. To the living and to the dead.] Naomi and Ruth were the living ; and they were also the representatives of Elimelech and Chilion, who were dead. Naomi was of the family ; and Ruth, though not of the family, was a representative of one of its deceased branches, being the widow of Chilion.

One of our next kinsmen.] מְגוֹאֲלֵינוּ Megoa-leynu, of our redeemers ; one who has the right to redeem the forfeited inheritance of the family. The word גֹּאֵל goel, signifies a near kinsman ; one who, by the Mosaic law, had a right to redeem an inheritance, and also was permitted to vindicate or avenge the death of his relation by killing the slayer, if he found him out of the cities of refuge.

In order to prevent families from running to decay, if a brother died childless, the next unmarried brother took his widow ; and the children from that marriage were reputed the children of the deceased brother. The office of the next akin was threefold.—1. It belonged to him to buy back the forfeited inheritance, or the liberty of him who had been obliged to sell himself for a servant. 2. It was his right to avenge the blood of any of the family who had been killed, by killing the murderer. 3. It belonged to him to take the widow of a deceased brother, or relative, if he died childless. If the nearest akin in any case refused, he was treated with indignity, lost his right to the inheritance, and the next of kin to him might come forward and take the widow, &c. as in the case of Boaz. See chap. iv.

Verse 21. Keep fast by my young men] The word הַנְּעָרִים hana'irim, should be translated servants, both the male and female being included in it ; the latter especially, as we see in ver. 22, 23.

Verse 23. And of wheat-harvest] That is, she was to continue gleaning in the farm of Boaz, to the end of the barley-harvest ; and then, when the wheat-harvest began, to continue to its conclusion in the same way. In the interim, as well as each night, she lodged with her mother-in-law.

1. Ruth seems to have been a woman of a very amiable mind : she was modest, and she was industrious, and most probably a comely woman ; and all these things served to attract the attention of Boaz, and to engage his affection. Her attachment also to her mother-in-law could not fail to secure his esteem. All these things worked together, in the course of providence, to bring about a matrimonial connexion ; which, in its issue, was intimately connected with the salvation of a lost world ; for, from this very line, Jesus Christ, according to the flesh, sprang ; and Ruth showed herself as worthy to be one of his progenitors as the Virgin Mary was to be his mother. See the notes on Matt. chap. i.

2. We should carefully attend to the leadings and to the workings of God's providence ; it is our duty and our interest to do both, for the path of duty is ever the way of safety. Had not Ruth acted thus, how dreary and uncomfortable must her life have been ; but she followed God fully, and in a path apparently dangerous, and yet not only sustained no injury, but succeeded well in all things : from this, as well as from innumerable other circumstances, we see the truth of that word, Acknowledge him in all thy ways, and he will direct thy steps. And with this we may ever connect, Trust in the Lord with thy whole heart, and lean not to thy own understanding. Whosoever follows God in simplicity of heart will most assuredly be guided into all truth.

She acts according to her mother-in-law's direction, and is kindly received by Boaz, who promises to marry her, should her nearer kinsman refuse, 6-13. He gives her six measures of barley, and sends her away privately to her mother-in-law, who augurs favourably of the issue of the plan she had laid, 14-18.

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. Shall I not endeavour to procure thee a proper husband? See chap. i. 9. and the observations at the end of that chapter.

Verse 2. He winnoweth barley to-night It is very likely that the winnowing of grain was effected by taking up in a broad thin vessel, or sieve, a portion of the corn, and letting it down slowly in the wind: thus the grain would, by its own weight, fall in one place, while the chaff, &c. would be carried to a distance by the wind. It is said here that this was done at night; probably what was thrashed out in the day was winnowed in the evening, when the sea-breeze set in, which was common in Palestine; and as this took place in the evening only, that was the time in which they would naturally winnow their corn.

Verse 3. Wash thyself therefore She made Ruth put on her best dress, that Boaz might, in the course of the day, be the more attracted by her person; and be the better disposed to receive her as Naomi wished.

Verse 4. Uncover his feet, and lay thee down It is said that women in the East, when going to the bed of their lawful husbands, through modesty, and in token of subjection, go to the bed's foot, and, gently raising the clothes, creep under them up to their proper place. See Calmet.

On the whole, we must say, had not Boaz been a person of extraordinary piety, prudence, and continence, this experiment might have been fatal to Ruth. We cannot easily account for this transaction; probably Naomi knew more than she revealed to her daughter-in-law. The experiment, however, was dangerous, and should in no sense be imitated.

5 And she said unto her, All that thou sayest unto me I will do.

6 ¶ And she went down unto the floor, and did according to all that her mother-in-law bade her.

7 And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and ^f his heart was merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn: and she came softly, and uncovered his feet, and laid her down.

8 ¶ And it came to pass at midnight, that the man was afraid, and ^g turned himself: and, behold, a woman lay at his feet.

9 And he said, Who art thou? And she answered, I am Ruth thine handmaid: ^h spread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid; for thou art ⁱ a ^k near kinsman.

^f Judg. 19. 6, 9, 22. 2 Sam. 13. 28. Esth. 1. 10.—^g Or, took hold on.—^h Ezek. 16. 8.—ⁱ Or, one that hath right to redeem. ^k Ch. 2. 20. & Ver. 12.

He will tell thee what thou shalt do. The Targum reads the clause thus: "Thou shalt ask counsel from him, and he shall tell thee what thou shouldst do."

Verse 7. When Boaz had eaten and drunk The Targum adds, "He blessed the name of the Lord, who had heard his prayer, and removed famine from the land of Israel."

Went to lie down As the thrashing-floors of the Eastern nations are, in general, in the open air, it is very likely that the owner, or some confidential person, continued in the fields till the grain was secured, having a tent in the place where the corn was thrashed and winnowed. Boaz seems to have acted thus.

Verse 8. The man was afraid, and turned himself The verb ילל, yillapeth, which we render he turned himself, has puzzled even the Targumist, who translates the clause thus: "The man trembled, and his flesh became like a (boiled) turnip through fear." It is fully evident Boaz had no intimation of the present proceedings. To this verse the Targumist adds much: he says, "Boaz subdued his concupiscence, and acted toward her as Joseph did to the Egyptian wife of his master, and as Pelatiel, the son of Laish the pious, did to Michal, the daughter of Saul, the wife of David, who put a sword between Michal and himself, because he would not approach to her."

Verse 9. Spread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid Hebrew, spread thy wing. The wing is the emblem of protection; and is a metaphor taken from the young of fowls, which run under the wings of their mothers, that they may be saved from birds of prey. The meaning here is, take me to thee for wife; and so the Targum has translated it, Let thy name be called on thy handmaid to take me for wife, because thou art the redeemer: i. e. Thou art the ^{goel}, the kinsman to whom the right of redemption belongs. See on chap. ii. 20. Even to the present day, when a Jew marries a woman, he throws the skirt, or end of his talith, over her, to signify that he has taken her under his protection.

Verse 10. In the latter end than at the beginning] It is not easy to find out what Boaz means. Perhaps ^{רחמי} chased, which we translate kindness, means piety; as if he had said, Thou hast given great proof of thy piety in this latter instance, when thou hast avoided the young and those of thy own age, to associate thyself with an elderly man, merely for the purpose of having the divine injunction fulfilled; viz. that the brother, or next akin, might take the wife of the deceased, and raise a family to him who had died childless, that his name might not become extinct in Israel: this latter act is a greater proof of thy piety and sincerity, than any thing that could be inferred from thy becoming a proselyte.

Whether poor or rich.] So it appears from this that it was not to mend her condition in life that Ruth endeavoured to get Boaz for her husband, for she might have had a rich young man; but she preferred the building up the house of her deceased husband. See above.

Verse 12. There is a kinsman nearer than I.] It is very likely that Naomi was not acquainted with this circumstance. Some have supposed that there was a brother of Elimelech remaining, who was nearer than Boaz, who is supposed to have been only a nephew: the former, therefore, must have a prior right.

Verse 13. As the LORD liveth.] Thus he bound morning: and she rose up before one could know another. And he said, ^u Let it not be known that a woman came into the floor.

15 Also he said, Bring the ^v veil that thou hast upon thee, and hold it. And when she held it, he measured six measures of barley, and laid it on her: and she went into the city.

16 And when she came to her mother-in-law, she said, Who art thou, my daughter? And she told her all that the man had done to her.

17 And she said, These six measures of barley gave he me; for he said to me, Go not empty unto thy mother-in-law.

18 Then said she, ^w Sit still, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall: for the man will not be in rest, ^x until he have finished the thing this day.

Verse 15. Bring the veil] ^{המטותי} hamitpa-chath: this seems to have been a cloak, plaid, or what the Arabs call hyke, which has been largely explained elsewhere. See Judg. xiv. 12.

Six measures of barley] We supply the word measures, for the Hebrew mentions no quantity. The Targum renders six seahs, ^{ששה סאים} shail seim. A seah was about two gallons and a half, which must have been a very large load for a woman; and so the Targumist thought, for he adds, And she received strength from the Lord to carry it. If the omer be meant, which is about six pints, the load would not be so great, as this would amount to but about four gallons and a half: a very goodly present, and much more than she could have got by gleaning. The Targum says, that on receiving these six measures, "it was said, in the spirit of prophecy, that from her should proceed the six righteous persons of the world: viz. David, Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach, Abednego, and the King Messiah; each of whom should be blessed with six benedictions." It is, however, remarkable, that the Targum makes the Messiah to spring from her through the line of David, and goes down to Daniel and his companions; which Daniel prophesied so clearly, not only of the advent of Messiah the Prince; but also of the very time in which he was to come, and the sacrificial death he was to die.

Verse 18. Until thou know how the matter will fall] That is, whether he who is nearer of kin than Boaz will take thee to wife: do not return again till this thing is determined. Boaz lost no time to bring this to an issue, as we shall see in the following chapter.

CHAPTER IV.

Boaz gathers a council of the elders at the city gate, states the case, and proposes to the nearest kinsman to redeem the inheritance of Elimelech, and take Ruth to wife, 1—5. The kinsman refuses, and relinquishes his right to Boaz, 6. The manner of redemption in such cases, 7, 8. Boaz redeems the inheritance in the presence of the elders, and of the people; who witness the contract, and pray for God's blessing upon the marriage, 9—12. Boaz takes Ruth for wife, and she bears a son, 13. The people's observations on the birth of the child, 14, 15. It is given to Naomi to nurse, 16. The neighbouring women name the child, and the book concludes with the genealogy of David, 17—32.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Then went Boaz up to the gate] We have often had occasion to remark, that the gate or entrance to any city or town was the place where the court of justice was ordinarily kept. For an account of the officers in such places, see the note on Deut. xvi. 18.

Ho, such a one!—sit down here.] This familiar mode of compellation is first used here. The original is שבה פה עלי Shebah poh, Peloni Almoni! Hark ye! Mr. such-a-one, of such a place; come and sit down here. This is used when the person of the individual is known, and his name and residence unknown: עלי almoni comes from אלם alam, he was hidden; hence the Septuagint render it by αγνοος, thou unknown person. עלי Peloni, comes from פלה palah, to sever, or distinguish. You, of such a particular place. Modes of compellation of this kind are common in all languages.

Verse 2. He took ten men] Probably it required this number to constitute a court. How simple, and how rational was this proceeding! 1. The man who had a suit, went to the city gates. 2. Here he stopped, till the person with whom he had the suit came to the gate, on his way to his work. 3. He called him by name, and he stopped and sat down. 4. Then ten elders were called, and they came and sat down. 5. When all this was done, the appellant preferred his suit. 6. Then the appellee returned his answer. 7. When the elders heard the case, and the response of the appellee, they pronounced judgment; which judgment was always according to the custom of the place. 8. When this was done, the people, who happened to be present, witnessed the issue. And thus the business was settled, without lawyers, or legal casuistry. A question of this kind, in one of our courts of justice, in these enlightened times, would require many days' previous preparation of the attorney, and several hours' arguing between counsellor Botherum and counsellor

4 And I thought to advertise thee, saying, Buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it: but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: for there is none to redeem it besides thee; and I am after thee. And he said, I will redeem it.

5 Then said Boaz, What day thou buyest the field of the hand of Naomi, thou must buy it also of Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of the dead, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance.

d Jer. 32. 7, 8.—e Gen. 23. 18.—f Lev. 25. 25.—g Gen. 38. 8. Deut. 25. 5, 6. Ch. 3. 13. Matt. 22. 24.

Borum, till even an enlightened and conscientious judge would find it extremely difficult to decide whether Naomi might sell her own land; and whether Boaz or Peloni might buy it! O! glorious uncertainty of modern law!

Verse 3. Naomi—selleth a parcel of land] She was reduced to want, the immediate inheritors were extinct, and it was now open for the next heir to purchase the land, and thus preserve the inheritance in the family according to the custom of Israel.

Verse 4. I thought to advertise thee] Both Dr. Kennicott and Father Houbigant have noticed several corruptions in the pronouns of this and the following verses; and their criticisms have been confirmed by a great number of MSS. since collated. The text corrected, reads thus: "And I said I will reveal this to thy ear, saying, Buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it; but if thou wilt not redeem it, tell me, that I may know; for there is none to redeem it but thou, and I, who am next to thee. And he said, I will redeem it. And Boaz said, In the day that thou redeemest the land from the hand of Naomi, thou wilt also acquire Ruth, the wife of the dead, that thou mayest raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance." ver. 4 and 5. See Kennicott's Dissertations, vol. i. page 449. Houbigant in loco, and the Variae Lectiones of Kennicott and De Rossi. This is Boaz's statement of the case before the kinsman, and before the people and the elders.

I will redeem it.] I will pay down the money which it is worth. He knew not of the following condition.

Verse 5. Thou must buy it also of Ruth] More properly, Thou wilt also acquire Ruth. Thou canst not get the land without taking the wife of the deceased; and then the children which thou mayest have shall be reputed the children of Chilion, thy deceased kinsman.

6 ¶^h And the kinsman said, I cannot redeem it for myself, lest I mar mine own inheritance: redeem thou my right to thyself; for I cannot redeem it.

7 ⁱ Now this was the manner in former time in Israel concerning redeeming, and concerning changing, for to confirm all things; a man plucked off his shoe, and gave it to his neighbour: and this was a testimony in Israel.

8 Therefore the kinsman said unto Boaz, Buy it for thee. So he drew off his shoe.

9 ¶ And Boaz said unto the elders, and unto all the people, Ye are witnesses this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's, of the hand of Naomi.

Verse 6. I cannot redeem it for myself] The Targum gives the proper sense of this passage: "And the kinsman said, On this ground I cannot redeem it, because I have a wife already; and I have no desire to take another, lest there should be contention in my house, and I should become a corrupter of my inheritance. Do thou redeem it, for thou hast no wife; for I cannot redeem it." This needs no comment.

Verse 7. A man plucked off his shoe] The law of such a case is given at large in Deut. xxv. 5-9. It was simply this:—If a brother, who had married a wife, died without children, the eldest unmarried brother was to take the widow, and raise up a family to the brother deceased; and he had the right to redeem the inheritance, if it had been alienated. But if the person who had the right of redemption would not take the woman, she was to pull off his shoe, and spit in his face; and he was ever after considered as a disgraced man. In the present case, the shoe only is taken off; probably because the circumstances of the man were such as to render it improper for him to redeem the ground, and take Ruth to his wife: and because of this reasonable excuse, the contemptuous part of the ceremony is omitted. See the note on Deut. xxv. 9.

Verse 11. We are witnesses] It is not very likely that any writing was drawn up. There was an appeal made to the people then present, whether they had seen and understood the transaction; who answered, We have witnessed it. If any minutes of court were kept, then the transaction was entered probably in some such words as these:—"On — day of —, Boaz bought the land of Elimelech from

Which two did build the house of Israel] We have already seen that בן ben, a son, comes from the root בנה banah, he built, and hence אבן aben, a stone; because as a house is built up of stones, so is a family of children. There is a similar figure in PLAUTUS, Mostell. Act. I. sc. 2. ver. 37.

"I would also observe, that ye men are similar to houses: ye parents are the fabricators of the children, and they are the foundation of the building."

Verse 12. Like the house of Pharez] This was very appropriate; for from Pharez, the son of Judah, by Tamar, came the family of the Bethlehemitess, and that of Elimelech.

Verse 13. So Boaz took Ruth] The law of Moses had prohibited the Moabites, even to the tenth generation, from entering into the congregation of the Lord: but this law, the Jews think, did not extend to women; and even if it had, Ruth's might be considered an exempt case, as she had been already incorporated into the family by marriage; and left her own country, people, and gods, to become a proselyte to the true God in the land of Israel.

Verse 15. Better to thee than seven sons] If Naomi had had even a numerous family of sons, it is most likely that they would have been scattered to different quarters from her, and settled in life; whereas Ruth cleaved to her, and it was by her affectionate services that Naomi was preserved alive.

Verse 16. Naomi took the child] This might do for Naomi; but it was bad for the child. A child, unless remarkably healthy and robust, will suffer considerably by being nursed by an old woman; especially if the child sleep with her. The aged gain refreshment and energy by sleeping with the young; and, from the same means, the young derive premature decrepitude. The vigour which is absorbed by the former, is lost by the latter. It is a foolish and destructive custom to permit young children (which is a common case) to sleep with aged aunts, and old grandmothers. Bacon's grand secret of the cure of old age, couched in so many obscure and enigmatical terms, is simply this:—Let young persons sleep constantly with those who are aged and infirm. And it was on this principle, that the physicians of David recommended a young healthy girl to sleep with David in his old age. They well knew that the aged infirm body of the king would absorb a considerable portion of healthy energy from the young woman.

Verse 17. The neighbours gave it a name] That is, they recommended a name suitable to the circumstances of the case; and the parents and grandmother adopted it.

They called his name Obed] עֹבֵד obed, serving, from עָבַד abad, he served. Why was this name given? Because he was to be the nourisher of her old age, ver. 15. And so he must be by lying in her bosom, even if services in future life were wholly left out of the question. These neighbours of Naomi were skilful people. See on ver. 16. Other meanings, of which I am not ignorant, have been derived from these words; those who prefer them have my consent.

He is the father of Jesse, the father of David. And for the sake of this conclusion, to ascertain the line of David, and, in the council of God, to fix and ascertain the line of the Messiah, was this instructive little book written.

Verse 18. Now these are the generations] The Targum gives a copious paraphrase on this and the following verses: I shall insert the principal parts in their proper places.

Verse 19. Hezron begat Ram] He is called Aram here by the Septuagint, and also by St. Matthew, ch. i. 3.

Verse 20. Amminadab begat Nahshon] The Targum adds, "And Nahshon was chief of the house of his father in the tribe of Judah."

Nahshon begat Salmon] In the Hebrew it is שלמה Salmah, which Houbigant thinks was an error of an ancient scribe, before any final letters were acknowledged in the Hebrew alphabet: for then the word would be written שלמן Salmon, which a scribe, after final letters were admitted, might mistake for שלמה Salmah, and so write it, instead of שלמן Salmon, to which the var ו and final ו nun, in conjunction ו bear some resemblance.

The Targum calls him "Salmah, the Just; he was the Salmah of Beth-lehem and Netopha, whose sons abolished the watches which Jeroboam set over the highways; and their works and the works of their father were good in Netopha."

Verse 21. And Salmon begat Boaz] The Targum goes on, "And Salmon begat Absan the judge; he is Boaz the Just, on account of whose righteousness the people of the house of Israel were redeemed from the hands of their enemies; and at whose supplication the famine departed from the land of Israel."

And Boaz begat Obed—"Who served the Lord in this world with a perfect heart."

Verse 22. And Obed begat Jesse] "Who," says the Targum, "also is called Nachash נחש because neither iniquity nor corruption was found in him, that he should be delivered into the hands of the angel of death, that he might take away his soul from him. And he lived many days until the counsel was remembered before the Lord, that the serpent gave to Eve, the wife of Adam, that she should eat of the tree; by eating of the fruit of which they became wise, to distinguish between good and evil: and by that counsel, all the inhabitants of the earth became guilty of death: and by this iniquity, Jesse the Just died." Here is no mean or indistinct reference to the doctrine of original sin: and it shows us, at least, what the very ancient rabbins thought on this subject. I should observe that these additions are taken from the London Polyglott: they are not found in that of Antwerp; but they are the same that appear in the Targum of the great Bible printed by Bomberg, at Venice, in 1547—49.

And Jesse begat David.] To this no comment is added by the Targumist, as the history of this king is found in the following book.

The ten persons whose genealogy is recorded in the five last verses, may be found, with a trifling change of name, in the genealogical list, in Matt. ch. i. ver. 3, 4, 5, 6. as forming important links in the line of the Messiah. To introduce this, appears to have been the principal object of the writer, as introductory to the following books, where the history of David, the regal progenitor and type of the Messiah, is so particularly detailed.

For the account of the birth of Pharez and his brother Zara, the reader is requested to refer to Gen. ch. xxxviii. ver. 12—30. and to the notes there; and for several particulars in the genealogy itself, to the notes on Matt. i. and Luke iii. where the wisdom, goodness, and providence of God, in the preservation of this line, are particularly noticed.

We have already seen that Archbishop Ussher places the event mentioned here, in A. M. 2686, about one hundred years after the conquest of Canaan.

END OF THE NOTES ON THE BOOK OF RUTH.

FIRST BOOK OF SAMUEL,

OTHERWISE CALLED

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE KINGS.

THIS and the three following books were all formerly termed the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Books of Kings; and the two books of Samuel made in ancient times but one; and the separation which has taken place, seems to have been done without reason or necessity. These books are, properly speaking, a continuation of the Book of Judges; as they give us an account of the remaining judges of Israel, down to the election of Saul; and of all the kings of Israel and Judah, to the Babylonish captivity.

Of this book, called the First Book of Samuel, the following are the contents:—The birth and education of Samuel; the high priesthood of Eli; the Philistines attack the Israelites, overthrow them with a terrible slaughter, take the ark of the Lord, and set it up in the temple of their god Dagon; they are visited with divine judgments, and are obliged to send back the ark with offerings and presents; Samuel, long acknowledged as a prophet of the Lord, takes the government of the people. Under his wise and pious administration, the affairs of Israel become re-established, and the Philistines are subdued. The sons of Samuel, who principally administered the secular concerns of the kingdom, acting unworthily, the people desire to have a king, who should be supreme, both in civil and military affairs. Samuel, after expostulations, yields to their entreaties; and, under the direction of God, Saul, the son of Kish, while seeking the lost asses of his father, is met by the prophet, and anointed king over Israel. This man, not conducting himself in the government according to the direction of God, is rejected; and David, the son of Jesse, anointed king in his place, though Saul continues still in the government. This person soon becomes advantageously known to Israel by his single combat with a gigantic Philistine chief, called Goliath, whom he slays; on which the Israelites attack the Philistines, and give them a total overthrow. Saul, envious of David's popularity, seeks his destruction; he is, in consequence, obliged to escape for his life, and take refuge, sometimes among the Moabites, sometimes among the Philistines, and sometimes in the caves of the mountains of Judah; every where pursued by Saul, and every where visibly protected by the Lord. At last, Saul being pressed by the Philistines, and finding that the Lord had forsaken him, had recourse to a witch that dwelt at En-dor, whom he consulted relative to the issue of the present war with the Philistines; he loses the battle, and being sorely wounded, and his three sons slain, he falls on his own sword, and expires on mount Gilboa. The Philistines find his body, and the bodies of his three sons, among the slain; they cut off Saul's head, and affix the bodies to the walls of Beth-shan. The men of Jabesh Gilead, hearing this, go by night, and take the bodies from the walls of Beth-shan, bring them to Jabesh, burn them there, bury the bones, and mourn over their fallen king, fasting seven days. Thus concludes the First Book of Samuel.

Concerning the author of these books, there have been various conjectures. Because, in most of the Hebrew copies, they bear the name of Samuel, as a running title, it has been generally supposed that he was the author. But his name does not appear to have been anciently prefixed to these books, at least in those copies used by the Greek interpreters, commonly called the Septuagint, as they simply term each Βασιλειον, The History or Book of Kingdoms. The Chaldee has no inscription. The Syriac and Arabic call each, The Book of Samuel the Prophet; and the Vulgate, The Book of Samuel, simply. The Jews, in general, believe that Samuel is the author of the twenty-seven first chapters of this book, which contain the history of his own life and government, and what respects Saul and David during that time. The remaining four chapters they suppose were added by the prophets Gad and Nathan. This opinion is founded on what is said 1 Chron. xxix. 29. Now the acts of David the king, first and last, behold they are written in the book of Samuel the seer; and in the book of Nathan the prophet; and in the book of Gad the seer. Others suppose the books to be more recent than the persons already named; but that they were composed out of their memoirs.

But who was this compiler? Some of the most learned among the Jews suppose it to have been Jeremiah the prophet; and that the style bears a near resemblance to his prophecies. That they were the work of a more recent author than Samuel, &c. Grotius thinks evident, from this circumstance, that the names of the months are comparatively modern, and were not known among the ancient Jews. Others have attributed them to David; others to Hezekiah; and others to Ezra the scribe, on his return from the Babylonian captivity.

Calmet's opinion is as probable as any, viz. "That these books were written by the same hand, though composed out of the memoirs left by persons of that time; and that the compiler has generally used the same terms he found in those memoirs; adding here and there something of his own, by way of illustration." The equality of the style, the frequent eulogiums on the character and conduct of Samuel, the connexion of the materials, particular quotations and remarks on certain events, are, he thinks, proofs sufficiently clear of what he assumes. These books contain remarks or expressions which could only proceed from a contemporary author, and others which are evidences of a much later age.

1. For instance, we read, chap. iii. 1. The word of the Lord was precious in those days; there was no open vision; i. e. in the days of Eli, the high priest: hence it is evident that the author lived in times in which prophecy was more common; which, in fact, it was after Samuel, under David, and the succeeding kings of Israel and Judah.

2. Again, in the time of the author of this book, Beth-el was called Beth-aven, chap. xiii. 5.; which name was given to it in derision, after Jeroboam had placed there his golden calves.

3. Again, it is said, chap. vi. 18. that the ark of the Lord was set down in the field of Joshua the Beth-shemite, where it remained to the time of this author; and yet, in chap. vii. 15. he speaks of Samuel as being already dead—And Samuel judged Israel all the days of his life.

4. It is not natural to suppose that Samuel would have spoken of himself as is done chap. ii. 26: And the child Samuel grew, and was in favour both with the Lord and with men: but if he were dead when this book was written, any author might have added this with the strictest propriety.

5. In chap. xxvii. 6. it is said that Achish gave Ziklag to David: Wherefore Ziklag pertaineth to the kings of Judah unto this day. This is a proof that when this book was written, the kingdoms of Judah and Israel were separated; and that, although the tribe of Simeon belonged to the kings of Israel, yet Ziklag, which was in that tribe, remained in the hands of the kings of Judah.

Here, therefore, are proofs that this book contains matters which must have been written by a contemporary author; and others, which could not have been inserted but in times much posterior. These seeming contradictions are reconciled by the hypothesis, that the books were compiled by a comparatively recent author, out of materials of a much prior date; the author not changing many of the expressions which he found in those ancient documents.

Several other proofs might be here adduced to support this opinion; but as the reader will find them noticed in the places where they occur, it is not necessary to repeat them here. Those who wish to see this subject farther discussed, may consult Calmet. We may rest satisfied with these three things: 1. That the Books of Samuel were constructed out of original and authentic documents. 2. That the compiler was not contemporary with the facts he narrates. And, 3. That both the author and time in which he compiled his history, though comparatively more recent than the facts themselves, are nevertheless both uncertain.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. Ramathaim-zophim] Literally, the two high places of the watchmen: these were, no doubt, two contiguous hills, on which watch-towers were built, and in which watchmen kept continual guard for the safety of the country; and which afterward gave name to the place.

Verse 2. He had two wives] The custom of those times permitted polygamy; but, wherever there was more than one wife, we find the peace of the family was greatly disturbed by it.

The name of the one was Hannah] חַנָּה Channah, which signifies fixed, or settled; and the other Peninnah, פִּנְנָה Peninnah, which signifies a jewel, or pearl.

Verse 3. Went up out of his city yearly to worship] As the ark was at Shiloh, there was the temple of God, and thither all the males were bound by the law to go once a year on each of the great national festivals; viz. the passover, pentecost, and the feast of tabernacles.

The LORD of hosts] יהוה צבאות Yehovah tsebaoth, Jehovah of armies. As all the heavenly bodies were called the hosts of heaven, צְבָא הַשָּׁמַיִם tsaba hashshamayim, Jehovah being called Lord of this host, showed that he was their Maker and Governor; and consequently he, not they, was the proper object of religious worship. The sun, moon, planets, and stars, were the highest objects of religious worship to the heathens in general. The Jewish religion, teaching the knowledge of a being who was the Lord of all these, showed at once its superiority to all that heathenism could boast. This is the first place where Lord of hosts is mentioned in the Bible; and this is so much in the style of the prophets. Isaiah, Jeremiah, &c. that it gives some weight to the supposition that this book was written by a person who lived in or after the times of these prophets. See the preface.

Verse 4. He gave—portions] The sacrifices which were made were probably peace-offerings, of which the blood was poured out at the foot of the altar; the fat was burnt on the fire; the breast and right shoulder were the portion of the priest, and the rest belonged to him who made the offering; on it he and his family feasted, each receiving his portion: and to these feasts God commands them to invite the Levite, the poor, the widow, and the orphan, Deut. xvi. 11.

Verse 5. Unto Hannah he gave a worthy portion] The Hebrew here is very obscure; יָתַן מָנָה אַחַת אֵלֶיהָ yitten manah achath appayim; he gave her one portion of two faces: which the Syriac renders, he gave her one DOUBLE PART; and the Chaldee, he gave her one CHOSEN part; the Arabic is nearly the same; the Vulgate, Annæ autem dedit unam partem tristis, but to Anna, he being sorrowful, gave one part. As the show-bread that was presented to the Lord was called לֶחֶם פָּנִים lechem panim, the bread of faces, because it was placed before the face or appearances of the Lord; probably this was called מָנָה אַחַת manah apayim, because it was

make her fret, because the LORD had shut up her womb.

7 And as he did so year by year, m when^a she went up to the house of the LORD, so she provoked her; therefore she wept, and did not eat.

8 Then said Elkanah her husband to her, Hannah, why weepest thou; and why eatest thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? am not I^o better to thee than ten sons?

9 ¶ So Hannah rose up after they had eaten in Shiloh, and after they had drunk. Now Eli the priest sat upon a seat by a post of^p the temple of the LORD.

10 And she was^q in bitterness of soul, and prayed unto the LORD, and wept sore.

11 And she^r vowed a vow, and said, the portion that belonged to, or was placed before, the person who had offered the sacrifice.

On this ground it might be said that Elkanah gave Hannah his own portion, or a part of that which was placed before himself. Whatever it was, it was intended as a proof of his especial love to her; for, it is added, he loved Hannah.

Verse 6. And her adversary] i. e. Peninnah.
[Provoked her sore] Was constantly striving to irritate and vex her; to make her fret, to make her discontented with her lot, because the Lord had denied her children.

Verse 7. And as he did so year by year] As the whole family went up to Shiloh to the annual festivals, Peninnah had both sons and daughters to accompany her, ver. 4. but Hannah had none; and Peninnah took this opportunity particularly to twit Hannah with her barrenness, by making an ostentatious exhibition of her children.

Therefore she wept] She was greatly distressed, because it was a great reproach to a woman among the Jews to be barren; because, say some, every one hoped that the Messiah should spring from her line.

Verse 8. Am not I better to thee than ten sons] TEN, a certain for an uncertain number Is not my especial affection to thee better than all the comfort thou couldst gain, even from a numerous family?

Verse 9. Eli—sat upon a seat] על הכסא

he was then judge of Israel.

this is the first place where יהוה היכל heykal

Eli marked her mouth.

13 Now Hannah, she spake in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard: therefore Eli thought she had been drunken.

14 And Eli said unto her, How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee.

15 And Hannah answered and said,
No, my lord, I am a woman^z of a sorrowful spirit: I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but have^a poured out my soul before the LORD.

have I spoken hitherto.

Books of Samuel were not compiled till the first temple was built, or after the days of Solomon. After this the word temple is frequent in the Books of Kings, Chronicles, and in the Prophets. Perhaps those Psalms, in which this word occurs, were like many others in the Psalter, not of David's composition: some of them were evidently made long after his time.

Verse 11. I will give him unto the LORD] Samuel, as a descendant of the house of Levi, was the Lord's property, from twenty-five years of age till fifty; but the vow here implies that he should be consecrated to the Lord from his infancy to his death, and that he should not only act as a Levite, but as a Nazarite, on whose head no razor should pass.

Verse 13. Spake in her heart; only her lips moved] She prayed: her whole heart was engaged: and, though she spake not with an audible voice, yet her lips formed themselves according to the pronunciation of the words which her heart uttered.

Verse 15. I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink] Neither wine nor inebriating drink has been poured out unto me; but I have poured out my soul unto the Lord. There is a great deal of delicacy and point in this vindication.

am the chief of the daughters of Belial." Or,

21 And the man Elkanah, and all his house, ^mwent up to offer unto the LORD the yearly sacrifice, and his vow.

23 And ^qElkanah her husband said unto her, Do what seemeth thee good: tarry until thou have weaned him; ^ronly the LORD establish his word. So the woman abode, and gave her son suck until she weaned him.

24 ¶ And when she had weaned him, she ^ttook him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of flour, and a bottle of wine, and brought them unto ^vthe house of the LORD in Shiloh: and the child was young.

of these probably attended there for the purposes of prostitution and gain; for it is written, chap. ii. 22. Eli's sons lay with the women at the door of the tabernacle: though this may refer to the women who kept the door.

Verse 17. Grant thee thy petition] He was satisfied he had formed a wrong judgment; and, by it, had added to the distress of one already sufficiently distressed.

The fact that Eli supposed her to be drunken, and the other of the conduct of Eli's sons, already mentioned, prove that religion was at this time at a very low ebb in Shiloh; for it seems drunken women did come to the place, and lewd women were to be found there.

Verse 18. Let thine handmaid find grace] Continue to think favourably of me, and to pray for me.

Verse 20. Called his name Samuel] As she gave this name to her son because she had asked him of the Lord, the word שמואל Shemuel must be here considerably contracted, if it express this sentiment; the component parts of it are the following, שאל Shail me El, "Asked of God." This name would put both the mother and the son in continual remembrance of the divine interposition at his birth. See on ver. 28.

Verse 21. The man Elkanah, and all his house] He and the whole of his family, Hannah and her child excepted; who purposed not to go up to Shiloh till her son was old enough to be employed in the divine service.

And his vow.] Probably he had also made some vow to the Lord on the occasion of his wife's prayer and vow; in which, from his love to her, he could not be less interested than herself.

Verse 23. Until thou have weaned him] On the nature of this weaning, and the time in which it was usually done, the reader will be pleased to refer to the note on Gen. xxi. 8.

The LORD establish his word] Or, may the Lord establish his word; preserve the child, cause him to grow up, and make him a blessing to Israel.

Verse 24. With three bullocks] The Septuagint, the Syriac, and the Arabic, read a bullock of three years old: and this is probably correct, because we read, ver. 25. that they slew ארבע את האר, the bullock. We hear of no more, and we know that a bullock or heifer, of three years old, was ordinarily used: see Gen. xv. 9.

One ephah of flour] Seven gallons and a half. A bottle of wine] נבלין nebel yayin, a skin full of wine. Their bottles for wine, and fluids in general, were made out of skins of goats, stripped off without being cut up; the places whence the legs were extracted, sewed up, as also the lower part; and the top tied. See the notes on Gen. xxi. 14. and Matt. ix. 17. These three things, the ox, the flour, and the wine, probably constituted the consecration-offering.

Verse 26. As thy soul liveth [As sure as thou art a living soul, so surely am I the person who stood by thee here praying.

Verse 28. Therefore also I have lent him to the LORD] There is here a continual reference to her vow, and to the words which she used in making that vow.

The word Samuel, as we have already seen, is a contraction of the words שְׁמוּאֵל Shaul me El, that is, asked or lent of God; for his mother said, ver. 27. The Lord hath given me my petition, which שְׁאַלְתִּי SHAALTI. I ASKED of him. In ver. 28. she says, הוּא שְׁמוּאֵל לַיהוָה hu shaul laihovah, he shall be LENT unto the Lord: here we find the verb is the same; and it is remarked by grammarians that שְׁאַל shaal, he asked, making in the participle שְׁאוּל shaul, ASKED, in the conjugation hiphil signifies to lend; therefore, says his mother, ver. 28. הִשְׁלִיתִיו לַיהוָה HISHLITIHU laihovah, I have LENT him to the Lord. This twofold meaning of the Hebrew root is not only followed by our translators, but also by the Vulgate, Septuagint, and Syriac.

And he worshipped the LORD there.] Instead of וַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוֶה vayishlachu, HE worshipped, וַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוֶה vayishlachavu, and THEY worshipped, is the reading of six of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., of some copies of the Septuagint, of the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic.

This and the following chapter are connected in most copies of the Septuagint and Vulgate thus: And Anna worshipped, and said, My soul is strengthened in the Lord, &c. It is very likely that the whole passage, from the beginning of ver. 26. to the end of ver. 10. of the ensuing chapter, contains the words of Hannah alone; and that even the clause, He worshipped the Lord there, should be, And she worshipped the Lord there, and prayed, and said, &c. Indeed this latter clause is wanting in the Polyglott Septuagint, as I have stated above.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. And Hannah prayed, and said] The Chaldee very properly says, And Hannah prayed in the spirit of prophecy; for, indeed, the whole of this prayer, or, as it may be properly called, oracular declaration, is a piece of regular prophecy, every part of which having respect to the future, and perhaps not a little of its declaratory of the Messiah's kingdom.

Dr. Hales has some very good observations on this prophetic song:—

“This admirable hymn excels in simplicity of composition, closeness of connexion, and uniformity of sentiment; breathing the pious effusions of a devout mind, deeply impressed with a conviction of God's mercies to herself in particular, and of his providential government of the world in general; exalting the poor in spirit, or the humble-minded, and abasing the rich and the arrogant; rewarding the righteous, and punishing the wicked. Hannah was also a prophetess of the first class: besides predicting her own fruitfulness, ver. 7. (for she bore six children in all, chap. ii. 21.) she foretold not only the more immediate judgments of God upon the Philistines, during her son's administration, chap. ii. 10. but his remoter judgments ‘upon the ends of the earth,’ ver. 10. in the true spirit of the prophecies of Jacob, Balaam, and Moses. Like them, she describes the promised Saviour of the world, as a KING, before there was any king in Israel: and she first applied to him the remarkable epithet Messiah in Hebrew, CHRIST in Greek, and ANointed in English, which were adopted by David, Nathan, Ethan, Isaiah, Daniel, and the succeeding prophets of the Old Testament; and by the apostles and inspired writers of the

New. And the allusion thereto by Zacharias, the father of the Baptist, in his hymn, Luke i. 69. where he calls Christ a ‘horn of salvation,’ and the beautiful imitation of it by the blessed Virgin throughout, in her hymn, Luke i. 46—55. furnishing the finest commentary thereon, clearly prove that Hannah, in her rejoicing, had respect to something higher than Peninah her rival, or to the triumphs of Samuel, or even of David himself: the expressions are too magnificent and sublime to be confined to such objects. Indeed, the learned rabbi, David Kimchi, was so struck with them, that he ingeniously confessed that ‘the king of whom Hannah speaks is the MESSIAH,’ of whom she spake either by prophecy or tradition: for, continues he, ‘there was a tradition among the Israelites, that a great king should arise in Israel; and she seals up her song with celebrating this king who was to deliver them from all their enemies.’ The tradition, as we have seen, was founded principally on Balaam's second and third prophecies, Numb. xxiv. 7—17. and we cannot but admire that gracious dispensation of spiritual gifts to Hannah, (whose name signifies grace), in ranking her among the prophets who should first unfold a leading title of the blessed Seed of the woman.”

In the best MSS. the whole of this hymn is written in hemistich, or poetic, lines. I shall here produce it in this order, following the plan as exhibited in Kennicott's Bible, with some trifling alterations of our present version:

From the dunghill he exalteth the beggar,
To make him sit with the nobles,
And inherit the throne of glory.
For to Jehovah belong the pillars of the earth,
And upon them he hath placed the globe.

Verse 9.—The foot of his saints he shall keep,
And the wicked shall be silent in darkness;
For by strength shall no man prevail.

Verse 10.—Jehovah shall bruise them who contend with him;
Upon them shall he thunder in the heavens.
Jehovah shall judge the ends of the earth;
And he shall give strength to his king,
And shall exalt the horn of his Messiah.

It is not particularly stated here when Hannah composed or delivered this hymn: it appears from the connexion to have been at the very time in which she dedicated her son to God at the tabernacle; though some think that she composed it immediately on the birth of Samuel. The former sentiment is probably the most correct.

Mine horn is exalted in the LORD] We have often seen that horn signifies power, might, and dominion. It is thus constantly used in the Bible, and was so used among the heathens. The following words of Horace to his jar are well known; and speak a sentiment very similar to that above:—

Viresque, et addis cornua pauperi.*

Hor. Odar. lib. iii. Od. 21. v. 18.

Thou bringest back hope to desponding minds;
And thou addest strength and horns to the poor man.

Paraphrastically expressed by Mr. Francis:

"Hope, by thee, fair fugitive,
Bids the wretched strive to live.
To the beggar you dispense Heart and brow of confidence."

My mouth is enlarged] My faculty of speech is incited, stirred up to express God's disapprobation against my adversaries.

thenism, nor of any religion ever professed in the world before or since the true revelation of the true God.

There is none besides thee] There can be but one unoriginated, infinite, and eternal being; that being is Jehovah.

Any rock like our God.] Rabbi Maimon has observed, that the word tsur, which we translate rock, signifies, when applied to Jehovah, fountain, source, spring. There is no source whence continual help and salvation can arise, but our God.

Verse 3. A God of knowledge] He is the most wise, teaching all good, and knowing all things.

Actions are weighed.] נתקנו nithkennu, they are directed; it is by his counsel alone that we can successfully begin, continue, or end, any work.

Verse 4. The bows of the mighty] The Targum considers the first verse as including a prophecy against the Philistines; the second verse, against Sennacherib and his army; the third, against Nebuchadnezzar and the Chaldeans; the fourth, against the Greeks; the fifth, against Haman and his posterity; and the tenth, against Magog, and the enemies of the Messiah.

Verse 5. They that were full] All the things mentioned in these verses frequently happen in the course of the divine providence: and indeed it is the particular providence of God that Hannah seems more especially to celebrate through the whole of this simple, yet sublime, ode.

Verse 6. The LORD killeth] God is the arbiter of life and death; he only can give life, and he only has a right to take it away.

He bringeth down to the grave] The Hebrew word שְׁאוֹל sheol, which we translate grave, seems to have the same meaning in the Old Testament with hades, in the New; which is the word generally used by the Septuagint for the other. It means the grave, the state of the dead, and the invisible place, or place of separate spirits. Sometimes we translate it hell, which now means the state of perdition, or place of eternal torments: but, as this comes from the Saxon helan, to cover, or conceal, it means only the covered place. In some parts of England the word helling is used for the covers of a book, the slating of a house, &c. The Targum seems to understand it of death and the resurrection: "He kills, and commands to give life; he causes to descend into sheol, that, in the time to come, he may bring them into the lives of eternity." i. e. the life of shame and everlasting contempt: and the life of glory.

Verse 7. The LORD maketh poor] For many cannot bear affluence; and if God should continue to trust them with riches, they would be their ruin.

Maketh rich] Some he can trust; and, therefore, makes them stewards of his secular bounty.

Verse 8. To set them among princes] There have been many cases where, in the course of God's providence, a person has been raised from the lowest and most abject estate to the highest: from the plough to the imperial dignity: from the dungeon to the throne: from the dunghill to nobility. The story of Cincinnatus is well known; so is that of the patriarch Joseph: but there is one not less in point, that of Roushen Achter, who was brought out of a dungeon, and exalted to the throne of Hindostan. On this circumstance the following elegant couplet was made:

یوسف از زندان بر آمد شاه شد

"He was a bright star, but now is become a moon.
Joseph is taken from prison, and is become a king."

There is a play here on Roushen Achter, which signifies a bright star: and there is an allusion to the history of the patriarch Joseph, because of the similarity of fortune between him and the Mohammedan prince.

For the pillars of the earth are the LORD's] He is almighty, and upholds all things by the word of his power.

Verse 9. He will keep the feet of his saints] He will order and direct all their goings, and keep them from every evil way.

The wicked shall be silent in darkness] The Targum understands this of their being sent to the darkness of hell; they shall be slain.

By strength shall no man prevail] Because God is omnipotent, and no power can be successfully exerted against him.

Verse 10. The adversaries of the LORD shall be broken] Those who contend with him, מריביו meribav, by sinning against his laws, opposing the progress of his word, or persecuting his people Shall judge the ends of the earth] His empire shall be extended over all mankind, by the preaching of the everlasting Gospel; for to this the afterpart of the verse seems to apply: he shall give strength unto his king, and shall exalt the horn of his Christ; or, as the Targum says, ויורי מלכות משיחא vaiyerbey malcuth Meshicheyeh, "He shall multiply the kingdom of the Messiah." Here the horn means spiritual as well as secular dominion.

After the clause the adversaries of the LORD shall be broken in pieces, the Septuagint add the following words, Μη καυχασθαι ὁ φρονιμος ἐν τῇ φρονήσει αὐτοῦ, κ. τ. λ. Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom; and let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him who glorieth rather glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth the Lord; and that he executeth judgment and righteousness in the midst of the earth. This is a very long addition, and appears to be taken from Jer. ix. 23.; but, on collating the two places, the reader will find the words to be materially different. This clause is wanting in the Complutensian Polyglott; but it is in the edition of A'dus, in that of cardinal Caraffa, and in the Codex Alexandrinus.

Verse 11. And Elkanah went to Ramah] Immediately after the 10th verse, the Septuagint add, Καταλείπει αὐτὸν ἐκεῖ ἐναγίον Κυρίου καὶ ἀπῆλθεν εἰς Ἀρμαθαίμ. And she left him there before the Lord, and went unto Arimathea. Thus the Septuagint suppose that the song of Hannah was composed when she brought Samuel to present him to the Lord; and, as soon as she had concluded this fine ode, she delivered him into the hands of Eli, the high priest; and the child entered immediately on his ministration, under the direction and instructions of Eli.

Verse 12. The sons of Eli were sons of Belial] They were perverse, wicked, profligate men; devil's children;—they knew not the Lord.

"They know! nor would an angel show him;
They would not know, nor choose to know him."

These men were the principal cause of all the ungodliness of Israel. Their most execrable conduct, described from ver. 13 to 17., caused the people to abhor the Lord's offering. An impious priesthood is the grand cause of the transgressions and ruin of any nation; witness France, Germany, &c. from 1792 to 1814.

A. M. 2839. B. C. 1165. An. Exod. 1st. 326. Anno ante I. Olymp. 389. 13 And the priest's custom with the people was, that, when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hand;

14 And he struck it into ^c the pan, or kettle, or caldron, or pot; all that the flesh-hook brought up the priest took for himself. So they did in Shiloh unto all the Israelites that came thither.

15 Also before they ^d burnt the fat, the priest's servant came, and said to the man that sacrificed, Give flesh to roast for the priest; for he will not have sodden flesh of thee, but raw.

16 And if any man said unto him, Let them not fail to burn the fat ^e presently, and then take as much as thy soul desireth; then he would answer him, Nay; but thou shalt give it me now: and if not, I will take it by force.

17 Wherefore the sin of the young men was very great ^f before the LORD: for men ^g abhorred the offering of the LORD.

Verse 13. When any man offered sacrifice] That is, when a peace-offering was brought, the right shoulder and the breast belonged to the priest; the fat was burnt upon the altar, and the blood was poured at the bottom of the altar; the rest of the flesh belonged to the offerer. Under pretence of taking only their own part, they took the best of all they chose, and as much as they chose.

Verse 14. Kettle—caldron, or pot] We know not what these were, nor of what capacity; nor is it of any consequence.

Verse 15. Before they burnt the fat] They would serve themselves before God was served! This was iniquity and arrogance of the first magnitude.

He will not have sodden flesh] He chooses roast meat, not boiled; and if they had it in the pot before the servant came, he took it out, that it might be roasted.

Verse 17. Wherefore the sin of the young men was very great] That is, Hophni and Phinehas, the sons of Eli.

Men abhorred the offering] As the people saw that the priests had no piety, and that they acted as if there was no God; they despised God's service, and became infidels.

A national priesthood, when the foundation is right, may be a great blessing; but, if the priesthood becomes corrupt, though the foundation itself stand sure, the corruption of the national manners will be the unavoidable consequence.

the Targum translates אסיר כרדוס דרוך asir cardut debuts, "Girded with a cardut of byssus," or fine linen. The word cardut they seem to have borrowed from the Greek χερσίδας, a tunic, having χερσίδας, i. e. sleeves that came down to, or covered the hands. This was esteemed an effeminate garment among the Romans. See Buxtorf's Talmudic Lexicon.

Verse 19. Made him a little coat] מעיל קטן meil katon, "a little cloak," or surtout; an upper garment; probably intended to keep him from the cold, and to save his other clothes from being abused in his meaner services. It is probable that she furnished him with a new one each year, when she came up to one of the annual sacrifices.

Verse 20. Eli blessed Elkanah] The natural place of this verse seems to be before the 11th; after which the 21st should come in; after the 21st, perhaps the 26th should come in. The subjects in this chapter seem very much entangled and confused, by the wrong position of the verses.

Verse 22. They lay with the women that assembled] It is probable that these were persons who had some employment about the tabernacle. See the note on Exod. xxxviii. 8. where the Hebrew text is similar to that in this place.

Verse 23. Why do ye such things?] Eli appears to have been a fondly affectionate, easy father, who wished his sons to do well, but did not bring them under proper discipline; and did not use his authority to restrain them. As judge, he had power to cast them immediately out of the vineyard, as wicked and unprofitable servants: this he did not; and his and their ruin was the consequence.

Verse 25. If one man sin against another] All differences between man and man may be settled by the proper judge: but, if a man sin against the Supreme Judge, God himself, who shall reconcile him to his Maker? Your sin is immediately against God himself; and is the highest insult that can be offered, because it is in the matter of his own worship; therefore, ye may expect his heaviest judgments.

But if a man sin against the LORD, who shall entreat for him?] Was a question of the most solemn importance under the old covenant; especially after the death of Moses, the mediator. The law had determined what sins should be punished with death; and it was not supposed that there was any appeal from the decision there pronounced. 1 John ii. 1. is an answer to this question: but it is an answer which the Gospel alone can give: My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not; but if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous.

Because the LORD would slay them.] The particle כי, which we translate because, and thus make their continuance in sin the effect of God's determination to destroy them; should be translated therefore, as it means in many parts of the Sacred Writings. See Noldius' Particles, where the very text in question is introduced. Sed non auscullarunt, &c. IDEO voluit Jehova eos interficere; but they would not hearken, &c. THEREFORE, God purposed to destroy them. It was their not hearkening that induced the Lord to will their destruction.

Aaron; he was the first high priest; the priesthood descended from him to his eldest son Eleazar, then to Phinehas. It became afterward established in the younger branch of the family of Aaron; for Eli was a descendant of Ithamar, Aaron's youngest son. From Eli it was transferred back again to the family of Eleazar, because of the profligacy of Eli's sons.

Verse 28. And did I choose him] The high priesthood was a place of the greatest honour that could be conferred on man; and a place of considerable emolument: for, from their part of the sacrifices, they derived a most comfortable livelihood.

Verse 29. Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice] They disdained to take the part allowed by the law; and would take for themselves what part they pleased, and as much as they pleased, ver. 13-16. Thus they kicked at the sacrifices.

Honourest thy sons above me] Permitting them to deal, as above, with the offerings and sacrifices; and taking their part before the fat, &c. was burnt unto the Lord; thus they were first served. At this Eli connived, and thus honoured his sons above God.

Verse 30. Should walk before me for ever] See Exod. xxix. 9. xl. 15. Numb. xxv. 10-13, where it is positively promised that the priesthood should be continued in the family of Aaron for ever. But although this promise appears to be absolute, yet we plainly see that, like all other apparently absolute promises of God, it is conditional; i. e. a condition is implied, though not expressed.

But now—be it far from me] You have walked unworthily; I shall annul my promise, and reverse my ordinance. See Jer. xviii. 7.

For they that honour me] This is a plan from which God will never depart; this can have no alteration; every promise is made in reference to it: "they who honour God shall be honoured; they who despise him shall be lightly esteemed."

Verse 31. I will cut off thine arm] I will destroy the strength, power, and influence, of thy family.

Verse 32. Thou shalt see an enemy in my habitation] Every version, and almost every commentator, understands this clause differently. The word ter, which we translate an enemy, and the Vulgate œmulum, a rival, signifies calamity; and this is the best sense to understand it in here. The calamity which he saw was the defeat of the Israelites, the capture of the ark, the death of his wicked sons, and the triumph of the Philistines. All this he saw, that is, knew to have taken place, before he met with his own tragical death.

In all the wealth which God shall give Israel] This also is dark. The meaning may be this: God has spoken good concerning Israel; he will, in the end, make the triumph of the Philistines their own confusion; and the capture of the ark shall be the desolation of their gods: but the Israelites shall first be sorely pressed with calamity. See the margin.

There shall not be an old man] This is repeated from the preceding verse; all the family shall die in the flower of their years, as is said in the following verse.

Verse 33. And the man of thine] On this passage Calmet observes, "The posterity of Eli possessed the high priesthood to the time of Solomon; and even, when that dynasty was transferred to another family, God preserved that of Eli, not to render it more happy, but to punish it, by seeing the prosperity of its enemies; to the end that it might see itself destitute and despised. This shows the depth of the judgments of God, and the grandeur of his justice, which extends even to distant generations; and manifests itself to sinners both in life and death; both in their own disgrace, and in the prosperity of their enemies."

Verse 34. They shall die both of them.] Hophni and Phinehas were both killed very shortly after, in that great battle with the Philistines, in which the Israelites were completely routed, and the ark taken. See chap. iv.

Verse 35. A faithful priest] This seems to that shall come upon thy two sons, on Hophni and Phinehas; ^pin one day they shall die both of them.

35 And ^rI will raise me up a faithful priest, that shall do according to that which is in mine heart and in my mind: and ^sI will build him a sure house; and he shall walk before ^tmine anointed for ever.

36 ^uAnd it shall come to pass, that every one that is left in thine house shall come and crouch to him for a piece of silver and a morsel of bread, and shall say, ^vPut me, I pray thee, into ^wone of the priests' offices, that I may eat a piece of bread.

have been spoken of Zadok, who was anointed high priest, in the room of Abiathar, the last descendant of the house of Eli. See 1 Kings ii. 26, 27. Abiathar was removed, because he had joined with Adonijah, who had got himself proclaimed king. See 1 Kings ch. i. 7.

I will build him a sure house] I will continue the priesthood in his family.

He shall walk before mine anointed] He shall minister before Solomon, and the kings which shall reign in the land. The Targum says, "He shall walk מִשְׁחֵי קִדְמָה kodam Meshichi, before my MESSIAH," or, as the Septuagint expresses it, ἐναντίον Χριστοῦ μου, before my Christ: for, in their proper and more extended sense, these things are supposed to belong to our great high priest, and the Christian system: but the word may refer to the Israelitish people. See the note on Heb. ix. 26.

Verse 36. Shall come and crouch to him] Shall prostrate himself before him in the most abject manner, begging to be employed even in the meanest offices about the tabernacle, in order to get even the most scanty means of support.

A piece of silver] אגורת כסף agorath keseph, translated by the Septuagint ὀβολὸν ἀργύρου, an obolus of silver. The Targum translates it מֵאָה mea; which is the same as the Hebrew gera, and weighed about sixteen grains of barley.

A morsel of bread] A mouthful; what might be sufficient to keep body and soul together. See the sin, and its punishment. They formerly pampered themselves, and fed to the full on the Lord's sacrifices; and now they are reduced to a morsel of bread. They fed themselves without fear; and now they have cleanness of teeth in all their dwellings. They wasted the Lord's heritage, and now they beg their bread!

In religious establishments, vile persons, who have no higher motive, may, and do, get into the priest's office, that they may clothe themselves with the wool, and feed themselves with the fat, while they starve the flock. But where there is no law to back the claims of the worthless and the wicked, men of piety and solid merit only can find support; for they must live on the free-will offerings of the people. Where religion is established by law, the strictest ecclesiastical discipline should be kept up, and all hiringling priests, and ecclesiastical drones, should be expelled from the Lord's vineyard. An established religion, where the foundation is good, (as in ours,) I consider a great blessing; but it is liable to this continual abuse, which nothing but careful and rigid ecclesiastical discipline can either cure or prevent. If our high priests, our archbishops and bishops, do not their duty, the whole body of the clergy may become corrupt, or inefficient. If they be faithful, the establishment will be an honour to the kingdom, and a praise in the earth.

The words pillars of the earth מַסְמְכֵי אֶרֶץ mitsaki arets, Mr. Parkhurst translates and defends thus:—"The compressors of the earth; i. e. the columns of the celestial fluid which compress or keep its parts together." This is all imaginary; we do not know this compressing celestial fluid: but there is one that answers the same end, which we do know, i. e. the Air, the columns of which press upon the earth in all directions; above, below, around, with a weight of fifteen pounds to every square inch; so that a column of air of the height of the atmosphere, which on the surface of the globe measures one square inch, is known, by the most accurate and indubitable experiments to weigh fifteen pounds. Now, as a square foot contains one hundred and forty-four square inches, each foot must be compressed with a weight of incumbent atmospheric air equal to two thousand one hundred and sixty pounds.

And as the earth is known to contain a surface of five thousand five hundred and seventy-five billions of square feet; hence, allowing two thousand one hundred and sixty pounds to each square foot, the whole surface of the globe must sustain a pressure of atmospheric air equal to twelve trillions and forty-one thousand millions of pounds; or six thousand and twenty-one billions of tons. This pressure, independently of what is called gravity, is sufficient to keep all the parts of the earth together, and perhaps to counteract all the influence of centrifugal force. But adding to this all the influence of gravity or attraction, by which every particle of matter tends to the centre, these compressors of the earth are sufficient to poise, balance, and preserve, the whole terraqueous globe. These pillars, or compressors, are an astonishing provision made by the wisdom of God for the necessities of the globe. Without this, water could not rise in fountains, nor the sap in vegetables. Without this there could be no respiration for man or beast, and no circulation of the blood in any animal. In short, both vegetable and animal life depend, under God, on these pillars, or compressors, of the earth; and, were it not for this compressing power, the air contained in the vessels of all plants and animals would, by its elasticity, expand, and instantly rupture all those vessels, and cause the destruction of all animal and vegetable life: but God, in his wisdom, has so balanced these two forces, that, while they appear to counteract and balance each other, they serve, by mutual dilatations and compressions, to promote the circulation of the sap in vegetables, and the blood in animals.

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. Samuel ministered unto the LORD] He performed minor services in the tabernacle, under the direction of Eli; such as opening the doors, &c. See ver. 5.

The word of the LORD was precious] There were but few revelations from God; and, because the word was scarce, therefore it was valuable. The author of this book probably lived at a time when prophecy was frequent. See the preface.

There was no open vision.] There was no public accredited prophet; one with whom the secret of the Lord was known to dwell, and to whom all might have recourse in cases of doubt or public emergency.

Verse 2. Eli was laid down in his place] It is very likely that, as the ark was a long time at Shiloh, they had built near to it certain apartments for the high priest, and others more immediately employed about the tabernacle. In one of these, near to that of Eli, perhaps under the same roof, Samuel lay when he was called by the Lord.

Verse 3. Ere the lamp of God went out] Before sunrise; for it is likely that the lamps were extinguished before the rising of the sun. See Exod. xxvii. 21. Lev. xxiv. 3.

Verse 4. The LORD called Samuel] The voice probably came from the holy place near to which Eli and Samuel were both lying.

5 And he ran unto Eli, and said, Here am I, for thou calledst me. And he said, I called not; lie down again. And he went and lay down.

6 And the LORD called yet again, Samuel. And Samuel arose, and went to Eli, and said, Here am I, for thou didst call me. And he answered, I called not, my son; lie down again.

7 ¹ Now Samuel ² did not yet know the LORD, neither was the word of the LORD yet revealed unto him.

8 And the LORD called Samuel again the third time. And he arose, and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou didst call me. And Eli perceived that the LORD had called the child.

9 Therefore Eli said unto Samuel, Go, lie down: and it shall be, if he call thee, that thou shalt say, Speak, LORD; for thy servant heareth. So Samuel went and lay down in his place.

10 And the LORD came, and stood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel answered, Speak; for thy servant heareth.

11 ¹ And the LORD said to Samuel,

¹ Or, Thus did Samuel before he knew the LORD, and before the word of the LORD was revealed unto him.—² See Acts 19. 2.—³ 2 Kings 21. 12. Jer. 19. 3.—⁴ Ch. 2. 30-36.
⁵ Heb. beginning and ending.—⁶ Or, And I will tell him, &c.

Verse 7. Samuel did not yet know the LORD] He had not been accustomed to receive any revelation from him. He knew and worshipped the God of Israel; but he did not know him as communicating especial revelations of his will.

Verse 9. Speak, LORD; for thy servant heareth.] This was the usual way in which the prophets spoke, when they had intimations that the Lord was about to make some especial revelation.

Verse 10. The LORD came and stood] He heard the voice as if it was approaching nearer and nearer; till, at last, from the sameness of the tone, he could imagine that it ceased to approach; and this is what appears to be represented under the notion of God standing and calling.

Verse 11. The LORD said to Samuel] He probably saw nothing, and only heard the voice; for it was not likely that any extraordinary representation could have been made to the eyes of a person so young. He heard a voice, but saw no similitude.

The ears—shall tingle.] It shall be a piercing word to all Israel; it shall astound them all: and, after having heard it, it will still continue to resound in their ears.

Verse 12. I will perform—all things which I have spoken] That is, what he had declared by the prophet, whose message is related, chap. ii. 27, &c.

When I begin, I will also make an end.] I

Behold, I will do a thing in Israel, ¹ at which both the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle.

12 In that day I will perform against Eli ¹ all things which I have spoken concerning his house: ² when I begin, I will also make an end.

13 ¹ For ² I have told him that I will ³ judge his house for ever for the iniquity which he knoweth; because ⁴ his sons made themselves ⁵ vile, and he ⁶ restrained ⁷ them not.

14 And therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house ¹ shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever.

15 ¹ And Samuel lay until the morning, and opened the doors of the house of the LORD. And Samuel feared to show Eli the vision.

16 Then Eli called Samuel, and said, Samuel, my son. And he answered, Here am I.

will not delay the execution of my purpose; when I begin, nothing shall deter me from bringing all my judgments to a conclusion.

Verse 13. I will judge his house for ever] I will continue to execute judgments upon it till it is destroyed.

His sons made themselves vile] See chap. ii. 12—17. 22—25.

He restrained them not.] He did not use his parental and juridical authority to curb them, and prevent the disorders which they committed. See at the conclusion of the chapter.

Verse 14. Shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering] That is, God was determined that they should be removed by a violent death. They had committed the sin unto death; and no offering or sacrifice could prevent this. What is spoken here relates to their temporal death only.

Verse 15. Samuel feared to show Eli] He revered him as a father, and he feared to distress him by showing what the Lord had purposed to do. It does not appear that God had commanded Samuel to deliver this message; he, therefore, did not attempt it till adjured by Eli, ver. 17.

Verse 17. God do so to thee, and more also] This was a very solemn adjuration: he suspected that God had threatened severe judgments, for he knew that his house was very criminal; and he wished to know what God had spoken. The words imply thus much: If thou do not tell me fully what God has threatened, may the same, and greater curses, fall on thyself.

Verse 18. Samuel told him every whit] Our word whit, or wid, comes from the Anglo-Saxon whit, which signifies person, thing, &c.; every whit is every thing. The Hebrew is כל הדברים col ha-debarim, "all these words."

It is the LORD] He is sovereign, and will do what he pleases; he is righteous, and will do nothing but what is just.

Let him do what seemeth him good.] There is much of a godly submission, as well as a deep sense of his own unworthiness, found in these words. He also had sinned, so as to be punished with temporal death: but surely there is no evidence that the displeasure of the Lord against him was extended to a future state.

Verse 19. Samuel grew] Increased to manhood.

The LORD was with him] Teaching him, and filling him with grace and holiness.

None of his words fall] Whatever prediction he uttered, God fulfilled it; and his counsels were received as coming from the Lord.

Verse 20. All Israel, from Dan even to Beer-sheba] Through the whole extent of Palestine: Dan being at the northern, Beer-sheba at the southern extremity.

Was established to be a prophet] The word נֶאֱמָן ne-eman, which we translate established, signifies faithful: The faithful Samuel was a prophet of the Lord.

Verse 21. The LORD appeared again] וַיֹּסֶף יְהוָה הֵרָאָה vayoseph Yehovah leheraah, "And Jehovah added to appear;" that is, he continued to reveal himself to Samuel at Shiloh.

By the word of the LORD.] By the spirit and word of prophecy.

In this chapter we read again of the fearful consequences of a neglected religious education. Eli's sons were wicked: their father knew the Lord: but he neither taught his children, nor restrained them by his parental authority. I have had already occasion to remark, that were a proper line of conduct pursued in the education of children, how few profligate sons and daughters, and how few broken-hearted parents, should we find? The neglect of early religious education, connected with a wholesome and affectionate restraint, is the ruin of millions. Many parents, to excuse their indolence, and most criminal neglect, say, "We cannot give our children grace." What do they mean by this? That God, not themselves, is the author of the irregularities and viciousness of their children. They may shudder at this imputation; but, when they reflect that they have not given them right precepts, have not brought them under firm and affectionate restraint; have not showed them, by their own spirit, temper, and conduct, how they should be regulated in theirs; when either the worship of God has not been established in their houses, or they have permitted their children, on the most trifling pretences, to absent themselves from it; when all these things are considered, they will find that, speaking after the manner of men, it would have been a very extraordinary miracle indeed if the children had been found preferring a path in which they did not see their parents conscientiously tread. Let those parents who continue to excuse themselves by saying, "We cannot give grace to our children," lay their hand on their conscience, and say whether they ever knew an instance where God withheld his grace, while they were in humble subservency to him, performing their duty? The real state of the case is this: parents cannot do God's work, and God will not do theirs; but if they use the means, and train up the child in the way he should go, God will never withhold his blessing.

20 And all Israel, "from Dan even to Beer-sheba, knew that Samuel was established to be a prophet of the LORD.

21 And the LORD appeared again in Shiloh: for the LORD revealed himself to Samuel in Shiloh by "the word of the LORD.

It is not parental fondness, nor parental authority, taken separately, that can produce this beneficial effect. A father may be as fond of his offspring as Eli, and his children be sons of Belial: he may be as authoritative as the grand Turk, and his children despise and plot rebellion against him. But let parental authority be tempered with fatherly affection; and let the rein of discipline be steadily held by this powerful but affectionate hand; and there shall the pleasure of God prosper; there will he give his blessing, even life for evermore. Many fine families have been spoiled, and many ruined, by the separate exercise of these two principles. Parental affection, when alone, infallibly degenerates into foolish fondness; and parental authority frequently degenerates into brutal tyranny, when standing by itself. The first sort of parents will be loved, without being respected; the second sort will be dreaded, without either respect or esteem. In the first case obedience is not exacted, and is therefore felt to be unnecessary, as offences of great magnitude pass without punishment or reprehension: in the second case, rigid exaction renders obedience almost impossible; and the smallest delinquency is often punished with the extreme of torture; which, hardening the mind, renders duty a matter of perfect indifference.

Parents, lay these things to heart: remember Eli and his sons; remember the dismal end of both! Teach your children to fear God—use wholesome discipline—be determined—begin in time—mingle severity and mercy together in all your conduct—and earnestly pray to God

Education is generally defined, that series of means by which the human understanding is gradually enlightened, and the dispositions of the heart are corrected, formed, and brought forth, between early infancy and the period when a young person is considered as qualified to take a part in active life. Whole nations have been corrupted, enfeebled, and destroyed, through the want of proper education: through this, multitudes of families have degenerated; and a countless number of individuals have come to an untimely end. Parents who neglect this, neglect the present and eternal interests of their offspring.

CHAPTER IV.

A battle between Israel and the Philistines; in which the former are defeated, with the loss of four thousand men, 1, 2. They resolve to give the Philistines battle once more, and bring the ark of the Lord, with Hophni and Phinehas the priests, into the camp, 3, 4. They do so, and become vainly confident, 5. At this the Philistines are dismayed, 6—9. The battle commences, the Israelites are again defeated, with the loss of thirty thousand men: Hophni and Phinehas are among the slain: and the ark of the Lord is taken, 10, 11. A Benjamite runs with the news to Eli; who, hearing of the capture of the ark, falls from his seat, and breaks his neck, 12—18. The wife of Phinehas, hearing of the death of her husband and father-in-law, and of the capture of the ark, is taken in untimely travail, brings forth a son, calls him I-chabod, and expires, 19—22.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. The word of Samuel came to all Israel.] This clause certainly belongs to the preceding chapter: and is so placed by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic.

Pitched beside Eben-ezer] This name was not given to this place till more than twenty years after this battle, see chap. vii. 12; for the monument called האבן העזר ha Eben ha Ezer, the "Stone of help," was erected by Samuel in the place afterward, from this circumstance, called Eben-ezer, when the Lord had given the Israelites a signal victory over the Philistines. It was situated in the tribe of Judah, between Mizpeh and Shen, and not far from the Aphek here mentioned. This is another proof that this book was compiled after the times and transactions which it records; and probably from memoranda, which had been made by a contemporary writer.

Verse 2. Put themselves in array] There is no doubt that both the Philistines and Israelites had what might be called the art of war; according to which, they marshalled their troops in the field, constructed their camps, and conducted their retreats, sieges, &c.: but we know not the principles on which they acted.

They slew of the army in the field about four thousand men.] This must have been a severe conflict, as four thousand were left dead on the field of battle. The contest also must have lasted some considerable time, as these were all slain hand to hand; swords and spears being, in all probability, the only weapons then used.

to-day before the Philistines?

Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of Shiloh unto us, that, when it cometh among us, it may save us out of the hand of our enemies.

4 So the people sent to Shiloh, that they might bring from thence the ark of the covenant of the LORD of hosts, which dwelleth between^b the cherubim: and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were there with the ark of the covenant of God.

5 And when the ark of the covenant of the LORD came into the camp, all

Verse 3. Let us fetch the ark] They vainly supposed that the ark could save them, when the God of it had departed from them, because of their wickedness! They knew that, in former times, their fathers had been beaten by their enemies when they took not the ark with them to battle; as in the case of their wars with the Canaanites, Numb. xiv. 44, 45.; and that they had conquered when they took this with them, as in the case of the destruction of Jericho, Josh. vi. 4. From the latter case they took confidence: but the cause of their miscarriage in the former they laid not to heart. It was customary with all the nations of the earth, to take their gods and sacred ensigns with them to war. The Persians, Indians, Greeks, Romans, Germans, Philistines, &c. did so. Consecrated crosses, blessing and hallowing of colours and standards, are the modern remains of those ancient superstitions.

Verse 4. The LORD of hosts] See on chap. i. 3. Dwelleth between the cherubim] Of what shape the cherubim were we know not: but there was one of these representative figures placed at each end of the ark of the covenant; and between them, on the lid or cover of that ark, which was called the propitiatory, or mercy-seat, the shekinah, or symbol of the divine presence, was said to dwell. They thought, therefore, if they had the ark, they must, necessarily, have the presence and influence of Jehovah.

Verse 5. All Israel shouted] Had they humiliated themselves, and prayed devoutly and fer-

Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again.
6 And when the Philistines heard the noise of the shout, they said. What meaneth the noise of this great shout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they understood that the ark of the LORD was come into the camp.

7 And the Philistines were afraid. for they said, God is come into the camp. And they said, Wo unto us! for there hath not been such a thing¹ heretofore.

8 Wo unto us! who shall deliver us out of the hand of these mighty Gods? these are the Gods that smote the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderness.

vently for success, they would have been heard and saved. Their shouting proved both their vanity and irreligion.

Verse 7. God is come into the camp.] They took for granted, as did the Israelites, that his presence was inseparable from his ark or shrine.

Verse 8. These mighty Gods מִדְּהַאֱלֹהִים miyd ha elohim ha adirim, “from the hand of these illustrious gods.” Probably this should be translated in the singular, and not in the plural: “Who shall deliver us from the hand of this illustrious God?”

Verse 9. Be strong, &c.] This was the address to the whole army; and very forcible it was. “If ye do not fight, and quit yourselves like men, ye will be servants to the Hebrews, as they have been to you; and you may expect that they will avenge themselves of you for all the cruelty you have exercised toward them.”

Verse 11. Hophni and Phinehas were slain.] They probably attempted to defend the ark, and lost their lives in the attempt.

Verse 12. Came to Shiloh the same day] The field of battle could not have been at any great distance; for this young man reached Shiloh the same evening after the defeat.

With his clothes rent, and with earth upon his head.] These were signs of sorrow and distress among all nations. The clothes rent signified the rending, dividing, and scattering, of the people; the earth, or ashes on the head, signified their humiliation: “We are brought down to the dust of the earth; we are near to our graves.” When the Trojan fleet was burnt, Æneas is represented as tearing his robe from his shoulders, and invoking the aid of his gods:

Auxilique vocare Deos, et tendere palmas.*
Virg. Æn. v. vsr. 685.

“The prince then tore his robes in deep despair, Rais’d high his hands, and thus address’d his prayer.”
Pitt.

We have a remarkable example in the same poet, where he represents the queen of King Latinus, resolving on her own death, when she found that the Trojans had taken the city by storm:

9^k Be strong, and quit yourselves like men, O ye Philistines, that ye be not servants unto the Hebrews,¹ as they have been to you: ^m quit yourselves like men, and fight.

10 ¶ And the Philistines fought, and Israel was smitten, and they fled every man into his tent: and there was a very great slaughter; for there fell of Israel thirty thousand footmen.

11 And^o the ark of God was taken; and^p the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas,^r were slain.

12 ¶ And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and^s came to Shiloh the same day, with his clothes rent, and^t with earth upon his head.

She tears, with both her hands, her purple vest.

But the image is complete in King Latinus himself, when he heard of the death of his queen, and saw his city in flames:

*It sciss’d veste Latinus,
Conjugis attonitus fatis, urbisque ruinâ,
Canitiem immundo perfusam pulvere turpans.*
Id. ver. 659.

*Latinus tears his garments as he goes,
Both for his public and his private woes:
With filth his venerable head besmears,
And sordid dust deforms his silver hairs.* Dryden.

We find the same custom expressed in one line by Catullus:

Canitiem terra, atque infuso pulvere sedans.
Epith. Pelei et Thetidos, v. 224.

Dishonouring her hoary locks with earth and sprinkled dust.

The ancient Greeks, in their mourning, often shaved off their hair:

Τούτο νυ καὶ γῆρας οἶον οἴζυροισι ἑρτοῖσι, Κεῖρα σθαίτε πομπῇ, βαρύνει τ’ ἀποδάκρυ παρειών.

Hom. Odys. iv. v. 197.

“Let each deplore his dead: the rites of woe
Are all, alas! the living can bestow
O’er the congenial dust, enjoined to shear
The graceful curl, and drop the tender tear.” Pope.

And again:

*Καθήμεν ἐν λεχέσσι, καθύραντες χροὺ καλὸν τῷατι τε λαρρὸν καὶ ἀλειφατὶ πολλὰ δὲ σ’ ἀμφί:
δάκρυα δερμά χeson δαγασί, κείροντο τε χεῖρας.*
Id. lib. xxiv. v. 44.

“Then unguents sweet, and tepid streams, we shed;
Tears flow’d from every eye; and o’er the dead
Each clipp’d the curling honours of his head.”
Pope.

The whole case is strongly expressed in the case of Achilles, when he heard of the death of his friend Patroclus:

*Ὡς φάτο· πόν δ’ ἀχέος νεφελὴ ἐκάλυψε μελαινα
Ἀμφότερασι δὲ χερσὶν ἔλων κόπιν αἰθαλοῖσσαν,

Cast on the ground, with furious hands he spread
The scorching ashes o'er his graceful head:

Those he deforms with dust; and these, with tears."

Pope.

It is not unusual, even in Europe, and in the most civilized parts of it, to see grief expressed by tearing the hair, beating the breasts, and rending the garments: all these are natural signs, or expressions of deep and excessive grief; and are common to all the nations of the world.

Verse 13. His heart trembled for the ark of God] He was a most mild and affectionate father; and yet the safety of the ark lay nearer to his heart than the safety of his two sons. Who can help feeling for this aged, venerable man?

Verse 17. And the messenger answered] Never was a more afflictive message, containing such a variety of woes, each rising above the preceding, delivered in so few words.

1. Israel is fled before the Philistines:

This was a sore evil: that Israel should turn their backs upon their enemies was bad; and that they should turn their backs on such enemies as the Philistines, was yet worse; for now they might expect the chains of their slavery to be strengthened, and rivetted more closely.

2. There hath been also a great slaughter among the people:

A rout might have taken place without any great previous slaughter: but in this case the field was warmly contested; thirty thousand were laid dead on the spot. This was a deeper cause of distress than the preceding: as if he had said, the flower of our armies is destroyed; scarcely a veteran now to take the field.

3. Thy two sons also, Hophni and Phinehas, are dead:

This was still more afflictive to him as a father, to lose both his sons, the only hope of the family; and to have them taken away by a violent death, when there was so little prospect of their having died in the peace of God, was most grievous of all.

4. The ark of God is taken:

This was the most dreadful of the whole: now Israel is dishonoured in the sight of the heathen, and the name of the Lord will be blasphemed by them. Besides, the capture of the ark shows that God is departed from Israel; and now there is no farther hope of restoration for the people, but every prospect of the destruction of the nation, and the final ruin of all religion! How high does each wo rise on the back of the preceding! And with what apparent art is this very laconic message constructed? And yet, probably, no art at all was used; and the messenger delivered the tidings just as the facts rose up in his mind.

How vapid, diffused, and alliterated, is the report of the messenger in the Persæ of Æschylus, who comes to the queen with the tremendous account of the destruction of the whole naval power of the Persians, at the battle of Salamis? I shall give his first speech, and leave the reader to compare the two accounts.

Of which I subjoin the following translation by Dr. Potter:

This is the sum of his account, which he afterward details in about a dozen of speeches.

Heroes and conquerors, ancient and modern, have been celebrated for comprising a vast deal of information in a few words. I will give three examples, and have no doubt that the Benjamite in the text, will be found to have greatly the advantage.

1. Julius Cesar, having totally defeated Pharnaces, king of Pontus, wrote a letter to the Roman senate, which contained only these three words:

Veni, Vidi, Vici;
I came, I saw, I conquered.

This war was begun and ended in one day!

2. Admiral Hawke, having totally defeated the French fleet in 1759, off the coast of Britany, wrote as follows to King George II.:

"SIRE, I have taken, sunk, burnt, and destroyed, all the French fleet, as per margin. HAWKE."

3. NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, then general-in-chief of the French armies in Italy, wrote to Josephine, his wife, the evening before he attacked Field Marshal Alvinzi, the imperial general:

and there hath been also a great slaughter among the people, and thy two sons also, Hoplini and Phinehas, are dead, and the ark of God is taken.

18 And it came to pass, when he made mention of the ark of God, that he fell from off the seat backward by the side of the gate, and his neck brake, and he died; for he was an old man, and heavy. ^a And he had judged Israel forty years.

19 ¶ And his daughter-in-law, Phinehas' wife, was with child, ^b near ^c to be delivered: and when she heard the tidings that the ark of God was taken, and that her father-in-law and her

20 And about the time of her death, ^e the women that stood by her said unto her, Fear not; for thou hast borne a son. But she answered not, ^f neither did she regard it.

21 And she named the child ^g I-chabod, ^h saying, ⁱ The glory is departed from Israel: because the ark of God was taken, and because of her father-in-law, and her husband.

were totally defeated, Mantua surrendered, and the campaign for that year, (1796,) was concluded.

In the above examples, excellent as they are in their kind, we find little more than one idea; whereas the report of the Benjamite includes several: for, in the most forcible manner, he points out the general and particular disasters of the day, the rout of the army, the great slaughter, the death of the priests, who were in effect the whole generals of the army, and the capture of the ark; all that, on such an occasion, could affect and distress the heart of an Israelite. And all this he does in four simple assertions.

Verse 18. When he made mention of the ark of God] Eli bore all the relation till the messenger came to this solemn word: he had trembled before for the ark; and now, hearing that it was captured, he was transfixed with grief, fell down from his seat, and dislocated his neck! Behold the judgments of God! But shall we say that this man, howsoever remiss in the education of his children, and criminal in his indulgence toward his profligate sons, which arose more from the easiness of his disposition, than from a desire to encourage vice, is gone to perdition? God forbid! No man ever died with such benevolent and religious feelings, and yet perished.

He had judged Israel forty years] Instead of forty years, the Septuagint has here εκοσι ετη, twenty years. All the other versions, as well as the Hebrew text, have forty years.

Verse 19. And his daughter-in-law] This is another very affecting story: the defeat of Israel, the capture of the ark, the death of her father-in-law, and the slaughter of her husband, were more than a woman in her circumstances, near the time of her delivery, could bear. She bowed, travailed, was delivered of a son, gave the child a name indicative of the ruined state of Israel, and expired!

^e Gen. 35. 17.—^d Heb. set not her heart.—^f That is, where is the glory? or, there is no glory.—^g Psa. 14. 3.—^h Ch. 26. 8. & 78. 61.

Verse 20. But she answered not] She paid no attention to what the women had said concerning her having borne a son: that information she regarded not.

Verse 21. She named the child I-chabod] The versions are various on the original words אִי-כָבֹד Ai-cabod: the Septuagint ouaibarchaboth; the Syriac, ܝܫܝܥܝܐ yocobor; the Arabic, ܝܫܝܥܝܐ yochabad. But none of these give us much light on the subject. It is pretty evident they did not know well what signification to give the name; and we are left to collect its meaning from what she says afterward, The glory is departed from Israel: the words literally mean Where is the glory? And indeed where was it, when the armies of Israel were defeated by the Philistines, the priests slain, the supreme magistrate dead, and the ark of the Lord taken?

This is a very eventful, interesting, and affecting chapter; and prepares the reader for those signal manifestations of God's power and providence, by which the ark was restored, the priesthood re-established, an immaculate judge given to Israel, the Philistine yoke broken, and the people of the Most High caused once more to triumph. God humbled them that he might exalt them: he suffered his glory for a time to become eclipsed, that he might afterward cause it to break out with the greater effulgence.

CHAPTER V.

The Philistines set up the ark in the temple of Dagon, at Ashdod; whose image is found next morning prostrate before it, broken in pieces, 1—5. The Philistines are also smitten with a sore disease, 6. The people of Ashdod refuse to let the ark stay with them; and the lords of the Philistines, with whom they consulted, order it to be carried to Gath, 7, 8. They do so; and God smites the inhabitants of that city, young and old, with the same disease, 9. They send the ark to Ekron, and a heavy destruction falls upon that city, and they resolve to send it back to Shiloh, 10—12.

5 Therefore neither the priests of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagon's house, tread on the threshold of Dagon in Ashdod unto this day.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. Brought it from Eben-ezer unto Ashdod. Ashdod, or Azotus, was one of the five satrapies, or lordships, of the Philistines.

Verse 2. The house of Dagon On this idol, which was supposed to be partly in a human form, and partly in that of a fish, see the note on Judges xvi. 23. Some think that this idol was the same with Dirceto, Attergatis, the Venus of Askelon, and the Moon. See Calmet's Dissertation on the gods of the Philistines.

The motive which induced the Philistines to set up the ark in the temple of Dagon may be easily ascertained. It was customary in all nations to dedicate the spoils taken from an enemy to their gods:—1st, As a gratitude-offering, for the help which they supposed them to have furnished: and, 2dly, As a proof that their gods, i. e. the gods of the conquerors, were more powerful than those of the conquered. It was, no doubt, to insult the God of Israel, and to insult and terrify his people, that they placed his ark in the temple of Dagon. When the Philistines had conquered Saul, they hung up his armour in the temple of Ashtaroth, chap. xxxi. 10. And when David slew Goliath, he laid up his sword in the tabernacle of the Lord, chap. xxi. 8, 9. We have the remains of this custom in the depositing of colours, standards, &c. taken from an enemy, in our churches; but whether this may be called superstition, or a religious act, is hard to say. If the battle were the Lord's, which few battles are, the dedication might be right.

Verse 3. They of Ashdod arose early on the morrow Probably to perform some act of their superstition in the temple of their idol.

Dagon was fallen upon his face This was one proof, which they little expected, of the superiority of the God of Israel.

Set him in his place again. Supposing his fall might have been merely accidental.

Verse 4. Only the stump of Dagon was left Literally, only דגון (i. e. the little fish,) was left. It has already been remarked, that Dagon had the head, arms, and hands, of a man or woman; and that the rest of the idol was in the form of a fish, to which Horace is supposed to allude:

Desinat in piscem, mulier formosa superne.

"The upper part resembling a beautiful woman, the lower a fish."

All that was human in his form was broken off from what resembled a fish. Here was a proof that the affair was not accidental; and these proofs of God's power and authority prepared the way for his judgments.

Verse 5. Tread on the threshold Because the arms, &c. of Dagon were broken off by his fall on the threshold, the threshold became sacred, and neither his priests nor his worshippers ever tread on the threshold; thus it was ordered, in the divine providence, that, by a religious custom of their own, they should perpetuate their disgrace, the insufficiency of their worship, and the superiority of the God of Israel.

It is supposed that the idolatrous Israelites, in the time of Zephaniah, had adopted the worship of Dagon: and that, in this sense, chap. i. 9. is to be understood, In the same day will I punish all those who leap upon the threshold. In order to go into such temples, and not tread on the threshold, the people must step or leap over them; and in this way the above passage may be understood. Indeed, the thresholds of the temples, in various places, were deemed so sacred that the people were accustomed to fall down, and kiss them. When Christianity became corrupted, this adoration of the thresholds of the churches took place.

Verse 6. Smote them with emerods The word עֲפָלִים âpalim, from עָפַל âphal, to be elevated, probably means the disease called the bleeding piles; which appears to have been accompanied with dysentery, bloody flux, and ulcerated anus.

The Vulgate says, Et percussit in secretiori parte natium: "And he smote them in the more secret parts of their posteriors." To this the Psalmist is supposed to refer, Psa. lxxviii. 66.: He smote all his enemies in the hinder parts; he put them to a perpetual reproach. Some copies of the Septuagint have ἐκέλευσεν αὐτοὺς ἐν τῷ ὀπίσθῳ, "he inflamed them in their ships;" other copies have ἐν τῷ ὀπίσθῳ, "in their posteriors." The Syriac is the same. The Arabic enlarges: "He smote them in their posteriors, so that they were affected with a dysentery." I suppose them to have been affected with enlargements of the hæmorrhoidal veins, from which there came frequent discharges of blood.

The Septuagint and Vulgate make a very destroyed them, and smote them with ^k emerods, even Ashdod, and the coasts thereof.

7 And when the men of Ashdod saw that it was so, they said, The ark of the God of Israel shall not abide with us: for his hand is sore upon us, and upon Dagon our god.

8 ¶ They sent therefore, and gathered all the lords of the Philistines unto them, and said, What shall we do with the ark of the God of Israel? And they answered, Let the ark of the God of Israel be carried about unto Gath. And they carried the ark of the God of Israel about thither.

9 And it was so, that, after they had carried it about, ^l the hand of the LORD was against the city ^m with a very great destruction: and ⁿ he smote the men of the city, both small and great, and they had emerods in their secret parts.

10 ¶ Therefore they sent the ark of God to Ekron. And it came to pass, as the ark of God came to Ekron, that the Ekronites cried out, saying, They have brought about the ark of the God of Israel to ^o us, to slay us and our people.

11 So they sent and gathered together all the lords of the Philistines, and said, Send away the ark of the God of Israel, and let it go again to his own place, that it slay ^p us not, and our people: for there was a deadly destruction throughout all the city; ^q the hand of God was very heavy there.

12 And the men that died not, were smitten with the emerods: and the cry of the city went up to heaven.

material addition to this verse: Kai meson tes charas autης anebresen mures kai ezyeto syrchusis thanatou megalh en ty pelus.—Et ebullierunt villæ et agri in medio regionis illius; et nati sunt mures, et facta est confusio mortis magnæ in civitate. “And the cities and fields of all that region burst up, and mice were produced, and there was the confusion of a great death in the city.” This addition, Houbigant contends, was originally in the Hebrew text; and this gives us the reason why golden mice were sent, as well as the images of the emerods, chap. vi. 4. when the ark was restored.

Verse 7. His hand is sore upon us, and upon Dagon our god.] Here the end was completely answered: they now saw that they had not prevailed against Israel, because their god was more powerful than Jehovah; and they now feel how easily this God can confound and destroy their whole nation.

Verse 8. The lords of the Philistines] The word סרני sarney, which we translate lords, is rendered by the Chaldee סרני tureney, tyrants. The Syriac is the same. By the Vulgate and Septuagint, satrapas, satraps. Palestine was divided into those five satrapies; Ashdod, Ekron, Askelon, Gath, and Gaza. See Josh. xiii. 8. But these were all federates; and acted under one general government, for which they assembled in council.

Let the ark—be carried about] They probably thought that their affliction rose from some natural cause; and, therefore, they wished the ark to be carried about from place to place, to see what the effects might be. If they found the same evil produced wherever it came, then they must conclude that it was a judgment from the God of Israel.

Verse 9. The hand of the LORD was against the city] As it was at Ashdod, so it was at Gath. The Vulgate says, Et computrescebant prominenter extales eorum; which conveys the idea of a bloody flux, dysentery, and ulcerated anus: and it adds, what is not to be found in the Hebrew text, nor many of the versions, except some traces in the Septuagint, Et fecerunt sibi sedes pelliceas, “And they made unto themselves seats of skins;” for the purpose of sitting more easy, on account of the malady already mentioned.

Verse 11. Send away the ark] It appears that it had been received at Ekron, for there was a deadly destruction through the whole city. They, therefore, concluded that the ark should be sent back to Shiloh.

Verse 12. The men that died not] Some, it seems, were smitten with instant death: others, with the hæmorrhoids; and there was a universal consternation; and the cry of the city went up to heaven: it was an exceeding great cry.

It does not appear that the Philistines had any correct knowledge of the nature of Jehovah, though they seemed to acknowledge his supremacy. They imagined that every country, district, mountain, and valley, had its peculiar deity; who, in its place, was supreme over all others. They thought, therefore, to appease Jehovah by sending him back his ark, or shrine; and, in order to be redeemed from their plagues, they send golden mice and emerods as telesms, probably made under some particular configurations of the planets. See at the end of ch. vi.

After the ark had been seven months in the land of the Philistines, they consult their priests and diviners about sending it to Shiloh, 1, 2. They advise that it be sent back with a trespass-offering, of five golden emerods, and five golden mice, 3-6. They advise also that it be sent back on a new cart, drawn by two milch kine, from whom their calves shall be tied up; and then conclude that if these cows shall take the way of Beth-shemesh, as going to the Israelitish border, then the Lord had afflicted them; if not, then their evils were accidental, 7-9. They do as directed, and the kine take the way of Beth-shemesh, 10-13. They stop in the field of Joshua; and the men of Beth-shemesh take them and offer them to the Lord for a burnt-offering, and cleave the wood of the cart to burn them; and make sundry other offerings, 14, 15. The offerings of the five lords of the Philistines, 16-18. For too curiously looking into the ark, the men of Beth-shemesh are smitten of the Lord, 19, 20. They send to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, that they may take away the ark, 21.

Verse 2. The diviners] וַיִּשְׁאָלוּ כֹּהֲנִים וְיִדְּוֹנִים kosmim, from קָסַם kasam, to presage, or prognosticate. See Deut. xviii. 10. In what their pretended art consisted we know not.

Verse 3. Send it not empty] As it appears ye have trespassed against him, send him an offering for this trespass.

Why his hand is not removed] The sense is, if you send him a trespass-offering, and ye be cured, then ye shall know why his judgments have not been taken away from you, previously to this offering.

It is a common opinion, says Calmet, among all people, that although the Supreme Being needs nothing of his creatures, yet he requires that they should consecrate to him all that they have: for the same argument that proves his independence, infinitude, and self-sufficiency, proves our dependence, and the obligation we are under to acknowledge him by offering him due marks of our gratitude and submission. Such sentiments were common among all people; and God himself commands his people not to appear before him without an offering, Exod. xxiii. 15. None shall appear before me empty.

Verse 4. Five golden emerods, and five golden mice] The emerods had afflicted their bodies; the mice had marred their land. Both, they considered, as sent by God; and, by making an image of each, and sending them as a trespass-offering, they acknowledged this. See at the end.

Verse 5. He will lighten his hand from off

5 Wherefore ye shall make^a images of your emerods, and images of your mice that^b mar the land; and ye shall^c give glory unto the God of Israel: peradventure he will^d lighten his hand from off you, and from off^e your gods, and from off your land.

6 Wherefore then do ye harden your hearts,^f as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts? When he had wrought^g wonderfully among them, did they not let^h the people go, and they departed?

7 Now therefore makeⁱ a new cart, and take two milch kine, on which there hath come no yoke, and tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them:

you] The whole land was afflicted; the ground was marred by the mice, the common people and the lords afflicted by the hæmorrhoids, and their gods broken in pieces.

Verse 6. Wherefore then do ye harden your hearts] They had heard how God punished the Egyptians; and they are afraid of similar plagues. It appears that they had kept the ark long enough.

Did they not let the people go] And has he not wrought wonderfully among us; and should we not send back his ark?

Verse 7. Make a new cart] It was indecent and improper to employ, in any part of the worship of God, any thing that had before served for a common purpose. Every thing in the worship of God is said to be sanctified; now the general meaning of that word is, to separate a thing from all earthly and common uses, and devote it solely to the service of God.

When David removed the ark from the house of Abinadab, he put it on a new cart, 2 Sam. vi. 3.

Bring their calves home from them] So it appears that their calves had been with them in the fields. This was a complete trial; unless they were supernaturally influenced, they would not leave their calves; unless supernaturally directed, they would not leave their home, and take a way, unguided, which they had never gone before.

Verse 8. The jewels of gold] The word כֶּלֶי keley, which our translators so often render jewels of gold, which ye return him for a trespass-offering, in a coffer by the side thereof; and send it away, that it may go.

9 And see, if it goeth up by the way of his own coasts to Beth-shemesh, then ^u he hath done us this great evil: but if not, then ^v we shall know that it is not his hand that smote us; it was a chance that happened to us.

10 ¶ And the men did so; and took two milch kine, and tied them to the cart, and shut up their calves at home:

11 And they laid the ark of the LORD upon the cart, and the coffer with the mice of gold and the images of their emerods.

12 And the kine took the straight way to the way of Beth-shemesh, and went along the highway, lowing as they went, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left; and the lords of the Philistines went after them unto the border of Beth-shemesh.

13 And they of Beth-shemesh were reaping their wheat-harvest in the valley: and they lifted up their eyes, and saw the ark, and rejoiced to see it.

jewels, signifies vessels, implements, ornaments, &c. A jewel of gold has an odd sound to those who always attach the idea of a precious stone to the term.

Verse 9. A chance that happened to us.] The word מיקרה mikreh, from קרה karah, to meet, or coalesce, signifies an event that naturally arises from such concurring causes as, in the order and nature of things, must produce it.

Thus, a bad state of the atmosphere, putrid exhalations, bad diet, occasioned by any general scarcity, might have produced the disease in question; and to something of this kind they would attribute it, if the other evidences did not concur. This gives us the proper notion of chance; and shows us that it is a matter as dependent upon the divine providence, as any thing can be: in short, that these occurrences are parts of the divine government.

The word chance, though often improperly used to signify such an occurrence as is not under the divine government, is, of itself, not only simple, but expressive: and has nearly the meaning of the Hebrew word: it comes from the French cheoir, or escheoir, to fall out, to occur, to fall to. Hence our law-term escheat; any lands that fall to the lord of the manor by forfeiture, or for want of heirs: i. e. these are the occurrences which naturally throw the lands into the hands of the lord.

Verse 12. Lowling as they went] Calling for their calves.

14 And the cart came into the field of Joshua, a Beth-shemite, and stood there, where there was a great stone: and they clave the wood of the cart, and offered the kine a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

15 And the Levites took down the ark of the LORD, and the coffer that was with it, wherein the jewels of gold were, and put them on the great stone: and the men of Beth-shemesh offered burnt-offerings and sacrificed sacrifices the same day unto the LORD.

16 And when ^w the five lords of the Philistines had seen it, they returned to Ekron the same day.

17 ^x And these are the golden emerods which the Philistines returned for a trespass-offering unto the LORD; for Ashdod one, for Gaza one, for Askelon one, for Gath one, for Ekron one;

18 And the golden mice, according to the number of all the cities of the Philistines belonging to the five lords, both of fenced cities, and of country villages, even unto the ^y great stone of Abel, whereon they set down the ark of the LORD: which stone remaineth unto this they were placed where two roads met, one going to Ekron, the other to Beth-shemesh. It is possible that they were put in such circumstances as these, for the greater certainty of the affair: to have turned from their own home, from their calves, and known pasture, and to have taken the road to a strange country, must argue supernatural influence.

The lords of the Philistines went after] They were so jealous in this business, that they would trust no eyes but their own. All this was wisely ordered, that there might be the fullest conviction of the being and interposition of God.

Verse 14. They clave the wood of the cart] Both the cart and the cattle, having been thus employed, could no longer be devoted to any secular services: therefore, the cattle were sacrificed, and the cart was broken up for fuel to consume the sacrifice.

Verse 15. The Levites took down] It appears there were some of the tribe of Levi among the people of Beth-shemesh: to them appertained the service of the tabernacle.

Verse 17. These are the golden emerods] Each of these cities, in what may be called its corporate capacity, sent a golden emerod.

Verse 18. And the golden mice] The desolation that had been made through the land by these animals, had excited a general concern; and, it appears from the text, that all the cities of the Philistines, as well fenced as without walls, sent a golden mouse as a trespass-offering.

interpolation, or be understood in some such way as that mentioned above. But the omission of the particle of similitude solves every difficulty; and this would account for the reading in Josephus, as, in his recital, he would naturally leave out such an explanation of the worth of the seventy men, as his Roman readers could not easily comprehend such comparisons.

With a great slaughter.] Seventy men slain, out of an inconsiderable village, in a harvest day, was certainly a great slaughter.

Verse 20. Who is able to stand? Why this exclamation? They knew that God had forbidden any to touch his ark but the priests and Levites; but they now endeavour to throw that blame on God, as a being hard to be pleased, which belonged solely to themselves.

Verse 21. To the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim] They wished the ark away out of their village: but why they sent to this city instead of sending to Shiloh, does not appear: probably, Shiloh had been destroyed by the Philistines, after the late defeat of Israel. This is most likely, as the ark was never more taken back to that place.

It was a very ancient usage when a plague, or other calamity, infested a country, city, &c. for the magicians to form an image of the destroyer, or of the things on which the plague particularly rested, in gold, silver, ivory, wax, clay, &c. under certain configurations of the heavens; and to set this up in some proper place, that the evils thus represented might be driven away. These consecrated images were the same that are called talismans, or rather telesms, among the Asiatics. Mr. Locke calls the diviners talismans! but this is a pitiful mistake: the image, not the fabricator, was called by this name.

I have seen several of these talismans, of different countries; and such images were probably the origin of all the forms of gods, which, in after times, were the objects of religious worship. It is well known that Ireland is not infested with any venomous creature; no serpent of any kind is found in it:

"No poison there infects, no scaly snake Lurks in the grass, nor toad annoys the lake."

This has been attributed to a telesm, formed with certain rites, under the sign Scorpio. Such opinions have been drawn from very ancient Pagan sources: e. g. A stone engraved with the figure of a scorpion, while the moon is in the sign Scorpio, is said to cure those who are stung by this animal. Apollonius Tyaneus is said to have prevented flies from infesting Antioch; and storks from appearing in Byzantium, by figures of those animals formed under certain constellations. A brazen scorpion, placed on a pillar in the city of Antioch, is said to have expelled all such animals from that country. And a crocodile of lead is also said to have preserved Cairo from the depredations of those monsters. See Calmel.

21 ¶ And they sent messengers to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, saying, The Philistines have brought again the ark of the LORD; come ye down, and fetch it up to you.

Virgil refers to this custom, Æclogue viii. v. 80. where he represents a person making two images, or telesms, one of wax, another of clay; which were to represent an absent person, who was to be alternately softened or hardened as the wax or clay image was exposed to the fire.

Limus ut hic durescit, et hæc ut cera liquescit Uno et eodem igni: sic nostro Daphnis amore.

"As this clay hardens, and this wax softens, by one and the same fire; so may Daphnis by my love."

A beautiful marble figure of Osiris, about four inches and a quarter high, now stands before me, all covered over with hieroglyphics: he is standing, and holds in each hand a scorpion and a snake by the tails, and with each foot he stands on the neck of a crocodile. This, I have no doubt, was a telesm, formed under some peculiar configuration of the heavens, intended to drive away both scorpions and crocodiles. This image is of the highest antiquity, and was formed probably long before the Christian era.

Tavernier observes, that something like what is mentioned in the text is practised among the Indians: for when a pilgrim goes to one of the idol temples for a cure, he brings the figure of the member affected, made either of gold, silver, or copper, according to his circumstances, which he offers to his god. This custom was common among the heathens; and they consecrated to their gods the monuments of their deliverance. From heathenism it was adopted by corrupt Christianity; and Theodoret informs us that, in his time, there might be seen about the tombs of the martyrs figures of eyes, hands, feet, and other parts of the body, which represented those of the offerers which they supposed had been healed by the intercession of those holy persons! This degrading superstition is continued among the Papists to the present day: I have seen at St. Winifrid's well, in Holywell, Flintshire, several staves, crutches, and hand-barrows, hung up in different places, which were reported to be the votive offerings of the maimed, the halt, the withered, &c. who had received their cure by the virtue of the saint! It is true the crutches are such as no man or woman could ever walk with; and the barrows are such as most evidently never carried any human being. But they serve the purposes of superstition, and keep up an idolatrous reverence for the well, and the legendary virgin.

After all, I need not say that the system of judicial astrology is vain, unfounded, absurd, and wicked. It, in effect, presumes to take the government of the world out of the hands of an all-wise God, and to abandon it to the most fortuitous and unconnected occurrences of life: for, the stars have their influences according to this pretended science, conformably to the occurrences here below; e. g. if a child be born but one hour sooner or later than a particular configuration of the heavens, his destiny will be widely different from what it otherwise would have been; and as an almost infinite number of casualties may accelerate or retard a birth, consequently the whole destiny of the man is influenced and ruled by these casualties: to say nothing of the absurdity, that those omnipotent stars never can affect the infant while invested with a thin covering of flesh in the womb of its parent. But the whole science is a tissue of absurdities.

CHAPTER VII.

The men of Kirjath-jearim bring the ark from Beth-shemesh, and consecrate Eleazar, the son of Abinadab, to keep it; and there it continued twenty years, 1, 2. Samuel reproves and exhorts the people; and gathers them together at Mizpeh, where they fast and pray, and confess their sins, 3—5. The Philistines go up against them; the Israelites cry unto the Lord for help; Samuel offers sacrifices; and the Lord confounds the Philistines with thunder; Israel discomfited, and pursue them to Beth-car, 7—11. Samuel erects a stone for a memorial, and calls it Eben-ezer, 12. The Philistines are totally subdued, and Israel recovers all its lost cities, 13, 14. Samuel acts as an itinerant judge in Israel, 15—17.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. Fetched up the ark] When these people received the message of the Beth-shemites, they probably consulted Samuel, with whom was the counsel of the Lord; and he had encouraged them to go and bring it up, else they might have expected such destruction as happened to the Beth-shemites.

Sanctified Eleazar] Perhaps this sanctifying signifies no more than setting this man apart, simply to take care of the ark.

Verse 2. It was twenty years] This chapter contains the transactions of at least twenty years; but we know not the date of each event.

Verse 3. And Samuel spake] We have heard nothing of this judge since he served in the tabernacle. He was now grown up, and established for a prophet in the land of Israel.

If ye do return] From your backsliding and idolatry.

With all your hearts] For outward services and professions will avail nothing.

Put away the strange gods] Destroy their images, altars, and groves; they are strange; you do not know them as helpers, saviours, or defenders.

Prepare your hearts] Let your hearts be straight and steady.

And serve him only] Have no other religious service but his; and obey his laws.

He will deliver you] Vain are your own exertions: he will deliver you in such a way as to show that the excellence of the power is of himself alone.

Verse 4. Put away Baalim and Ashtaroth] These were not two particular deities, but two genera of idols; the one masculine BAALIM: the other feminine, ASHTAROTH: both the words are in the plural number, and signify all their gods and goddesses.

Verse 5. Gather all Israel to Mizpeh] This appears to have been an armed assembly though, probably, collected principally for religious and political purposes: but Samuel knew that an unarmed multitude could not safely be convened in the vicinity of the Philistines.

Verse 6. Drew water, and poured it out] It is not easy to know what is meant by this: it is true that pouring out water, in the way of libation, was a religious ordinance among the Hebrews, Isa. xii. 3; and among most other nations, particularly the Greeks and Romans, who used not only water, but wine, milk, honey, and blood; as we find by Homer, Virgil, Euripides, Sophocles, Porphyry, and Lucian. Our Lord seems to allude to this ceremony, John vii. 37, 38; where see the note.

The Chaldee Paraphrast understands the place differently; for he translates: "And they poured out their hearts in penitence, as waters, before the Lord." That deep penitential sorrow was represented under the notion of pouring out water we have a direct proof in the case of 7 ¶ And when the Philistines heard that the children of Israel were gathered together to Mizpeh, the lords of the Philistines went up against Israel. And when the children of Israel heard it, they were afraid of the Philistines.

8 And the children of Israel said to Samuel, ° Cease^p not to cry unto the LORD our God for us, that he will save us out of the hands of the Philistines.

9 ¶ And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt-offering wholly unto the LORD: and ° Samuel cried unto the LORD for Israel; and the LORD^t heard him.

10 And as Samuel was offering up the burnt-offering, the Philistines drew near to battle against Israel: ° but the LORD thundered with a great thunder on that day, upon the Philistines, and discomfited them; and they were smitten before Israel.

David, who says, Psa. xxii. 14. I am POURED OUT LIKE WATER, my heart is like WAX; it is MELTED in the midst of my bowels. And to repentance, under this very similitude, the prophet exhorts fallen Jerusalem. Arise, cry out in the night: in the beginning of the watches POUR OUT thine HEART LIKE WATER before the face of the Lord. Lam. ii. 9. David uses the same image, Psa. lxi. 8. Trust in him at all times, ye people; POUR OUT your hearts before him. The same figure is used by Hannah, in chap. i. 16. of this book, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit; I have POURED OUT my soul before the Lord. Perhaps the drawing and pouring out of water, mentioned in the text, was done emblematically, to represent the contrition of their hearts.

And Samuel judged] He gave them ordinances, heard and redressed grievances, and taught them how to get reconciled to God. The assembly, therefore, was held for religio-politico-military purposes.

Verse 7. The Philistines went up against Israel.] They went to give them battle, before that, by continual accessions of numbers, they should become too powerful.

Verse 8. Cease not to cry unto the LORD] They had strong confidence in the intercession of Samuel, because they knew he was a holy man of God.

Verse 9. Samuel took a sucking lamb] This sucking lamb must have been eight days under its mother before it could be offered, as the law says, Lev. xxii. 27.

Though Samuel was not a priest, yet he offered this sacrifice; or, he might have ordered Eleazar to offer it, and still be said to have done it himself—Qui facit per alterum, facit per se; “He who procures a thing to be done, may be said to do it himself.”

11 And the men of Israel went out of Mizpeh, and pursued the Philistines, and smote them, until they came under Beth-car.

12 Then Samuel^v took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it^w Eben-ezer, saying, Hitherto hath the LORD helped us.

13 ¶ So the Philistines were subdued, and they^y came no more into the coast of Israel: and the hand of the LORD was against the Philistines all the days of Samuel.

14 And the cities which the Philistines had taken from Israel were restored to Israel, from Ekron even unto Gath; and the coasts thereof did Israel deliver out of the hands of the Philistines. And there was peace between Israel and the Amorites.

His not sacrificing at the tabernacle was justified by the necessity of the case: neither tabernacle nor ark was at hand.

Verse 10. The LORD thundered with a great thunder] Literally, The Lord thundered with a great voice; he confounded them with a mighty tempest of thunder and lightning; and, no doubt, slew many by the lightning.

Verse 11. Under Beth-car.] We know not where this place was: the Septuagint have Beth-chor; the Targum, Beth-saron; and the Syriac and Arabic, Beth-jasan.

Verse 12. Called the name of it Eben-ezer] עֵבֶן עֶזֶר Eben ha-èzer, “The Stone of Help:” perhaps a pillar is meant by the word stone.

Verse 13. They came no more into the coast of Israel] Perhaps a more signal victory was never gained by Israel: the Lord had brought them low, almost to extermination; and now, by his miraculous interference, he lifts them completely up, and humbles to the dust their proud oppressors. God often suffers nations and individuals to be brought to the lowest extremity, that he may show his mercy and goodness, by suddenly rescuing them from destruction, when all human help has most evidently failed.

Verse 14. The cities which the Philistines had taken] We are not informed of the particulars of these reprisals; but we may rest assured all this was not done in one day: perhaps, the retaking of the cities was, by slow degrees, through the space of several years.

There was peace between Israel and the Amorites.] That is, all the remaining Canaanites kept quiet, and did not attempt to molest the Israelites, when they found the Philistines, the most powerful of the ancient inhabitants of the land, broken and subdued before them.

of his life.] Samuel is supposed to have lived one hundred years: he did not begin to judge Israel till he was about forty years of age; and, if he was a hundred years of age when he died, he must have been a judge sixty years, and consequently been in that office during the whole of Saul's reign! But that he had been dead before Saul's last battle is evident, from the transactions of that king with the witch of Endor; and probably not long before. Samuel was the prophet of that time; declared the will of the Lord, and frequently directed both the civil and military transactions of the kingdom. Samuel seems, in many respects, to have been considered the governor of the people, while Saul was only looked on as the general of the armies.

RAMAH, which is said to be about six miles from Jerusalem, was the seat of prophecy during the life of Samuel; and there, it is probable, all Israel came to consult him on matters of a spiritual nature; as there was the only altar of God in the land of Israel.

CHAPTER VIII.

Samuel, grown old, makes his sons judges in Beer-sheba, 1, 2. They pervert judgment; and the people complain, and desire a king, 3-5. Samuel is displeased, and inquires of the Lord, 6. The Lord is also displeased; but directs Samuel to appoint them a king, and to show them solemnly the consequences of their choice, 7-9. Samuel does so; and shows them what they may expect from an absolute monarch, and how afflicted they should be under his administration, 10-18. NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. When Samuel was old] Supposed to be about sixty—

He made his sons judges] He appointed them as his lieutenants, to superintend certain affairs in Beer-sheba, which he could not conveniently attend to himself. But they were never judges in the proper sense of the word: Samuel was the last judge in Israel, and he judged it to the day of his death. See chap. vii. 15.

Verse 3. His sons walked not in his ways] Their iniquity is pointed out in three words:—They turned aside after lucre: the original batsû signifies to cut, clip, break off; and, therefore, Mr. Parkhurst thinks that it means nearly the same with our clipping of coin. It, however, expresses here the idea of avarice; of getting money by hook or by crook. The Targum says, "They looked after ממון רשע mamon dishekar, the mammon of unrighteousness;" of which they did not make unto themselves friends but enemies. See the note on Matt. vi. 24. 2. They took bribes; וְשֹׁחַד shochoad, gifts or presents, to blind their eyes. 3. They perverted judgment; they turned judgment aside, they put it out of its regular path; they sold it to the highest bidder; thus the wicked rich man had his cause, and the poor man was oppressed and deprived of his right. This was the custom in our own country, before MAGNA CHARTA was obtained: he that would speed in the king's court must bribe all the officers, and fee both the king and queen! I have found in our ancient records the most barefaced and shameful examples of this kind; but it was totally abolished, invito rege, by that provision in the above charter, which states, Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus rectum aut judicium: "To no man will we sell, to no man will we deny or defer justice and right." It was customary in those inauspicious times, for judgment to be delayed, in banco regis, in the king's court, as long as there was any hope that more money would be paid, in order to bring it to issue. And there were cases, where the king did not like the party, in which he denied justice and judgment entirely! Magna Charta brought them to book, and brought the subject to his right.

Of those times it might well be said, as Homer did, Iliad xvi. v. 387.

“When the laws are perverted by force; when justice is expelled from her seat; when judges are swayed from the right; regardless of the vengeance of heaven.” Or, in other words, these were times in which the streams of justice were poisoned in their source; and judges neither feared God, nor regarded man.

Verse 5. Make us a king] Hitherto, from the time in which they were a people, the Israelites were under a theocracy; they had no other king but God. Now, they desire to have a king like the other nations around them, who may be their general in battle; for this is the point at which they principally aim.

Verse 6. The thing displeased Samuel] Because he saw that this amounted to a formal renunciation of the divine government.

Samuel prayed unto the LORD.] He begged to know his mind in this important business.

Verse 7. They have rejected me] They wish to put that government in the hands of a mortal, which was always in the hands of their God. But hearken unto their voice; grant them what they request. So we find God grants that in his displeasure, which he withholds in his mercy.

Verse 9. Show them the manner of the king] The word mishepat, which we here render manner, signifies simply what the king would and might require, according to the manner in which kings in general ruled; all of whom, in those times, were absolute and despotic.

The whole of this manner of the king is well illustrated by Puffendorf. “Hitherto,” says he, “the people of Israel had lived under governors raised up of God, who had exacted no tribute of them, nor put them to any charge; but, little content with this form of government, they

of the king that shall reign over them.

10 ¶ And Samuel told all the words of the LORD unto the people that asked of him a king.

11 And he said, ^o This will be the manner of the king that shall reign over you: ^p He will take your sons, and appoint them for himself, for his chariots, and to be his horsemen; and some shall run before his chariots.

12 And he will appoint him captains over thousands, and captains over fifties; and will set them to ear his ground, and to reap his harvests, and to make his instruments of war, and instruments of his chariots.

13 And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers.

desire to have a king like other nations, who should live in magnificence and pomp, keep armies, and be able to resist any invasion. Samuel informs them what it was they desired; that, when they understood it, they might consider whether they would persist in their choice. If they would have a king splendidly attended, he tells them, that he would take their sons for his chariots, &c.: if they would have him keep up constant forces, then he would appoint them for colonels and captains; and employ those in his wars who were accustomed to follow their family business: and since, after the manner of other kings, he must keep a stately court, they must be content that their daughters should serve in several offices, which the king would think below the dignity of his wives and daughters, ver. 13. Many ministers also, in several departments, both of war and peace, must have salaries to support them, which must be paid out of their fields and vineyards, ver. 14. In one word, that, to sustain his dignity, their king would exact the tenth of all they possessed, and be maintained in a royal manner out of their estates.”

It is perfectly vain in Grotius, or any one else, to state that this shows what a king (as king) may, any where, in virtue of his office, claim and exact; and that he can take the property and persons of his subjects and dispose of them as he may judge necessary for the exigence of the state. This was the manner of Saul; but Saul was not a king of God's choosing—“He gave him in his wrath, and took him away in his displeasure:” and the manner of such a king should not be arrogated by any potentate who affects to rule jure divino, or by divine right. is distinctly detailed, Deut. xvii. 15—20, to which the reader will do well to refer, that he may have an impartial statement of the subject.

Verse 19. The people refused to obey] They would have the king, his manner and all; notwithstanding the solemn warning which they here receive!

Verse 20. May judge us] This appears to be a rejection of Samuel.

Go out before us] Be in every respect our head and governor.

And fight our battles.] Be the general of our armies.

Verse 21. Rehearsed them in the ears of the LORD.] He went to the altar; and, in his secret devotion, laid the whole business before God.

Verse 22. Hearken unto their voice] Let them have what they desire, and let them abide by the consequences.

Go ye every man unto his city.] It seems the elders of the people had tarried all this time with Samuel; and, when he had received his ultimate answer from God, he told them of it, and dismissed them.

On this account we may observe—1. That God did not change the government of Israel; it was the people themselves who changed.—2. That, though God permitted them to have a king, yet he did not approve of him.—3. That, notwithstanding he did not suffer them to choose the man, he ordered his servant Samuel to choose him by lot, he disposing of that lot.—4. That God never gave up the supreme government; he still was KING in Israel; and the king, so called, was only the vicegerent, or deputy, of the Lord.—5. That no king of Judah attempted to be supreme; therefore, they never made new laws, nor altered the old: which was a positive confession that God was the supreme to obey the voice of Samuel; and they said, Nay; but we will have a king over us;

20 That we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles.

21 And Samuel heard all the words of the people, and he rehearsed them in the ears of the LORD.

22 And the LORD said unto Samuel, Hearken unto their voice, and make them a king. And Samuel said unto the men of Israel, Go ye every man unto his city.

legislator.—6. That an absolute monarchy is always an evil; and is contrary to all the rights, civil and religious, of mankind; a mode of government that all people should avoid, as pregnant with evils to mankind.—7. That, although it was a sin in the Israelites to desire a king: that is, to change a constitution of which God was the author; yet, kingly government, properly understood, is a good of the first magnitude to the civil happiness of mankind.—8. That, by kingly government, properly understood, I mean such a monarchical government as that of Great Britain; where the king, the nobles, and the people, are duly mixed, each having his proper part in the government; and each preventing the other from running to excess.—9. That the three grand forms of government which have obtained among mankind; viz. monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy, have each certain advantages, without which no state can be well preserved: but they have evils, by which any state may be injured.—10. That from a proper mixture of these, the advantages of the whole may be reaped without any of their attendant evils; and that this is the British constitution; which, not merely the wisdom of our ancestors, but the providence of God, has given unto us, and of which no other state has had common sense enough to avail themselves; though they see that, because of this, the British empire is the most powerful, and the most happy, in the universe; and likely, at last, to give laws to the whole world. The manner of our king is constitutional, widely different from that of Saul, and from that of any other potentate in the four quarters of the globe. He is the father of his people; and the people feel and love him as such. He has all the power necessary to do good; they have all the liberty necessary to their political happiness.

CHAPTER IX.

Saul's lineage, and description; he is sent by his father to seek some lost asses, 1—5. Not finding them, he purposes to go and consult Samuel concerning the proper method of proceeding, 6—14. The Lord informs Samuel that he should anoint Saul king, 15, 16. Samuel invites Saul to dine with him, and informs him that the asses are found; and gives him an intimation that he is to be king, 17—21. Saul dines with Samuel: and afterward he is taken to the house-top, where both commune together, 22—27.

NOW there was a man of Benjamin, whose name was Kish, the son of Abiel, the son of Zeror, the son of Bechorath, the son of Aphiah, a Benjaminite, a mighty man of power.

2 And he had a son whose name was Saul, a choice young man, and a goodly; and there was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he: ^dfrom his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people.

3 And the asses of Kish, Saul's father, were lost. And Kish said to Saul his son, Take now one of the servants with thee, and arise, go seek the asses.

4 And he passed through mount Ephraim, and passed through the land of ^eShalisha, but they found them not: then they passed through the land of Shalim, and there they were not: and he passed through the land of the Benjamites, but they found them not.

5 And when they were come to the land of Zuph, Saul said to his servant that was with him, Come, and let us return; lest my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us.

6 And he said unto him, Behold, now, there is in this city ^fa man of God, and he is an honourable man; ^gall that he saith cometh surely to pass: now let us go thither; peradventure he can show us our way that we should go.

7 Then said Saul to his servant, But, behold, if we go, ^hwhat shall we bring the man? for the bread ⁱis spent in our vessels, and there is not a present to bring to the man of God: what ^khave we?

8 And the servant answered Saul again, and said, Behold, ^lI have here at hand the fourth part of a shekel of silver; that will I give to the man of God, to tell us our way.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IX.

Verse 1. A mighty man of power.] Literally, a strong man: this appears to be the only power he possessed; and the physical strength of the father may account for the extraordinary size of the son. See ver. 2.

Verse 2. From his shoulders and upward] It was probably from this very circumstance that he was chosen for king; for, where kings were elective, in all ancient times, great respect was paid to personal appearance.

Verse 3. The asses of Kish—were lost.] What a wonderful train of occurrences were connected in order to bring Saul to the throne of Israel! Every thing seems to go on according to the common course of events; and yet all conspired to favour the election of a man to the kingdom, who certainly did not come there by the approbation of God.

Asses grow to great perfection in the East: and at this time, as there were no horses in Judea, they were very useful; and on them kings and princes rode.

Verse 5. Were come to the land of Zuph] Calmet supposes that Saul and his servant went from Gibeah to Shalisha, in the tribe of Dan; from thence to Shaalim, near to Jerusalem; and thence, traversing the tribe of Benjamin, they purposed to return to Gibeah; but passing through the land of Zuph, in which Ramatha, the country of Samuel, was situated, they determined to call on this prophet to gain some directions from him: the whole of this circuit, he supposes, to have amounted to no more than about twenty-five leagues, or three days' journey. We do not know where the places were situated which are here mentioned: the Targum translate thus—"And he passed through the mount of the house of Ephraim, and went into the southern land, but did not meet with them. And he passed through the land of Mathbera, but they were not there; and he passed through the land of the tribe of Benjamin, but did not find them; then they came into the land where the prophet of the Lord dwelt, and Saul said to his servant."

Verse 7. There is not a present to bring to the man of God] We are not to suppose from this that the prophets took money to predict future events: Saul only refers to an inviolable custom, that no man approached a superior without a present of some kind or other. We have often seen this before: even God, who needs nothing, would not that his people should approach him with empty hands.

Verse 8. The fourth part of a shekel of silver] We find, from the preceding verse, that the bread or provisions which they had brought with them for their journey was expended; else a part of that would have been thought a suitable present: and here the fourth part of a shekel of silver, about ninepence of our money, was deemed sufficient; therefore, the present was intended more as a token of respect than as an emolument.

Verse 9. Beforetime in Israel] This passage could not have been a part of this book originally: but we have already conjectured that Samuel, or some contemporary author, wrote the memoranda, out of which a latter author compiled this book. This hypothesis, sufficiently reasonable in itself, solves all difficulties of this kind.

Was beforetime called a Seer.] The word seer, רֹאֵה roeh, occurs, for the first time, in this place: it literally signifies a person who sees; particularly preternatural sights. A seer and a prophet were the same in most cases; only with this difference, the seer was always a prophet, but the prophet was not always a seer. A seer seems to imply one who frequently met with, and saw, some symbolical representation of God. The term prophet was used a long time before this; Abraham is called a prophet, Gen. xx. 7. and the term frequently occurs in the law. Besides, the word seer does not occur before this time; but often occurs afterward down through the prophets, for more than three hundred years. See Amos vii. 12. Mic. iii. 7.

All prophets, false and true, profess to see God: see the case of Balaam, Numb. xxiv. 4, 16. and Jerem. xiv. 14. All diviners, in their enthusiastic flights, boasted that they had those things exhibited to their sight which should come to pass. There is a remarkable account in Virgil, which may serve as a specimen of the whole: the Sibyl professes to be a seer:

And Tyber rolling with a purple flood.

I think the 9th verse comes more naturally in after the 11th.

Verse 11. Young maidens going out to draw water. So far is it from being true, that young women were always kept closely shut up at home, that we find them often in the field, drawing and carrying water, as here.

Verse 12. He came to-day to the city] Though Samuel lived chiefly in Ramah, yet he had a dwelling in the country, at a place called Naioth, where it is probable there was a school of the prophets. See chap. xix. 18—24.

14 And they went up into the city: and when they were come into the city, behold, Samuel came out against them for to go up to the high place.

15 ¶ Now the LORD had told Samuel in his ear a day before Saul came, saying,

16 To-morrow about this time I will send thee a man out of the land of Benjamin; and thou shalt anoint him to be captain over my people Israel, that he may save my people out of the hand of the Philistines: for I have looked upon my people, because their cry is come unto me.

17 And when Samuel saw Saul, the LORD said unto him, Behold the man whom I spake to thee of! this same shall reign over my people.

18 Then Saul drew near to Samuel

The animals used were first sacrificed to the Lord; that is, their blood was poured out before him; and then all the people fed on the flesh. By high place, probably Samuel's altar is alone meant; which, no doubt, was raised on an eminence.

Verse 13. He doth bless the sacrifice] He alone can perform the religious rites, which are used on this occasion.

Afterward they eat that be bidden.] Among the Arabs, often a large feast is made of sacrificed camels, &c. and then the people of the vicinity are invited to come and partake of the sacrifice. This is the custom to which the allusion is made here.

Verse 14. Came out against them] Met them.

Verse 15. Now the LORD had told Samuel] How this communication was made we cannot tell.

Verse 16. Thou shalt anoint him to be captain] Not to be king, but to be נָגִיד nagid, or captain of the Lord's host. But in ancient times no king was esteemed who was not an able warrior. Plutarch informs us, that Alexander the Great esteemed the following verse the most correct, as to its sentiment, of any in the whole Iliad of Homer:—

Οὗτο γ' Ἀτρείδης ευρυκράτων Ἀγαμέμνων Ἀμφότερον βασιλεὺς τ' ἀγαθός, κρα-τερός τ' αἰχμητής.

"The king of kings, Atrides, you survey; Great in the war, and great in acts of sway." Pope.

Verse 17. Behold the man whom I spake to thee of] What an intimate communion must Samuel have held with his God! A constant familiarity seems to have existed between them.

in the gate, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, where the seer's house is.

19 And Samuel answered Saul, and said, I am the seer: go up before me unto the high place; for ye shall eat with me to-day; and to-morrow I will let thee go, and will tell thee all that is in thine heart.

20 And as for ^c thine asses, that were lost ^d three days ago, set not thy mind on them; for they are found. And on whom ^e is all the desire of Israel? Is it not on thee, and on all thy father's house?

21 And Saul answered and said, 'Am not I a Benjamite, of the ^f smallest of the tribes of Israel? and ^g my family the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? wherefore then speakest thou ^h so to me?

22 And Samuel took Saul and his servant, and brought them into the parlour, and made them sit in the chiefest place among them that were bidden, which were about thirty persons.

23 And Samuel said unto the cook,

Verse 19. I am the seer] This declaration would prepare Saul for the communications afterward made.

Verse 20. As for thine asses] Thus he shows him that he knew what was in his heart; God having previously revealed these things to Samuel.

And on whom is all the desire of Israel] Saul understood this as implying that he was chosen to be king.

Verse 21. Am not I a Benjamite] This speech of Saul is exceedingly modest: he was now becomingly humble: but who can bear elevation and prosperity? The tribe of Benjamin had not yet recovered its strength, after the ruinous war it had with the other tribes, Judg. xx.

Verse 22. Brought them into the parlour] It might as well be called kitchen; it was the place where they sat down to feast.

Verse 23. Said unto the cook] טבח tabach. here rendered cook; the singular of טבחו tabachoth, female cooks, chap. viii. 13. from the root tabach, to slay, or butcher. Probably, the butcher is here meant.

Verse 24. The shoulder, and that which was upon it] Probably the shoulder was covered Bring the portion which I gave thee, of which I said unto thee, Set it by thee.

24 And the cook took up ^k the shoulder, and that which was upon it, and set it before Saul. And Samuel said, Behold that which is ^l left! set it before thee, and eat: for unto this time hath it been kept for thee, since I said, I have invited the people. So Saul did eat with Samuel that day.

25 ¶ And when they were come down from the high place into the city, Samuel communed with Saul upon ^m the top of the house.

26 And they arose early: and it came to pass, about the spring of the day, that Samuel called Saul to the top of the house, saying, Up, that I may send thee away. And Saul arose, and they went out both of them, he and Samuel, abroad.

27 And as they were going down to the end of the city, Samuel said to Saul, Bid the servant pass on before us, (and he passed on,) but stand thou still ⁿ a while, that I may show thee the word of God.

with a part of the caul, that it might be the better roasted. The Targum has it, the shoulder and its thigh; not only the shoulder merely, but the fore-leg bone, to the knee: perhaps, the whole fore-quarter. Why was the shoulder set before Saul? Not because it was the best part, but because it was an emblem of the government to which he was now called. See Isaiah, ch. ix. 6. And the government shall be upon his shoulder.

Verse 25. Upon the top of the house] All the houses in the East were flat-roofed; on these people walked, talked, and frequently slept, for the sake of fresh and cooling air.

Verse 26. Called Saul to the top of the house] Saul had no doubt slept there all night; and now, being the break of day, "Samuel called to Saul on the top of the house, saying, Up, that I may send thee away." There was no calling him to the house-to a second time; he was sleeping there, and Samuel called him up.

Verse 27. As they were going down] So it appears that Saul arose immediately; and Samuel accompanied him out of the town, and sent the servant on, that he might show Saul the word, the counsel or design, of the Lord. What this was we shall see in the following chapter.

CHAPTER X.

Samuel anoints Saul captain of the Lord's inheritance, 1. Instructs him concerning his return home, whom he should meet, and what he should do, 2—8. Saul meets a company of prophets; the Spirit of the Lord comes upon him, and he prophesies among them, 9—13. He meets his uncle, and converses with him, 14—16. Samuel calls the people together to Mizpeh, and upbraids them for having rejected the Lord as their king, 17—19. Lots are cast to find out the proper person to be appointed king; Saul is chosen, 20—24. Samuel shows the manner of the king, and writes it in a book, 25. Saul goes to Gibeah; and certain persons refuse to acknowledge him as king, 26, 27.

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 1. Took a vial of oil] The reasons of this rite the reader will find largely stated in the note on Exod. xxix. 7. The anointing mentioned here took place in the open field. See the preceding chapter, ver. 26, 27. How simple was the ancient ceremony of consecrating a king! A prophet, or priest, poured oil upon his head, and kissed him; and said, Thus the Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance. This was the whole of the ceremony. Even in this anointing, Saul is not acknowledged as king; but simply נָגִיד nagid, a captain, one who goes before, and leads the people.

Verse 2. Rachel's sepulchre] This was nigh to Beth-lehem. See Gen. xxv. 16.

At Zelzah] If this be the name of a place, nothing is known of it.

The Hebrew נָצַל bitselsach, is translated by the Septuagint, ἀλλομενους μεγαλα, dancing greatly: now this may refer to the joy they felt and expressed on finding the asses; or, it may refer to those religious exultations, or playing on instruments of music, mentioned in the succeeding verses.

Verse 3. Three men going up to God to Beth-el] Jacob's altar was probably there still, Gen. xxviii. 19. However this might be, it was still considered, as its name implies, the house of God; and to it they were now going to offer sacrifice.

The three kids were for sacrifice; the three loaves of bread to be offered probably as a thank-offering; and the bottle, or skin full of wine, for a libation. When the blood was poured out before the Lord, then they feasted on the flesh, and on the bread; and probably had a sufficiency of the wine left for their own drinking.

Verse 4. And they will salute thee] וְשָׁלוֹם לְשָׁלוֹם ve shaalm leca leshalom, "And they will inquire of thee concerning peace," i. e. welfare. In the East, if this salutation be given; then the person or persons giving it may be reckoned friends; if the others' return it, then there is friendship on both sides. Salaam alicum, Peace to you! is the mode of compellation: Alicum essalaam, To you be peace; is the return. If you give the former, and receive not the latter, you may expect hostility. The meaning of the prophet is, when you come to the plain of Tabor, ye shall meet three men; you need not

What shall I do for my son?

3 Then shalt thou go on forward from thence, and thou shalt come to the plain of Tabor, and there shall meet thee three men going up ^h to God to Beth-el, one carrying three kids, and another carrying three loaves of bread, and another carrying a bottle of wine:

4 And they will ⁱ salute thee, and give thee two loaves of bread; which thou shalt receive of their hands.

be afraid of them, for they are friends: and they will show this friendship, not only by bidding you good speed, but by giving you two loaves of bread, a provision which you will need for the remaining part of your journey.

Verse 5. The hill of God] The Targum says, "The hill on which the ark of the Lord was." Calmet supposes it to be a height near Gibeah.

The garrison of the Philistines] Probably they kept a watch on the top of this hill; with a company of soldiers to keep the country in check.

A company of prophets] A company of scribes, says the Targum. Probably, the scholars of the prophets; for the prophets seem to have been the only accredited teachers, at particular times, in Israel: and, at this time, there does not appear to have been any other prophet besides Samuel in this quarter. Probably, the teacher of this school was not an inspired man, but one acting under the direction of Samuel. Mr. Harmer thinks that the following custom among the Mohammedans greatly illustrates this obscure place: "When the children have gone through the Koran, their relations borrow a fine horse, and furniture, and carry them about the town in procession, with the book in their hand, the rest of their companions following, and all sorts of music of the country going before." Dr. Shaw, in page 195, mentions the same custom; adding, the acclamations of their school-fellows, but taking no notice of the music. We have no reason, however, to doubt the fact on account of the doctor's silence; especially, as it relates to another part of Barbary, and is given us by those who resided some years in that country. The doctor makes no use of this circumstance relating to the education of youth in Barbary; but the account of the procession, above given, seems to be a lively comment on that ancient Jewish custom mentioned in these verses. That the word prophet often signifies sons, or scholars, of the prophets; and that prophesying often implies singing, has been already remarked: but no author, that I know of, has given any account of the nature of this procession, or its design. We are sometimes told that high places were used for sacrifices; and, in one case, music, it is certain, played before them when they went up to worship, Isa. xxx. 29. But did they not also return from sacrifice with it? We are told that music was used by the prophets, to calm and compose them, and to invite the divine influences; which is indeed very true:—but is it to the purpose? Did they go forth in this manner from their college, into the noise and interruptions of the world, to call down the prophetic impulse? But if we consider them as a company of the sons of the prophets, going in procession with songs of praise, and music playing before them, and recollect that it is usual in this day for young scholars to go in procession with acclamations and music, the whole mystery seems to be unravelled. To which may be added, that Saul was to meet them, and find himself turned into another man; into a man, perhaps, who is instantaneously made as knowing in the law of God, as the youth to whom the above honours were doing, or any of his convoy; which acquaintance with the law of God was very necessary for one who was to judge among his brethren as their king. For this reason the Jewish kings were to write out a copy of the law of God, and read it continually, that they might be perfect masters of it, Deut. xvii. 18, 20. which accomplishment some youth had gained whom Saul met with, and who was honoured with the solemnity the sacred historian speaks of, if the custom of South Barbary may be supposed to be explanatory of those of Judea.”

On the word prophet, and the general account given here, I shall introduce the following illustrations from another work:

“The word prophet generally conveys the idea of a person so far acquainted with futurity as to discern some purpose of the Divine Being, relative to his government of the natural and moral world; but which is not sufficiently matured by the economy of providence to make, as yet, its public appearance among men: and, to prophecy, is usually understood to imply the foretelling such an event, the time of its appearance, and the place of its operation; with some preceding and subsequent circumstances. But that this was the original, and only meaning of the word prophet, or prophesy, is very far from being clear. The first place the word occurs in is Gen. xx. 7. where the Lord says of Abraham to Abimelech, He is a prophet, (נביא nabi hu.) and will pray (ויתפלל yith pallel. will make earnest intercession) for thee. In the common acceptation of the word, it is certain Abraham was no prophet; but here it seems to signify a man well acquainted with the Supreme Being, capable of teaching others in divine things, and especially a man of prayer; one who had great influence with the God he worshipped, and whose intercessions were available in the behalf of others. And in this sense the original word נביא nabi, is used in several places in the Old Testament.

“It was through inattention to this meaning of the word, which appears to me to be the true, original, and ideal one, that all the commentators and critics, that I have met with, have been so sadly puzzled with that part of the history of Saul, which is related 1 Sam. x. 9–13.

and xix. 20–24. In these passages the sacred historian represents Saul, who was neither a prophet nor the son of one, associating with the prophets, and prophesying among them; to which he was led by the Spirit of the Lord which came upon him.

“That this can mean no more here than prayer and supplication to God, accompanied probably with edifying hymns of praise and thanksgiving, (for they had instruments of music, ch. x. 5.) needs, in my opinion, little proof. If Saul had prophesied in the common acceptation of the word, it is not likely that we should have been kept absolutely in the dark concerning the subject and design of his predictions; of which, by the way, not one syllable is spoken in the oracles of God. The simple fact seems to have been this: God, who had chosen this man to govern Israel, designed to teach him that the Most High alone is the fountain of power; and that, by him only, kings could reign so as to execute justice properly, and be his ministers for good to the people. To accomplish this gracious purpose, he gave him another heart, (ver. 9.) a disposition totally different from what he had ever before possessed; and taught him to pray.

“Coming among the sons of the prophets, on whom the Spirit of the Lord rested, and who were under the instruction of Samuel, (chap xix. 20.) while they worshipped God with music and supplication, Saul also was made a partaker of the same divine influence, and prophesied; i. e. made prayer and supplication among them. To see one who did not belong to the prophetic school thus incorporated with the prophets, pouring out his soul in prayer and supplication, was an unusual sight, which could not pass unnoticed, especially by those of Saul’s acquaintance who probably knew him, in times past, to have been as careless and as ungodly as themselves; (for it was only now he got that other good spirit from God, a sufficient proof that he had it not before.) These companions of his, being unacquainted with that grace which can, in a moment, influence and change the heart, would, according to an invariable custom, express their astonishment with a sneer: Is Saul also among the prophets? That is, in modern language, Can this man pray, or preach? He whose education has been the same as our own; employed in the same secular offices; and formerly companion with us in what he now affects to call folly and sin! Can such a person be among the prophets?—Yes, for God may have given him a new heart: and the Spirit of God, whose inspiration alone can give sound understanding in sacred things, may have come upon him for this very purpose, that he might announce unto you the righteousness of the Lord; and speak unto your ruined souls, to edification, and to exhortation, and to comfort.

“The history of Elijah, and the priests of Baal, mentioned in 1 Kings xviii. throws farther light on this subject. In ver. 26, it is said,

And they leaped upon the altar, and cried aloud, and cut themselves with knives, till the blood gushed out; and they prophesied, (וַיִּנְחָבוּ) yayithnabew, and they made supplication,’ until the time of the evening sacrifice.’ From the whole context it is plain that earnest importunate prayer is alone what is meant by prophesying in this text. See also 1 Cor. xiv. 3.

“And as all the prophets of God, whose principal business it was to instruct the people in the way of righteousness, were men of prayer, who were continually interceding with God in behalf of those to whom they ministered, the term נָבִיא nabi, became their proper appellation; and thus a part of their office, intercessors for the people, might have given rise to that name by which the Spirit of God thought proper, in aftertimes, to distinguish those whom he sent not only to pray for, and instruct the people, but also to predict those future events, which concerned the punishment of the incorrigible, and the comfort and exaltation of his own servants.” See a sermon which I have printed on 1 Cor. xvi. 3. entitled, “The Christian Prophet and his Work,” and see the note on Gen. xx. 7.

A psaltery נֶבֶל nebel. As the word signifies in other places a bottle, or flagon, it was probably something like the ultricularius tibia, or BAG-PIPE. It often occurs both with the Greeks and Romans, and was evidently borrowed from the Hebrews.

A pipe] חָלִיל chalil, from חָלַל chal, to make a hole, or opening: a sort of pipe, flute, hautboy, clarionet, or the like.

A harp] קִנּוֹר kinnor; a stringed instrument, similar to our harp; or that on the model of which the harp was formed. On these different instruments I shall have occasion to speak more at large when I come to the Psalms.

Verse 7. Thou do as occasion serve thee.] After God has shown thee all these signs, that thou art under his especial guidance, fear not to undertake any thing that belongs to thy office, for God is with thee.

What a number of circumstances thus precisely foretold! Does not this prove that Samuel was under the continual inspiration of the Almighty?

Verse 8. Seven days shalt thou tarry.] I will come to thee within seven days, offer sacrifices, receive directions from the Lord, and deliver them to thee. It is likely that these seven days referred to the time in which Samuel came to Saul to Gilgal, offered sacrifices, and confirmed the kingdom to him, after he had defeated the Ammonites: see chap. xi. 14, 15.

Verse 10. Behold, a company of prophets.] See on ver. 5, &c.

Verse 12. But who is their father?] The Septuagint, in its principal editions, adds, οὐκ ἐστὶν; is it not Kish? This makes the sense more complete.

Verse 13. He came to the high place.] I suppose this to mean the place where Saul's father lived; as it is evident the next verse shows him to be at home.

Verse 14. Saul's uncle.] The word דּוֹד dod, signifies a beloved one, love, a lover, friend,

But of the matter of the kingdom, whereof Samuel spake, he told him not.

17 ¶ And Samuel called the people together ² unto the LORD ¹ to Mizpeh;

18 And said unto the children of Israel, ¹ Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, I brought up Israel out of Egypt, and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all kingdoms, and of them that oppressed you :

19 ¶ And ye have this day rejected your God, who himself saved you out of all your adversities and your tribulations; and ye have said unto him, Nay, but set a king over us. Now therefore present yourselves before the LORD by your tribes, and by your thousands.

20 And when Samuel had ¹ caused all the tribes of Israel to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was taken.

21 When he had caused the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the son of Kish was taken : and when they sought him, he could not be found.

&c.; and is the same as David. It is supposed to mean uncle here; but I think it means some familiar friend.

Verse 13. I brought up Israel out of Egypt] These are similar to the upbraidings in chap. viii. 7, &c.

Verse 19. Present yourselves—by your tribes] It appears that, in order to find out the proper person who should be made their king, they must determine by lot: 1. The tribes. 2. The thousands, or grand divisions, by families. 3. The smaller divisions by families. And, 4. The individual. When the lot was cast for the tribe, Benjamin was taken; when for the thousand, the division of Matri was taken; when for the family, the family of Kish was taken; when for the individual, Saul, the son of Kish, was taken.

Verse 21. When they sought him, he could not be found.] Through modesty, or fear, he had secreted himself.

Verse 22. The LORD answered] What a continual access to God! and what condescension in his attention to all their requests!

The stuff among which he had secreted himself may mean the carts, baggage, &c. brought by the people to Mizpeh.

Verse 24. God save the king!] There is no such word here; no, nor in the whole Bible: nor is it countenanced by any of the versions.

22 Therefore they ^m inquired of the LORD farther, if the man should yet come thither. And the LORD answered, Behold, he hath hid himself among the stuff.

23 And they ran and fetched him thence: and when he stood among the people, ⁿ he was higher than any of the people from his shoulders and upward.

24 And Samuel said to all the people, See ye him ^o whom the LORD hath chosen, that there is none like him among all the people? And all the people shouted, and said, ^p God ^r save the king!

25 Then Samuel told the people ^s the manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the LORD. And Samuel sent all the people away, every man to his house.

26 ¶ And Saul also went home ^t to Gibeah; and there went with him a band of men, whose hearts God had touched.

27 ^u But the ^v children of Belial said, How shall this man save us? And they despised him, ^w and brought him no presents. But ^x he held his peace.

¶ See Deut. 17. 14, &c. Ch. 8. 11. — Judg. 20. 14. Ch. 11. 4. — Ch. 11. 12. — Deut. 13. 13. — 2 Sam. 8. 2. 1 Kings 4. 21. & 10. 25. 2 Chron. 17. 5. Psa. 72. 10. Matt. 2. 11. — Or, he was as though he had been deaf.

The words which we thus translate here, and elsewhere, are simply יְיָ חַי הַמֶּלֶךְ yechi ham-melech, "May the king live;" and so all the versions, (the Targum excepted,) which says, May the king prosper!

Verse 25. The manner of the kingdom] It is the same word as in chap. viii. 9; and doubtless the same thing is implied as is there related. But possibly there was some kind of compact, or covenant, between them and Saul; and this was the thing that was written in a book, and laid up before the Lord, probably near the ark.

Verse 26. A band of men] Not a military band, as I imagine, but some select friends, or companions, who were personally attached to him. Others think, that all the men fit to bear arms are intended: but this seems inconsistent with the life that Saul led for some time afterward; for he appears to have gone into his agricultural concerns, and waited for a call from the divine providence. See the next chap. ver. 5.

Verse 27. Brought him no presents.] They gave him no proofs that they acknowledged either the divine appointment, or his authority. The Arab chiefs are to this day, when on a march, or excursion of any kind, supplied with every necessary by the free-will offerings, or presents, of the people, in the villages or places where they encamp. Saul was now a public character, and had a right to support from the public. These sons of Belial refused to bear their part; they brought him no presents. He marked it; but, at present, held his peace: he was as if he were deaf; so says the text. He was prudent, and did not immediately assume all the consequence to which his office entitled him. It is probable, however, that tribute is meant by the word present. The people, in general, finding they had now a king, took it for granted that they must pay tribute or taxes to him. This was a part of the manner of the king which Samuel had shown them; the great majority had done so, but certain refractory people refused to pay any thing, on the pretence that such a person as Saul could not be a deliverer of Israel. How, say they, shall this man save us?

CHAPTER XI.

Nahash, king of the Ammonites, besieges Jabesh-gilead; and proposes to its inhabitants the most degrading conditions of peace, 1, 2. They apply to their brethren for help, 3, 4. Saul hears of their distress: takes a yoke of oxen, hews them in pieces, and sends them throughout the coasts of Israel, with the threat that all who did not come to his standard, should have his cattle served in like manner; in consequence of which, he is soon at the head of an army of three hundred and thirty thousand men, 5-8. He sends to Jabesh-gilead, and promises help, 9, 10. Saul attacks the Ammonites next morning, and gives them a total overthrow, 11. The people are greatly encouraged, and propose to put to death those who were opposed to Saul's government; but this he prevents, 12, 13. Samuel leads the people to Gilgal; they offer sacrifices, and renew the kingdom to Saul, 14, 15.

THEN ^a Nahash the Ammonite came up, and encamped against ^b Jabesh-gilead: and all the men of Jabesh said unto Nahash, ^c Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee.

2 And Nahash the Ammonite answered them, On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thrust out all your right eyes, and lay it for ^d a reproach upon all Israel.

3 And the elders of Jabesh said unto him, ^e Give us seven days' respite, that

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. Nahash the Ammonite] In the Vulgate this chapter begins thus: Et factum est quasi post mensem, "And it came to pass about a month after." This addition appears also in the principal copies of the Septuagint; though it is wanting in the Complutensian edition, both in the Greek and Latin, and is not acknowledged by any of the Oriental versions. But it is in Josephus; and probably was inserted from him into some copies of the Septuagint, and thence into the Vulgate. It appears to be of very little authority.

We know little about Nahash; there was a king of this name among the Ammonites in the time of David, 2 Sam. x. 2. but probably not the same person. Nahash might have been a common name of the Ammonitish kings.

Make a covenant with us] They found they were in no condition to risk a war; and they wish to have peace, and desire to know his conditions.

Verse 2. I may thrust out all your right eyes] This cruel condition would serve at once as a badge of their slavery; and a means of incapacitating them from being effective warriors. Theodoret observes, "He who opposes his shield to the enemy with his left hand, thereby hides his left eye, and looks at his enemy with his right eye: he, therefore, who plucks out that right eye, makes men useless in war." Josephus gives the same reason.

Verse 3. Give us seven days' respite] Promises of this kind are frequently made by besieged places; "We will surrender if not relieved in so many days;" and such conditions are generally received by the besiegers.

Verse 4. Then came the messengers to Gibeah] It does not appear that the people of Jabesh-gilead knew any thing of Saul's appointment to the kingdom: for the message is not directed to him, but to the people.

The people lifted up their voices, and wept.] They saw no hope of deliverance; and they expected that their reproach would be laid on all Israel.

Verse 5. Saul came after the herd] He had been bred up to an agricultural life: and, after his consecration, he returned to it, waiting for a call of divine providence, which he considered he had now received in the message from Jabesh-gilead.

It has often been remarked, that mighty kings, and accomplished generals, have been chosen from among those who were engaged in agricultural concerns. In these observations one fact is lost sight of: viz. That in ancient times, agriculture was the only employment. Trade and commerce were scarcely known: therefore, all descriptions of official dignities must be chosen out of this class; there was none other to choose them from. We need not wonder at these words of the poet:—

Pascabatque suas ipse senator, oves.*

The consul, having now laid aside his plough, gives laws to the people;

And the senator himself feeds his own sheep.

Verse 6. The Spirit of God came upon Saul] He felt himself strongly excited to attempt the relief of his brethren.

And his anger was kindled greatly.] I believe this means no more than that his courage was greatly excited: he felt himself strong for fight, and confident of success.

Verse 7. He took a yoke of oxen] The sending the pieces of the oxen was an act similar to that of the Levite, Judg. xix. 29. where see the note. And both customs are similar to the sending about of the bloody cross, to call the clans to battle, practised by the ancient Highlanders of Scotland. See end of this chapter.

Verse 8. The children of Israel were three hundred thousand, and the men of Judah thirty thousand.] This was a vast army; but the Septuagint make it even more—"All the men of Israel were εξακοσιαι χιλιαδες, six hundred thousand; and the men of Judah, εβδομηκοντα χιλιαδες, seventy thousand. Josephus goes yet higher with the number of the Israelites: "He found the number of those whom he had gathered together to be εβδομηκοντα μυριαδες, SEVEN hundred thousand." Those of the tribe of Judah he makes seventy thousand, with the Septuagint. These numbers are not all right; and I suspect even the Hebrew text to be exaggerated, by the mistake or design of some ancient scribe.

Verse 10. To-morrow we will come out unto you] They concealed the information they had received of Saul's promised assistance. They did come out unto them; but it was in a different manner to what the Ammonites expected.

11 And it was so on the morrow, that ^r Saul put the people ^s in three companies; and they came into the midst of the host in the morning watch, and slew the Ammonites until the heat of the day: and it came to pass, that they which remained were scattered, so that two of them were not left together.

12 ¶ And the people said unto Samuel, ^t Who is he that said, Shall Saul reign over us? ^u bring the men, that we may put them to death.

13 And Saul said, ^v There shall not a man be put to death this day: for to-day ^w the LORD hath wrought salvation in Israel.

14 ¶ Then said Samuel to the people, Come, and let us go ^x to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there.

15 And all the people went to Gilgal; and there they made Saul king ^y before the LORD in Gilgal; and ^z there they sacrificed sacrifices of peace-offerings before the LORD; and there Saul, and all the men of Israel, rejoiced greatly.

Verse 11. Put the people in three companies] Intending to attack the Ammonites in three different points; and to give his own men more room to act.

In the morning watch] He probably began his march in the evening, passed Jordan in the night, and reached the camp of the Ammonites by day break.

That two of them were not left together.] This proves that the rout was complete.

Verse 12. Who is he that said, Shall Saul reign] Now, flushed with victory, and proud of their leader, they wish to give him a proof of their attachment, by slaying, even in cool blood, the persons who were at first averse from his being intrusted with the supreme power! The common soldier is scarcely ever inspired by his victory to acts of magnanimity; he has shed blood, he wishes to shed more!

Verse 13. There shall not a man be put to death] This was as much to Saul's credit, as the lately proposed measure was to the discredit of his soldiers.

Verse 14. Renew the kingdom] The unction of Saul, in the first instance, was a very private act; and, his being appointed to be king, was not known to the people in general. He had now shown himself worthy to command the people; and Samuel takes advantage of this circumstance to gain the general consent in his favour. Josephus says, that Saul was anointed a second time at this convocation.

Verse 15. There they made Saul king] It is likely, from these words, that Saul was anointed a second time: he was now publicly acknowledged, and there was no gainsayer. Thus far Saul acted well, and the kingdom seemed to be confirmed in his hand; but soon, through imprudence, he lost it.

ON the custom referred to in ver. 7. I am favoured with the following observations by a learned correspondent:

"It is considered that the authenticity of records respecting a peculiar people cannot be better illustrated, or the fidelity of the historian more clearly ascertained, than by proving that the manners and customs recorded are in unison with, or bear a resemblance to, the manners and customs of ancient nations of the same antiquity; or, what may be more correct, in a similar state of improvement; and the records of such rites and customs may possibly acquire an additional mark of authenticity, when the similarity is not so exact as to admit a presumption, that the customs of one nation were merely copied from the other.

"Mr. Walter Scott, in the third canto of the Lady of the Lake, describes the rites, incantations, and imprecations, used prior to the fiery cross being circulated, to summon the rough warriors of ancient times to the service of their chief; and, in the first note of this canto, he alludes to this ancient custom, which, in comparatively modern times, has been practised in Scotland; and proves that a similar punishment of death or destruction of the houses for disobeying the summons, was inflicted by the ancient Scandinavians, as recorded by Olaus Magnus, in his History of the Goths. A custom, still more in point than the one cited, may be found to have existed in a more ancient nation; whose history is supposed the most, if not the only, authentic narrative of deeds of ancient times; and which also records the sanguinary manners of uncultivated nations. See the preceding chapter; eight first verses. The similarity of the custom is to be found in the seventh verse: with the Highlanders, a goat was slain; with the Israelites, an ox. The exhibition of a cross, stained with the blood of the sacrificed animal, was the summons of the former, while part of the animal was the mandate of the latter. Disobedience in the one nation was punished with the death of the parties; and burning of their dwellings in the other; the punishment more simple, and more allusive to the sacrificed emblem, the forfeiture or destruction of their oxen. It is not difficult to judge whether the comparison be correct.

"The first verses record the sanguinary practice of ancient times; which, to many, appear merely as the gratification of revenge, or as proofs of victory; yet, when it is considered that the right eye must chiefly aid the warrior in aiming at his adversary, whether the weapon be of ancient or modern warfare; here arises a military reason corroborative of the truth of history for the deprivation, and in some degree lessening the cruelty of the mutilation, which would be increased if it were caused by revenge or wantonness; though Nahash declares it to be a reproach upon all Israel."

CHAPTER XII.

Samuel, grown old, testifies his integrity before the people; which they confirm, 1—5. He reproves them for their ingratitude and disobedience; and gives a summary of the history of their fathers, 6—12. He exhorts them to future obedience; and calls for a sign from heaven to confirm his authority, and to show them their disobedience: God sends an extraordinary thunder and rain, 13—16. He warns them against idolatry; and exhorts to obedience, and promises to intercede for them, 20—23. Sums up their duty, and concludes with a solemn warning, 24, 25.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XII.

Verse 1. And Samuel said] It is very likely that it was at this public meeting that Samuel delivered the following address: no other time seems to be given for it; and this is the most proper that could be chosen.

Verse 2. My sons are with you] It is generally agreed that these words intimate that Samuel had deprived them of their public employ; and reduced them to a level with the common people.

Have walked before you from my childhood] He had been a long, steady, and immaculate servant of the public.

Verse 3. Witness against me] Did ever a minister of state, in any part of the world, resign his office with so much self-consciousness of integrity, backed with the universal approbation of the public? No man was oppressed under his government; no man defrauded! He had accumulated no riches for himself; he had procured none for his friends: nor had one needy dependant been provided for out of the public purse. He might have pardoned his own sons, who had acted improperly, before he quitted the government; but, though he was the most tender of parents, he would not; but abandoned them to national justice, with only a tacit solicitation of mercy: Behold, my sons are with you! They have acted improperly; I deprived them of their authority; they are amenable to you for their past conduct: I have walked uprightly and disinterestedly among you; they have not followed my steps,—but can you forgive them for their father's sake? Verse 7. Now therefore stand still] I have arraigned myself before God and you: I now arraign you before God.

gum has Samson. Many commentators are of this opinion: but Calmet thinks that Jair is intended, who judged Israel twenty-three years, Judg. x. 3.

Instead of Samuel, the Syriac and Arabic have Samson: and it is most natural to suppose that Samuel does not mention himself in this place. St. Paul's authority confirms these alterations: the time would fail me, said he, to tell of Gideon, of Barak, of Samson, of Jephthah, of David, &c.

Verse 12. When ye saw that Nahash] This was not the first time they had demanded a king; see chap. viii. 5. But at the crisis mentioned here, they became more importunate; and it was in consequence of this that the kingdom was a second time confirmed to Saul. Saul was elected at Mizpeh; he was confirmed at Gilgal.

Verse 14. If ye will fear the LORD, &c.] On condition that ye rebel no more, God will take you and your king under his merciful protection; and he and his kingdom shall be confirmed and continued.

18 [¶] So Samuel called unto the LORD; and the LORD sent thunder and rain that day: and ^xall the people greatly feared the LORD and Samuel.

19 And all the people said unto Samuel, ^yPray for thy servants unto the LORD thy God, that we die not: for we have added unto all our sins this evil, to ask us a king.

Verse 16. This great thing] This unusual occurrence.

Verse 17. Is it not wheat-harvest to-day?] That is, this is the time of wheat-harvest. According to St. Jerom, who spent several years in the promised land, this harvest commenced about the end of June, or beginning of July; in which he says he never saw rain in Judea. Nunquam enim in fine mensis Junii, sive in mense Julio, in his provinciis, maximeque in Judea, pluvias vidimus. HIER. in Amos iv. 7. where he refers to this very history. What occurred now, hardly ever occurs there but in the winter months.

Verse 18. The LORD sent thunder and rain that day] This was totally unusual; and, as it came at the call of Samuel, was a most evident miracle.

Greatly feared the LORD] They dreaded his terrible majesty: and they feared Samuel, perceiving that he had so much power with God.

Verse 19. Pray for thy servants—that we die not] As they knew they had rebelled against God, they saw that they had every thing to fear from his justice and power.

We have added unto all our sins this evil] It is no sin to have a king; a good king is one of the greatest blessings of God's providence: but it is a sin to put a man in the place of God. Is it not strange that they did not now attempt to repair their fault! They might have done it, but they did not: they acknowledged their sin, but did not put it away. This is the general way of mankind. "God help us, we are all sinners!" is the general language of all people: but, though to be a sinner is to be in the most solemn and awful circumstances; yet they are contented to bear the character, heedless of the consequences!

Verse 20. Ye have done all this wickedness] That is, although ye have done all this wicked-

20 [¶] And Samuel said unto the people, Fear not: ye have done all this wickedness; yet turn not aside from following the LORD, but serve the LORD with all your heart;

ness: what was past God would pass by, provided they would be obedient in future.

Verse 21. After vain things] That is, idols; which he calls here הוהו ha-tohu, the same expression found Gen. i. 2. The earth was tohu tohu; it was waste, empty, and formless: so idols; they are confusion, and things of nought; for an idol is nothing in the world.

Verse 22. The LORD will not forsake his people] He will not, as yet, cast you off, though you have deserved it. His purpose, in preserving them in their land and religion, was not yet accomplished. It was not, however, for their sake that he would not cast them off, but for his own great name's sake. He drew his reasons from himself.

Verse 23. God forbid that I should sin] They had earnestly begged him, ver. 19. to pray to God for them, that they might not die; and he tells them that he should consider himself a sinner, should he cease to be their intercessor.

But I will teach you the good and the right way] I will show you, as long as I am with you, what true religion is: it is the way to happiness and heaven. It is right, there is no crookedness in it: it is good, there is no evil in it.

Verse 24. Only fear the LORD] Know, respect, and reverence him.

Serve him] Consider him your Lord and Master; consider yourselves his servants.

In truth] Be ever honest, ever sincere:—with all your heart: have every affection engaged in the work of obedience; act not merely from a principle of duty, but also from a pious, affectionate sense of obligation. Act toward your God as an affectionate child should act toward a tender and loving parent.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

Verse 1. Saul reigned one year] A great deal of learned labour has been employed and lost on this verse, to reconcile it to propriety and common sense. I shall not recount the meanings put on it. I think this clause belongs to the preceding chapter; either as a part of the whole, or a chronological note added afterward. As if the writer had said, These things (related in chap. xii.) took place in the first year of Saul's reign: and then he proceeds in the next place to tell us what took place in the second year; the two most remarkable years of Saul's reign. In the first, he is appointed, anointed, and twice confirmed—viz. at Mizpeh, and at Gilgal. In the second, Israel is brought into the lowest state of degradation by the Philistines; Saul acts unconstitutionally, and is rejected from being king. These things were worthy of an especial chronological note.

And when he had reigned] This should begin the chapter, and be read thus: "And when Saul had reigned two years over Israel, he chose him three thousand," &c. The Septuagint has left the clause out of the text entirely, and begins the chapter thus: "And Saul chose to himself three thousand men out of the men of Israel."

Verse 2. Two thousand were with Saul] Saul, no doubt, meditated the redemption of his

And Saul blew the trumpet throughout all the land, saying, Let the Hebrews hear.

4 And all Israel heard say that Saul had smitten a garrison of the Philistines, and that Israel also ^e was had in abomination with the Philistines. And the people were called together after Saul to Gilgal.

5 ¶ And the Philistines gathered themselves together to fight with Israel, thirty thousand chariots, and six thousand horsemen, and people as the sand which is on the seashore in multitude;

country from the Philistines; and, having chosen three thousand men, he thought best to divide them into companies, and send one against the Philistine garrison at Michmash; another, against that at Beth-el; and the third, against that at Gibeah: he perhaps hoped, by surprising these garrisons, to get swords and spears for his men; of which we find, (ver. 22.) they were entirely destitute.

Verse 3. Jonathan smote] He appears to have taken this garrison by surprise; for his men had no arms for a regular battle, or taking the place by storm. This is the first place in which this brave and excellent man appears; a man who bears one of the most amiable characters in the Bible.

Let the Hebrews hear.] Probably this means the people who dwell beyond Jordan; who might very naturally be termed here העבריים ha-abarim, from עבר abar, "he passed over," those who are beyond the river Jordan: as Abraham was called עברי Abery, because he dwelt beyond the river Euphrates.

Verse 4. The people were called together] The smiting of this garrison was the commencement of a war; and, in effect, the shaking off of the Philistinian yoke; and now the people found that they must stand together, and fight for their lives.

Verse 5. Thirty thousand chariots, and six and they came up, and pitched in Michmash, eastward from Beth-aven.

6 ¶ When the men of Israel saw that they were in a strait, (for the people were distressed,) then the people did hide themselves in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in high places, and in pits.

7 And some of the Hebrews went over Jordan to the land of Gad and Gilead. As for Saul, he was yet in Gilgal, and all the people followed him trembling.

8 ¶ And he tarried seven days, according to the set time that Samuel had appointed: but Samuel came not to Gilgal; and the people were scattered from him.

9 And Saul said, Bring hither a burnt-offering to me, and peace-offerings. And he offered the burnt-offering.

10 And it came to pass, that as soon

¶ Judg. 6. 2.—g Heb. trembled after him.—h Ch. 10. 8.—i Heb. bless him.

thousand horsemen] There is no proportion here between the chariots and the cavalry. The largest armies ever brought into the field, even by mighty emperors, never were furnished with thirty thousand chariots.

I believe שלשים shaloshim, "THIRTY," to be a false reading for שלוש shalosh, "THREE." The Syriac has ܬܠܬܬܐ telotho alpheyn; and the Arabic, ثلاثه thalathato alf; both signifying THREE thousand: and this was a fair proportion to the horsemen. This is most likely to be the true reading.

Verse 6. The people did hide themselves] They, being few in number, and totally unarmed as to swords and spears, were terrified at the very numerous and well appointed army of the Philistines. Judea was full of rocks, caves, thickets, &c. where people might shelter themselves from their enemies. While some hid themselves, others fled beyond Jordan; and those who did cleave to Saul followed him trembling.

Verse 8. He tarried seven days, according to the set time] Samuel, in the beginning, had told Saul to wait seven days; and he would come to him, and show him what to do, chap. x. 8. What is here said cannot be understood of that appointment, but of a different one. Samuel had at this time promised to come to him within seven days; and he kept his word, for we find him there before the day was ended: but, as Saul found he did not come at the beginning of the seventh day, he became impatient, took the whole business into his own hand, and acted the parts of prophet, priest, and king; and thus he attempted a most essential change in the Israelitish constitution. In it the king, the prophet, and the priest, are, in their nature, perfectly distinct. What such a rash person might have done, if he had not been deprived of his authority, who can tell? But his as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, behold, Samuel came; and Saul went out to meet him, that he might salute him.

11 ¶ And Samuel said, What hast thou done? And Saul said, Because I saw that the people were scattered from me, and that thou camest not within the days appointed, and that the Philistines gathered themselves together at Michmash;

12 Therefore said I, The Philistines will come down now upon me to Gilgal, and I have not made supplication unto the LORD: I forced myself; therefore, and offered a burnt-offering.

13 And Samuel said to Saul, Thou hast done foolishly: thou hast not kept the commandment of the LORD thy God, which he commanded thee: for now would the LORD have established thy kingdom upon Israel for ever.

conduct on this occasion sufficiently justifies that deprivation. That he was a rash and headstrong man, is also proved by his senseless adoration of the people about food, chap. xiv. 24; and his unfeeling resolution to put the brave Jonathan, his own son, to death, because he had unwittingly acted contrary to this adoration, ver. 44. Saul appears to have been a brave and honest man; but he had few of those qualities which are proper for a king, or the governor of a people.

Verse 9. And he offered the burnt-offering.] This was most perfectly unconstitutional: he had no authority to offer, or cause to be offered, any of the Lord's sacrifices.

Verse 10. Behold, Samuel came] Samuel was punctual to his appointment; one hour longer of delay would have prevented every evil, and by it no good would have been lost. How often are the effects of precipitation fatal!

Verse 11. And Saul said] Here he offers three excuses for his conduct:—1. The people were fast leaving his standard.—Samuel did not come at the time, למדא lemad. At the very commencement of the time he did not come, but within that time he did come.—3. The Philistines were coming fast upon him. Saul should have waited out the time; and, at all events, he should not have gone contrary to the counsel of the Lord.

Verse 12. I forced myself] It was with great reluctance that I did what I did. In all this Saul was sincere: but he was rash, and regardless of the precept of the Lord; which precept or command he most evidently had received, ver. 13. And one part of this precept was, that the Lord should tell him what he should do. Without this information, in an affair under the immediate cognizance of God, he should have taken no step.

Verse 14. The LORD hath sought him a man after his own heart] That this man was David, is sufficiently clear from the sequel. But, in what sense was he a man after God's own heart? Answer.—In his strict attention to the law and worship of God; in his admitting, in the whole of his conduct, that God was King in Israel, and that he himself was but his vicegerent; in never attempting to alter any of those laws, or in the least change the Israelitish constitution. In all his public official conduct he acted according to the divine mind, and fulfilled the will of his Maker: thus was he a man after God's own heart. In reference to his private, or personal moral conduct, the word is never used. This is the sense alone in which the word is used here and elsewhere; and it is unfair and wicked to put another meaning on it, in order to ridicule the revelation of God, as certain infidels have done.

Verse 15. And Samuel arose] Though David, in the divine purpose, is appointed to be captain over the people, yet Saul is not to be removed from the government during his life; Samuel, therefore, accompanies him to Gibeah, to give him the requisite help in this conjuncture.

About six hundred men.] The whole of the Israelitish army at this time; and not one sword or spear among them!

Verse 17. The spoilers came out] The Philistines, finding that the Israelites durst not hazard a battle, divided their army into three bands; and sent them in three different directions, to pillage and destroy the country. Jonathan profited by this circumstance, and attacked the remains of the army at Michmash; as we shall see in the succeeding chapter.

Verse 19. Now there was no smith found] company turned to the way of the border that looketh to the valley of ^v Zeboim, toward the wilderness.

19 ¶ Now ^w there was no smith found throughout all the land of Israel: for the Philistines said, Lest the Hebrews make them swords or spears:

20 But all the Israelites went down to the Philistines, to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his axe, and his mattock.

21 Yet they had ^x a file for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks, and for the axes, and ^y to sharpen the goads.

22 So it came to pass, in the day of battle, that ^z there was neither sword nor spear found in the hand of any of the people that were with Saul and Jonathan: but with Saul and with Jonathan his son was there found.

23 ^a And the ^b garrison of the Philistines went out to the passage of Michmash.

^v Neh. 11. 34.—^w See 2 Kings 24. 14. Jer. 24. 1.—^x Heb. a file with mouths.—^y Heb. to set.—^z So Judg. 5. 8.—^a Ch. 14. 1, 4.—^b Or, standing camp.

It is very likely that, in the former wars, the Philistines carried away all the smiths from Israel, as Porsenna did in the peace which he granted to the Romans; not permitting any iron to be forged except for the purposes of agriculture: Ne ferro, nisi in agriculturâ uterentur. The Chaldeans did the same to the Jews, in the time of Nebuchadnezzar: they carried away all the artificers, 2 Kings xxiv. 14. Jer. xxiv. lxxix. 2. And in the same manner did Cyrus treat the Lydians. Herod. lib. i. c. 145. See several examples in Calmet.

Verse 20. But all the Israelites went down to the Philistines] We find from this that they did not grant them as much as Porsenna did to the Romans; he permitted the people to manufacture the implements of husbandry.

Verse 21. Yet they had a file] The Hebrew פֶּסֶל petsirah, from פָּסַר patsar, to rub hard, is translated very differently by the versions, and by critics. Our translation may be as likely as any: they permitted them the use of files, (I believe the word means grindstone,) to restore the blunted edges of their tridents, axes, and goads.

Verse 22. In the day of battle—there was neither sword nor spear] But if the Israelites enjoyed such profound peace, and undisturbed dominion under Samuel, how is it that they were totally destitute of arms, a state which argues the lowest circumstances of oppression and vassalage? In answer to this we may observe, that the bow and the sling were the principal arms of the Israelites; for these they needed no smith: the most barbarous nations, who have never seen iron, have nevertheless bows and arrows; the arrow heads generally made of flint. Arrows of this kind are found among the inhabitants of the South-sea Islands; and even axes, and different implements of war, all made of stone, cut and polished by stone, are frequent among them. The arms of the aboriginal Irish have been of this kind: I have frequently seen heads of axes and arrows of stone, which have been dug up out of the ground; and formed with considerable taste and elegance. The former, the common people term thunderbolts; the latter, elf-stones.

Now, it is possible that the Israelites had still bows and arrows; these they could have without the smith: and it is as likely that they had slings; and for these they needed none. But then these were missiles; if they came into close fight, they would avail them nothing: for attacks of this kind they would require swords and spears; of these none were found but with Saul and Jonathan.

We see, in this chapter, Israel brought to as low a state as they were under Eli; when they were totally discomfited, their priests slain, their ark taken, and the judge dead. After that they rose by the strong hand of God; and in this way they are now to rise, principally by means of David, whose history will soon commence.

CHAPTER XIV.

Jonathan and his armour-bearer purpose to attack a garrison of the Philistines, 1. Saul and his army, with Ahiah the priest, tarry in Gibeah, 2, 3. Jonathan plans his attack of the Philistine garrison, 4—10. He and his armour-bearer climb over a rock; attack and rout the garrison, 11—15. Saul and his company, seeing confusion in the Philistine host, come out against them; as did the men who had hidden themselves; and the Philistines are defeated, 16—23. Saul lays every man under a curse who shall eat food until the evening; in consequence of which the people are sorely distressed, 24—26. Jonathan, not hearing the adjuration, eats a little honey, which he found on the ground, 27—30. The Philistines being defeated, the people seize on the spoil, and begin to eat flesh without previously bleeding the animals, which Saul endeavours to prevent, 31—34. He builds an altar there, 35. Inquires of the Lord if he may pursue the Philistines by night, but receives no answer, 36, 37. Attributes this to some sin committed by some unknown person; makes inquiry by lot; and finds that Jonathan had tasted the honey, on which he purposes to put him to death, 38—44. The people interpose, and rescue Jonathan, 45. Saul fights against the Moabites, Ammonites, and Amalekites, 46—48. An account of the family of Saul, 49—52.

NOW ^a it came to pass upon a day, that Jonathan the son of Saul said unto the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over to the Philistines' garrison, that is on the other side. But he told not his father.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIV.

Verse 1. Come, and let us go over] This action of Jonathan was totally contrary to the laws of war; no military operation should be undertaken without the knowledge and command of the general. But it is likely that he was led to this by a divine influence.

The armour-bearer is the origin of what we call esquire, from escu, old French, a shield: armiger is the Latin, from arma, weapons, and gero, I bear. In the times of chivalry, the armiger, or esquire, was the servant of the knight, who went after him, and carried his lance, shield, &c. It is now, strange to tell, a title of honour!

Verse 2. Under a pomegranate tree] Under Rimmon, which not only signifies a pomegranate tree, but also a strong rock, in which six hundred Benjamites took shelter, Judg. xx. 45. Probably it was in this very rock that Saul and his six hundred men now lay hidden.

which Jonathan sought to go over ^f unto the Philistines' garrison, there was a sharp rock on the one side, and a sharp rock on the other side: and the name of the one was Bozez, and the name of the other Seneh.

5 The ^g fore-front of the one was situate northward over against Michmash, and the other southward over against Gibeah.

6 And Jonathan said to the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over unto the garrison of these uncircumcised: it may be that the LORD will work for us: for there is no restraint to the LORD, ^h to save by many or by few.

7 And his armour-bearer said unto

^f Ch. 13. 23.—g Heb. tooth.—h Judg. 7. 4, 7. 2 Chron. 14. 11. 1 Mac. 3. 18.

Verse 3. Ahiah, the son of Ahitub] Phinehas, son of Eli the high priest, had two sons, Ahitub and Ichabod; the latter was born when the ark was taken, and his mother died immediately after. Ahiah is also called Ahimelech, chap. xxii. 9.

Wearing an ephod] That is, performing the functions of the high priest. This man does not appear to have been with Saul, when he offered the sacrifices, chap. xiii. 9, &c.

Verse 4. The name of the one was Bozez] Slippery; and the name of the other Seneh, treading down. Targum.

Verse 6. Let us go over] Moved, doubtless, by a divine impulse.

There is no restraint to the LORD] This is a fine sentiment; and where there is a promise of defence and support, the weakest, in the face of the strongest enemy, may rely on it with the utmost confidence.

Verse 7. Behold, I am with thee] I shall 8 Then said Jonathan, Behold, we will pass over unto these men, and we will discover ourselves unto them.

9 If they say thus unto us, ¹Tarry until we come to you; then we will stand still in our place, and will not go up unto them.

10 But if they say thus, Come up unto us; then we will go up: for ^kthe LORD hath delivered them into our hand: and ^lthis shall be a sign unto us.

11 And both of them discovered themselves unto the garrison of the Philistines: and the Philistines said, Behold, the Hebrews come forth out of the holes where they had hid themselves.

12 And the men of the garrison answered Jonathan and his armour-bearer, and said, Come up to us, and we will show you a thing. And Jonathan said unto his armour-bearer, Come up after me: for the LORD hath delivered them into the hand of Israel.

13 And Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet, and his armour-bearer after him; and they fell before Jonathan; and his armour-bearer slew after him.

14 And that first slaughter, which Jonathan and his armour-bearer made, was about twenty men, within as it were ^ma half-acre of land, which a yoke of oxen might plough.

15 ¶ And ⁿthere was trembling in the host, in the field, and among all the people: the garrison, and ^othe spoilers, they also trembled, and the earth quaked: so it was ^pa ^rvery great trembling.

16 And the watchmen of Saul in Gibeah of Benjamin looked; and, behold, the multitude melted away, and they ^swent on beating down one another.

17 ¶ Then said Saul unto the people that were with him, Number now, and see who is gone from us. And when they had numbered, behold, Jonathan and his armour-bearer were not there.

18 And Saul said unto Ahiah, Bring hither the ark of God. For the ark of God was at that time with the children of Israel.

19 And it came to pass, while Saul accompany thee whithersoever thou goest; and share all thy dangers.

Verse 9. If they say thus unto us] Jonathan had no doubt asked this as a sign from God; exactly as Eliezer, the servant of Abraham, did, Gen. xxiv. 12.

Verse 12. Come up to us, and we will show you a thing] This was the favourable sign which Jonathan had requested. The Philistines seem to have meant, Come, and we will show you how well fortified we are; and how able to quell all the attacks of your countrymen.

Verse 13. Jonathan climbed up] It seems he had a part of the rock still to get over. When he got over he began to slay the guards, which were about twenty in number: these were a sort of outpost, or advanced guard to the garrison.

Slew after him] Jonathan knocked them down, and the armour-bearer despatched them. This seems to be the meaning.

Verse 14. A half-acre of land] The ancients measured land by the quantum which a yoke of oxen could plough in a day. The original is obscure, and is variously understood. It is probably a proverbial expression for a very small space.

Verse 15. There was trembling in the host] They were terrified and panic-struck; the people in general round about; those in the garrison, the spoilers, and the whole country, were struck with terror; the commotion was universal, and most extraordinary. The trembling of the earth is probably not to be taken literally, but as a metaphor for a great commotion in the country; though God might have interposed in an extraordinary manner, and produced a real earthquake; but their being panic-struck was sufficient to produce all the requisite confusion and dismay.

Verse 16. The watchmen of Saul] Those who were sent out as scouts to observe the motions of the army.

Melted away] There was no order in the Philistinian camp; and the people were dispersing in all directions. The Vulgate has, Ei ecce multitudo prostrata, "And behold the multitude were prostrate;" many lay dead upon the field, partly by the sword of Jonathan and his armour-bearer, and partly by the swords of each other, ver. 20.

Verse 17. Number now] Saul perceived that the Philistines were routed, but could not tell by what means; supposing that it must be by some of his own troops, he called a muster to see who and how many were absent.

Verse 18. Bring hither the ark of God] He wished to inquire what use he should make of the present favourable circumstances; and to proceed in the business as God should direct.

Verse 19. While Saul talked unto the priest] Before he had made an end of consulting him, the increasing noise of the panic-struck Philistines called his attention: and, finding there was no time to lose, he immediately collected his men and fell on them.

' talked unto the priest, that the "noise that was in the host of the Philistines went on and increased: and Saul said unto the priest, Withdraw thine hand.

20 And Saul and all the people that were with him ^v assembled themselves, and they came to the battle; and, behold, ^w every man's sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture.

21 Moreover, the Hebrews that were with the Philistines before that time, which went up with them into the camp from the country round about, even they also turned to be with the Israelites that were with Saul and Jonathan.

22 Likewise all the men of Israel which ^x had hid themselves in mount Ephraim, when they heard that the Philistines fled, even they also followed hard after them in battle.

23 ^y So the LORD saved Israel that day: and the battle passed over ^z unto Beth-aven.

24 [†] And the men of Israel were distressed that day; for Saul had ^a adjured the people, saying, Cursed be the man that eateth any food until evening, that I may be avenged on mine enemies. So none of the people tasted any food.

25 ^b And all they of the land came to a wood; and there was ^c honey upon the ground.

26 And when the people were come into the wood, behold, the honey dropped; but no man put his hand to his mouth: for the people feared the oath.

27 But Jonathan heard not when his father charged the people with the oath: wherefore he put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipped it in a honeycomb, and put his hand to his mouth; and his eyes were enlightened.

28 Then answered one of the people, and said, Thy father straitly charged the people with an oath, saying, Cursed be the man that eateth any food this day. And the people were ^d faint.

29 Then said Jonathan, My father hath troubled the land: see, I pray you, how mine eyes have been enlightened, because I tasted a little of this honey.

30 How much more, if haply the people had eaten freely to-day of the spoil of their enemies which they found? for had there not been now a much greater slaughter among the Philistines?

31 [†] And they smote the Philistines that day from Michmash to Ajalon: and the people were very faint.

32 And the people flew upon the spoil, and took sheep, and oxen, and calves, and slew them on the ground: and the people did eat them ^e with the blood.

Verse 21. The Hebrews that were with the Philistines] We may understand such as they held in bondage, or who were their servants. Instead of Hebrews, the Septuagint read ἐν δούλοις, the slaves; from which it is evident that, instead of עֲבָדִים Abarim, Hebrews, they found in their text עֲבָדִים abadim, servants. But this reading is not countenanced by any other version, nor by any MS. yet discovered.

Verse 22. The men—which had hid themselves] See chap. xiii. 6.

The Vulgate and the Septuagint add here, And there were with Saul about ten thousand men: but this is supported by no other authority.

Verse 24. Saul had adjured the people] He was afraid, if they waited to refresh themselves, the Philistines would escape out of their hands; and, therefore, he made the taking any food till sunset a capital crime. This was the very means of defeating his own intention; for, as the people were exhausted for want of food, they could not continue the pursuit of their enemies:

had it not been for this foolish adjuration, there had been a greater slaughter of the Philistines, ver. 30.

Verse 25. There was honey upon the ground] There were many wild bees in that country; and Judea is expressly said to be a land flowing with milk and honey.

Verse 26. The honey dropped] It seems to have dropped from the trees on the ground. *Honey dew*s, as they are called, are not uncommon in most countries. And this appears to have been something of this kind.

Verse 27. His eyes were enlightened] Hunger and fatigue affect and dim the sight: on taking food, this affection is immediately removed. This most people know to be a fact.

Verse 31. They smote the Philistines—from Michmash to Ajalon] The distance, Calmet states, to be three or four leagues.

Verse 32. The people did eat them with the blood.] They were faint through hunger, and did not take time to bleed the cattle on which they fed. This was another bad effect of Saul's rash adjuration.

33 Then they told Saul, saying, Behold, the people sin against the LORD, in that they eat with the blood. And he said, Ye have transgressed: roll a great stone unto me this day.

34 And Saul said, Disperse yourselves among the people, and say unto them, Bring me hither every man his ox, and every man his sheep, and slay them here, and eat; and sin not against the LORD in eating with the blood. And all the people brought every man his ox with him that night, and slew them there.

35 ¶ And Saul built an altar unto the LORD: the same was the first altar that he built unto the LORD.

36 And Saul said, Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light, and let us not leave a man of them. And they said, Do whatsoever seemeth good unto thee. Then said the priest, Let us draw near hither unto God.

37 ¶ And Saul asked counsel of God, Shall I go down after the Philistines?

^a Or, dealt treacherously.—^b Heb. in his hand.—^c Ch. 7. 17.—^d Heb. that altar he began to build unto the LORD. ^e Ch. 23. 26.—^f Josh. 7. 14. Ch. 10. 19.

Verse 33. Roll a great stone unto me] Probably this means that they should set up an altar to the Lord, on which the animals might be properly slain; and the blood poured out upon the earth: and a large stone was erected for an altar.

Verse 35. Saul built an altar] And this, we are informed, was the first he had built: Samuel, as prophet, had hitherto erected the altars; and Saul thought he had sufficient authority to erect one himself, without the prophet, as he had once offered sacrifice without him.

Verse 36. Then said the priest] It is evident that Ahiah doubted the propriety of pursuing the Philistines that night; and, as a reverse of fortune might be ruinous after such a victory, he wished to have specific directions from the Lord.

Verse 37. He answered him not that day.] Why was this answer delayed? Surely Jonathan's eating the honey was no sin. This could not have excited God's displeasure. And yet the lot found out Jonathan! But did this argue that he had incurred guilt in the sight of God? I answer, it did not; for Jonathan was delivered, by the authority of the people, from his father's rash curse: no propitiation is offered for his supposed transgression, to induce God to pardon it; nor do we find any displeasure of God manifested on the occasion. See below.

Verse 41. LORD God of Israel, Give a perfect lot.] Both the Vulgate and Septuagint add much to this verse:—And Saul said to the Lord God of Israel, Lord God of Israel, give judg-wilt thou deliver them into the hand of Israel? But he answered him not that day.

38 ¶ And Saul said, Draw ye near hither all the chief of the people; and know and see wherein this sin hath been this day:

39 For, as the LORD liveth, which saveth Israel, though it be in Jonathan my son, he shall surely die. But there was not a man among all the people that answered him.

40 Then said he unto all Israel, Be ye on one side, and I and Jonathan my son will be on the other side. And the people said unto Saul, Do what seemeth good unto thee.

41 Therefore Saul said unto the LORD God of Israel, Give a perfect lot. And Saul and Jonathan were taken: but the people escaped.

42 And Saul said, Cast lots between me and Jonathan my son. And Jonathan was taken.

43 Then Saul said to Jonathan, Tell me what thou hast done. And Jona-ment. Why is it that thou hast not answered thy servant to-day? If the iniquity be in me, or Jonathan my son, make it manifest. Or, if this iniquity be in thy people, give sanctification?

Verse 42. And Jonathan was taken.] The object of the inquiry most evidently was, "Who has gone contrary to the king's adjuration to-day?" The answer to that must be, JONATHAN. But was this a proof of the divine displeasure against the man? By no means: the holy oracle told the truth; but neither that oracle, nor the God who gave it, fixed any blame upon Jonathan; and his own conscience acquits him. He seeks not pardon from God, because he is conscious he had not transgressed. But why did not God answer the priest that day? Because he did not think it proper to send the people, by night, in pursuit of the vanquished Philistines. Saul's motive was perfectly vindictive: Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them unto the morning light, and let us not leave a man of them; that is, Let us burn, waste, destroy, and slay all before us! Was it right to indulge a disposition of this kind, which would have led to the destruction of many innocent country people, and of many Israelites, who resided among the Philistines? Besides, was there not a most manifest reason in the people why God could not be among them? Multitudes of them were defiled in a very solemn manner; they had eaten the flesh with the blood: and, however sacrifices might be offered to atone for this transgression of the law, they must continue than told him, and said, "I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in mine hand, and, lo, I must die."

44 And Saul answered, "God do so, and more also: " for thou shalt surely die, Jonathan.

45 And the people said unto Saul, Shall Jonathan die, who hath wrought this great salvation in Israel? God forbid: "as the LORD liveth, there shall not one hair of his head fall to the ground; for he hath wrought with God this day. So the people rescued Jonathan, that he died not.

46 Then Saul went up from following the Philistines: and the Philistines went to their own place.

47 ¶ So Saul took the kingdom over Israel, and fought against all his enemies on every side, against Moab, and against the children of " Ammon, and against Edom, and against the kings of "Zobah, and against the Philistines:

unclean till the evening. Here were reasons enough, why God would not go on with the people for that night.

Verse 44. And Saul answered—thou shalt surely die, Jonathan.] To save thy rash oath! So must John Baptist's head be taken off at the desire of an impure woman; because a Herod had sworn to give her whatever she might request! Unfeeling brute! However, the king was JUDGE. But what said the people, who were the JURY?

Verse 45. And the people said] "Shall Jonathan die, who hath wrought this great salvation in Israel? God forbid! As the Lord liveth, there shall not one hair of his head fall to the ground." Here was a righteous and impartial jury, who brought in a verdict according to the evidence. No man should die but for a breach of the law of God: but Jonathan hath not broken any law of God; therefore, Jonathan should not die. And because he should not, therefore he shall not.

He hath wrought with God this day.] God has been commander in chief; Jonathan has acted under his directions.

So the people rescued Jonathan] And God testified no displeasure; and perhaps he permitted all this that he might correct Saul's propensity to rashness and precipitancy. To help to correct this propensity in any of my readers, I will subjoin to the end of this chapter a very instructive fable from the Persian.

Verse 47. So Saul took the kingdom] The Targum appears to give the meaning of this expression: "Saul prospered in his government over Israel." And the proofs of this prosperity are immediately subjoined.

Fought against all his enemies] Of the wars and whithersoever he turned himself, he vexed them.

48 And he ^agathered a host, and ^bsmote the Amalekites, and delivered Israel out of the hands of them that spoiled them.

49 ¶ Now ^cthe sons of Saul were Jonathan, and Ishui, and Melchishua; and the names of his two daughters were these; the name of the first-born Merab, and the name of the younger Michal:

50 And the name of Saul's wife was Ahinoam, the daughter of Ahimaaz: and the name of the captain of his host was ^dAbner, the son of Ner, Saul's uncle.

51 ^eAnd Kish was the father of Saul; and Ner, the father of Abner, was the son of Abiel.

52 And there was sore war against the Philistines all the days of Saul: and when Saul saw any strong man, or any valiant man, ^fhe took him unto him.

which are mentioned here we have no particulars: they must have endured a long time; and have been, at least in general, successful.

Verse 48. Smote the Amalekites] This war is mentioned in the following chapter.

Verse 49. Now the sons of Saul] We do not find Ishbosheth here. Calmet says, it was "because he was too young, and did not go with him to the war; for he mentions only those who were with him." Why then mention his daughters and his wife? Did they go with him to the war?

Verse 52. When Saul saw any strong man] This was very politic. He thus continued to recruit his army with strong and effective men.

On verse 45, I have referred to an instructive fable, entitled, "The Fatal Effects of precipitation," from the Ayar Danush of Abul Fuzl. It is as follows:

"A hermit, after long experience of the uncomfortableness of a solitary life, had a mind to become a husband, and consulted on the occasion a person well acquainted with that state.

"His friend told him the resolution was judicious, there being many advantages resulting from matrimony. That it subdued unlawful desires, which are continually obtruding themselves upon the imagination in a state of celibacy; moreover, that justice requires us to perpetuate in our posterity those blessings which we have received from our ancestors; besides, that a virtuous woman is the ornament of a man's house, and the comfort of his life. But, says he, be careful in making your choice.

"The hermit asked him of what condition she should be? He replied, 'Take the daughter of a religious, friendly man, whom you may make your confidant upon all occasions. But have nothing to say with three kinds of women: a widow, if she is always extolling her deceased husband; neither a woman whose relations have conferred favours upon you; nor one who, whenever she sees you, speaks in a faint tone, and affects a delicate, languid air.*

"He thanked his friend for imparting so much of his experience in the ways of women; and begged he would farther instruct him in regard to what age was most eligible. His friend answering, said, 'Make choice of a young girl; for the company of an old woman sickens and debilitates a man. The sages say, there are the fairest prospects of happiness and safety with women from fourteen to twenty years of age; from twenty to thirty, they are peaceable and quick; from thirty to forty they covet children and wealth; from forty to fifty they are ambitious of fame, and are full of tricks and hypocrisy; but a wife turned off fifty is the plague of a man's life, and the destruction of his reputation and fortune.' The hermit then made inquiry as to her person. Says the friend, 'The most valuable properties in a wife are virtue and good nature; so that she who possesses not these qualities, (though beautiful as an angel,) will prove a curse for life. But a woman of a good disposition, be she ever so ugly, is an inestimable treasure.'

"To shorten the story—the hermit, after a long search, had the good fortune to marry a girl well connected, and of an amiable turn of mind.

"He was then impatient to have children; but, seeing no appearance of his hopes being fulfilled, he incessantly prayed God to bestow upon him a son. At length his wife became pregnant; the hermit, filled with delight, was always talking about his son. One day, says he to his wife, 'I now hope we shall soon have a sweet, beautiful boy, and I will give him a suitable name. I shall take great pleasure in labouring to furnish means for his education; and I will teach him so to tread in the paths of righteousness, that he shall become a guide to the faithful.

"At length his wife was delivered of a fine boy; he returned thanks to God, and made grateful offerings. Day and night was he about the cradle; so that his whole time was spent in nursing.

"One day the mother, upon going to the bath, committed the infant to the father's care, entreating him not to stir from the cradle till she came back.

"The wife was hardly departed before the king who then reigned sent for the husband. Since it was impossible to delay obeying the royal summons, he went to court, after having entrusted the child to the care of a favourite mongoose,* which had been bred up in the family. No sooner was he out of sight than a large snake made its appearance, and was crawling toward the cradle: when the mongoose saw the child's life in danger, he instantly seized the snake by the back of the neck, and destroyed it. Soon after, when the hermit returned from court, the mongoose, who had been wallowing in the snake's blood, conscious of the good he had done, ran out to meet his master. The master, seeing the mongoose stained with blood, imagined he had killed the child: and, without making any farther reflection or inquiry, struck the poor little faithful animal such a blow with his stick, that he instantly expired. When he came into the house, and saw the child safe, and the snake dead by the side of the cradle, he smote his breast for grief, accusing himself of rashness and ingratitude toward the mongoose. While he was uttering these woful lamentations, in comes his wife; who, having learned the cause of his distress, blames him for his want of reflection. He confesses his indiscretion; but begs her not to add reproaches to his distress, as reproof could now avail nothing. 'True,' says she, 'advice can be of no service in the present instance; but I want to rouse your mind to reflection, that you may reap instruction from your misfortunes. Shame and repentance are the sure consequences of precipitation and want of reflection; which is well exemplified in the story of the king and the hawk.'

"I have heard that a king of Persia had a favourite hawk. Being one day on a hunting party, with his hawk upon his hand, a deer started up before him; he let the hawk fly, and followed it with great eagerness, till at length the deer was taken. The courtiers were all left behind in the chace. The king, being thirsty, rode about in quest of water, till, having reached the foot of a mountain, he discovered some water trickling down in drops from the rock. He took a little cup out of his quiver, and held it to catch the water. Just when the cup was filled, and he was going to drink, the hawk shook his pinions, and overset the cup. The king was vexed at the accident, and again applied the cup to the hole in the rock: when the cup was replenished, and he was lifting it to his mouth, the hawk clapped his wings and threw it down; at which the king was so enraged that he flung the bird with such force against the ground that he killed it.

"At this time the table-decker came up: he took a napkin out of his budget, wiped the cup, and was going to give the king some water to drink. The king said he had a great inclination to taste the pure water that distilled through the rock: but, not having patience to wait for its being collected by drops, he ordered the table-decker to go to the top of the mountain, and fill the cup at the fountain head.

"The table-decker having reached the top of the mountain, saw a large dragon lying dead at the spring; and his poisonous foam, mixing with the water, fell in drops through the rock. He descended, related the fact to the king, and presented him with a cup of cold water out of his flagon.

"When the king lifted the cup to his lips, the tears gushed from his eyes. He then related to the table-decker the adventure of the hawk; made many reflections upon the destructive consequences of precipitancy and thoughtlessness: and, during the remainder of his life,

* The mongoose of the Oriental writers, is the viverra ichneumon of Linnaeus: it is a very beautiful animal, about the size of a small cat, of a gray or ash colour, longish stiff hair, with a fine down underneath; a sharp pointed nose, exceedingly bright eyes, and long sharp teeth. It is the inveterate foe of serpents of all kinds: is domesticated in India, and kills rats, mice, and snakes of every sort. It is very faithful, and very affectionate. I had one of these beautiful animals that used to attend me in my study; leap on my knee while engaged at my table; and sleep there for two hours at a time. This faithful and affectionate creature died of a regular consumption, not being able to bear the winter's cold of our climate.—A. C.

Thus ends the fable on the fatal effects of precipitancy: but, were we to go to real life, we might find numerous effects of this same vice; and still much more fatal. He who acts under the immediate impulse of every passion, without reason or reflection, must act rashly and precipitately. Not only the lower orders of animals, but wives, husbands, children, parents, and friends, have fallen victims to this vice, which brought Saul almost to the point of slaying the greatest man in Israel, and imbruing his hands in his son's blood.

The advice of an ancient philosopher to a Roman emperor, is a good one: "Cæsar, whenever thou art angry, take heed that thou neither say nor do any thing till thou have distinctly repeated to thyself the twenty-four letters of the alphabet." Reader, if thou have no higher a corrective, use this. Do nothing rashly; remember the eye of God is ever upon thee: a man, in an unguarded moment, may do what may bring himself to an untimely end.

CHAPTER XV.

Samuel sends Saul to destroy the Amalekites, and all their substance, 1—3. Saul collects an immense army, and comes against their city, 4, 5. He desires the Kenites to remove from among the Amalekites, 6. He smites the Amalekites, and takes their king Agag prisoner, and saves the best of the spoil, 7—9. The Lord is displeased, and sends Samuel to reprove him, 10, 11. The conversation between Samuel and Saul in which the latter endeavours to justify his conduct, 12—23. He is convinced that he has done wrong, and asks pardon, 24—31. Samuel causes Agag to be slain; for which he assigns the reasons, 32—35.

SAMUEL also said unto Saul, "The LORD sent me to anoint thee to be king over his people, over Israel: now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the LORD."

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, I remember that which Amalek did to Israel, how he laid wait for him in the way, when he came up from Egypt.

3 Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

Verse 1. The LORD sent me to anoint thee] This gave him a right to say what immediately follows.

Verse 2. I remember that which Amalek did] The Amalekites were a people of Arabia Petraea, who had occupied a tract of country on the frontiers of Egypt and Palestine. They had acted with great cruelty toward the Israelites on their coming out of Egypt. See Numb. xvii. 8, &c. and the notes there.

They came upon them when they were faint and weary, and smote the hindmost of the people—those who were too weak to keep up with the rest. See Deut. xxv. 18. And God then purposed that Amalek, as a nation, should be blotted out from under heaven: which purpose was now fulfilled by Saul upward of four hundred years afterward!

Verse 3. Slay both man and woman] Nothing could justify such an exterminating decree but the absolute authority of God. This was given; all the reasons of it we do not know: but this we know well, the Judge of all the earth doth right. This war was not for plunder; for God commanded that all the property, as well as all the people, should be destroyed.

5 And Saul came to a city of Amalek, and laid wait in the valley.

6 ¶ And Saul said unto the Kenites, "Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them: for ye showed kindness to all the children of Israel, when they came up out of Egypt. So the Kenites departed from among the Amalekites."

7 ¶ And Saul smote the Amalekites from Havilah until thou comest to Shur, that is over against Egypt.

thousand] The Septuagint, in the London Polyglott, have FOUR HUNDRED thousand companies of Israel, and THIRTY thousand companies of Judah. The Codex Alexandrinus has TEN thousand of each. The Complutensian Polyglott has TWO HUNDRED thousand companies of Israel, and TEN thousand of Judah. And Josephus has FOUR HUNDRED thousand of Israel, and THIRTY thousand of Judah. All the other versions are the same with the Hebrew text; and there is no difference in the MSS.

Verse 5. Saul came to a city of Amalek] I believe the original should be translated, And Saul came to the city Amalek: their capital being called by the name of their tribe.

Verse 6. Said unto the Kenites] The Kenites were an ancient people: Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, was a Kenite. Jobab his son, (if the same person be not meant,) was guide to the Hebrews through the wilderness. They had a portion of the promised land, near to the city Arad. See Judg. i. 16. And for more particulars concerning them and the Amalekites, see the notes on Numb. xxiv. 20, 21.

Verse 7. From Havilah—to Shur] From Pelusium in Egypt, unto the Red sea. Josephus. But Havilah lay eastward from the Red sea: the Amalekites lay between this and the way to Egypt toward Shur.

8 And ¹he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, and ^mutterly destroyed all the people with the edge of the sword.

10 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Samuel, saying,

11 ^pIt repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king: for he is ^rturned back from following me, ^sand hath not performed my commandments. And it ^tgrieved Samuel; and he cried unto the LORD all night.

12 ¶ And when Samuel rose early to meet Saul in the morning, it was told Samuel, saying, Saul came to ^uCarmel, and, behold, he set him up a place, and is gone about, and passed on, and gone down to Gilgal.

13 And Samuel came to Saul: and Saul said unto him, ^vBlessed be thou of the LORD: I have performed the commandment of the LORD.

14 And Samuel said, What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?

Verse 11. It repenteth me that I have set up Saul] That is, I placed him on the throne; I intended, if he had been obedient, to have established his kingdom. He has been disobedient: I change my purpose, and the kingdom shall not be established in his family. This is what is meant by God's repenting: changing a purpose according to conditions already laid down, or mentally purposed.

Verse 12. He set him up a place] Literally, a hand, ^y yad. Some say it was a monument; others, a triumphal arch: probably it was no more than a hand, pointing out the place where Saul had gained the victory. Absalom's pillar is called the hand of Absalom, 2 Sam. xviii. 18.

Verse 15. The people spared the best of the sheep] It is very likely that the people did spare the best of the prey: and it is as likely that Saul might have restrained them if he would.

17 And Samuel said, ^xWhen thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the LORD anointed thee king over Israel?

18 And the LORD sent thee on a journey, and said, Go and utterly destroy the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until ^ythey be consumed.

19 Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the LORD, but didst fly upon the spoil, and didst evil in the sight of the LORD?

20 And Saul said unto Samuel, Yea, ^zI have obeyed the voice of the LORD, and have gone the way which the LORD sent me, and have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites.

21 ^aBut the people took of the spoil, sheep, and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God in Gilgal.

22 And Samuel said, ^bHath the LORD as great delight in burnt-offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the LORD? Behold, ^cto obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams.

That they might not love war, God had interdicted spoil and plunder; so the war was undertaken merely from a sense of duty, without any hope of enriching themselves by it.

Verse 17. Little in thine own sight] Who can bear prosperity? Is it not of the Lord's great goodness that the majority of the inhabitants of the earth are in comparative poverty?

Verse 21. To sacrifice unto the LORD] Thus he endeavours to excuse the people. They did not take the spoil in order to enrich themselves by it, but to sacrifice unto the Lord; and did not this motive justify their conduct?

Verse 22. Hath the LORD as great delight, &c.] This was a very proper answer to, and refutation of, Saul's excuse. Is not obedience to the will of God the end of all religion: of its rites, ceremonies, and sacrifices?

26 And Samuel said unto Saul, I will not return with thee: ^a for thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, and the LORD hath rejected thee from being king over Israel.

27 And as Samuel turned about to go away, ⁱ he laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent.

28 And Samuel said unto him, ^k The LORD hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbour of thine, that is better than thou.

Verse 23. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. This is no translation of those difficult words, הכחש והתקבצות קסם מרי וזרפם ki chat-tath kesem meri ve-aven ve-teraphim ha-petsar. It appears to me that the three nouns which occur first in the text, refer each to the three last in order. Thus, חטאת chattath, TRANSGRESSION, refers to און aven, INIQUITY; which is the principle whence transgression springs. קסם kesem, DIVINATION, refers to זרפם teraphim, consecrated images, or telesms, vulgarly talismans, used in incantations. And מרי meri, REBELLION, refers evidently to הכחש ha-petsar, STUBBORNNESS; whence rebellion springs. The meaning, therefore, of this difficult place, may be the following: As transgression comes from iniquity, divination from teraphim, and rebellion from stubbornness; so, because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king. All the versions are different.

Verse 24. I have sinned—because I feared the people This was the best excuse he could make for himself: but had he feared God more, he need have feared the PEOPLE less.

Verse 25. Pardon my sin Literally, bear my sin; take it away: forgive what I have done against thee, and be my intercessor with God, that he may forgive my offence against him: turn again with me, that I may worship the Lord.

Verse 26. I will not return with thee I cannot will not lie nor repent: for he is not a man, that he should repent.

30 Then he said, I have sinned: yet ^o honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel, and turn again with me, that I may worship the LORD thy God.

31 So Samuel turned again after Saul; and Saul worshipped the LORD.

32 ¶ Then said Samuel, Bring ye hither to me Agag the king of the Amalekites. And Agag came unto him delicately. And Agag said, Surely the bitterness of death is past.

33 And Samuel said, ^o As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the LORD in Gilgal.

34 ¶ Then Samuel went to Ramah; and Saul went up to his house to ^p Gibeah of Saul.

35 And ^r Samuel came no more to see Saul until the day of his death: nevertheless Samuel ^s mourned for Saul: and the LORD ^t repented that he had made Saul king over Israel.

not acknowledge thee as king, seeing the Lord hath rejected thee.

Verse 29. The Strength of Israel will not lie What God has purposed, he will bring to pass; for he has all power in the heavens and in the earth: and he will not repent, change his purpose, concerning thee.

We may say it was some extenuation of Saul's fault, that the people insisted on preserving the best of the prey; for who could resist the demands of a victorious mob? But his crime was in consenting: had he not, the crime would have been theirs alone.

Verse 32. Agag came unto him delicately. The Septuagint have τρεμαρ, trembling; the original, מאדאנח קטין maadanoch katin, delicacies: probably איש ish, man, understood; a man of delights, a pleasure-taker: the Vulgate, pinguissimus et tremens, "very fat and trembling."

Surely the bitterness of death is past. Almost all the versions render this differently from ours. Surely death is bitter, is their general sense; and this seems to be the true meaning.

Verse 33. As thy sword hath made women childless It appears that Agag had forfeited his life by his own personal transgressions; and that his death now was the retribution of his cruelties.

And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces 1. What Samuel did here he did in his magisterial capacity: and, 2. It is not likely he did it by his own sword, but by that of an executioner. What kings, magistrates, and generals, do in an official way by their subjects, servants, or soldiers, they are said to do themselves: qui facit per alterum, facit per se.

Verse 35. And Samuel came no more to see Saul] But we read, chap. xix. 22-24. that Saul went to see Samuel at Naioth; but this does not affect what is said here. From this time Samuel had no connexion with Saul; he never more acknowledged him as king: he mourned and prayed for him; and continued to perform his prophetic functions at Ramah, and at Naioth, superintending the school of the prophets in that place.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVI.

Verse 1. Fill thine horn with oil] Horns appear to have been the ancient drinking vessels of all nations; and we may suppose that most persons, who had to travel much, always carried one with them, for the purpose of taking up water from the fountains to quench their thirst. Such a horn had Samuel; and, on this occasion, he was commanded to fill it with oil, for the purpose of consecrating a king over Israel, from among the sons of Jesse.

Verse 2. Take a heifer with thee, and say, I am come to sacrifice] This was strictly true; Samuel did offer a sacrifice: and it does not appear that he could have done the work which God designed, unless he had offered this sacrifice, and called the elders of the people together, and thus collected Jesse's sons. But he did not tell the principal design of his coming; had he done so, it would have produced evil and no good: and, though no man, in any circumstances, should ever tell a lie; yet, in all circumstances, he is not obliged to tell the whole truth; though in every circumstance he must tell nothing but the truth; and, in every case, so tell that truth that the hearer shall not believe a lie by it.

common custom was, after the blood of the victim had been poured out to God, and the fat burnt, to feast on the flesh of the sacrifice. This appears to have been the case in all, except in the whole burnt-offering; this was entirely consumed.

Verse 4. The elders of the town trembled at his coming] They knew he was a prophet of the Lord; and they were afraid that he was now come to denounce some judgments of the Most High against their city.

Verse 5. Sanctify yourselves] Change your clothes, and wash your bodies in pure water; and prepare your minds, by meditation, reflection, and prayer; that, being in the spirit of sacrifice, ye may offer acceptably to the Lord.

Verse 7. Man looketh on the outward appearance] And it is well he should, and confine his looks to that; for when he pretends to sound the heart, he usurps the prerogative of God.

In what way were these communications made from God to Samuel? It must have been by direct inspirations into his heart. But what a state of holy familiarity does this argue between God and the prophet! I believe Moses himself was not more highly favoured than Samuel.

Verse 10. Seven of his sons] This certainly was not done publicly; Samuel, Jesse, and his children, must have been in a private apartment, previously to the public feast on the sacrifice: for Samuel says, ver. 11. We will not sit down till he (David) is come.

Verse 12. He was ruddy] I believe the word here means red-haired; he had golden locks. Hair of this kind is ever associated with a delicate skin, and florid complexion.

Verse 13. The Spirit of the LORD came upon David] God qualified him to be governor of his people; by infusing such graces as wisdom, prudence, counsel, courage, liberality, and magnanimity.

Verse 14. The Spirit of the LORD departed from Saul] He was thrown into such a state of mind by the judgments of God, as to be deprived of any regal qualities which he before possessed. God seems to have taken what gifts he had, and given them to David; and then the evil spirit came upon Saul: for what God fills not, the devil will fill.

An evil spirit from the LORD] The evil spirit was either immediately sent from the Lord, or permitted to come. Whether this was a diabolic possession, or a mere mental malady, the learned are not agreed: it seems to have partaken of both. That Saul had fallen into a deep melancholy, there is little doubt: that the devil might work more effectually on such a state of mind, there can be but little question. There is an old proverb, Satan delights to fish in troubled waters; and Saul's situation of mind gave him many advantages.

The theory of Dr. Scheuchzer, in his Physica Sacra, on the malady of Saul, is allowed to be very ingenious. It is in substance as follows: Health consists in a moderate tension of the fibres, which permits all the fluids to have an entire ^f See Numb. 27. 18. Judg. 11. 29. & 13. 25. & 14. 6. Ch. 10. 6. 10.—^g Ch. 11. 6. & 18. 12. & 28. 15. Judg. 16. 20. Psa. 51. 11. ^h Judg. 9. 23. Ch. 18. 10. & 19. 9.—ⁱ Or, terrified.—^j Gen. 41. 46. Ver. 21, 22. 1 Kings 10. 8.—^k Ver. 23. 2 Kings 3. 15.

freedom of circulation; and to the spirits, that of diffusing themselves through all the limbs: on the contrary, disease consists in tensions of the fibres morbidly weak, or morbidly strong. This latter seems to have been the case of Saul: and as the undulations of the air, which convey sound, communicate themselves to and through the most solid bodies; it is easy to suppose that, by the modulations of music, all the fibres of his body, which were under the influence of their morbidly increased tension, might be so relaxed as to be brought back into their natural state, and thus permit the re-establishment of a free and gentle circulation of the fluids, and consequently of the animal spirits; and thus induce calmness and tranquillity of mind. I believe this theory to be correct; and I should find no difficulty to amplify and to illustrate the subject. Even a skilful playing upon the harp was one means to bring a disordered state of the nervous and fibrous system into a capacity of affording such uninterrupted tranquillity to the mind as to render it capable of receiving the prophetic influence: see the case of Elisha, 2 Kings iii. 14, 15. It has been said—

"Musie has charms to sooth the savage breast."

This has been literally proved:—A musician was brought to play on his instrument while they were feeding a savage lion in the tower of London; the beast immediately left his food, came toward the grating of his den, and began to move in such a way as to show himself affected by the music. The musician ceased, and the lion returned to his food; he recommenced, and the lion left off his prey, and was so affected as to seem, by his motions, to dance with delight. This was repeatedly tried, and the effects were still the same.

Warburton supposes the story is anticipated from ver. 14 to 23; and that the true chronology of this part of David's life is the following :
—1. David is anointed by Samuel.—2. Carries provisions to his brethren in the army.—3. Fights with and kills Goliath.—4. Is received into the king's court.—5. Contracts a friendship with Jonathan.—6. Incurs Saul's jealousy.—7. Retires to his father's house.—8. Is, after some time, sent for by Saul, to sooth his melancholy with his harp.—9. Again excites Saul's jealousy; who endeavours to smite him with his javelin. This anticipation between the 14th and 23d verse, comes in, in the order of time, between verses 9 and 10 of chap. xviii. where the breach is apparent.

Verse 20. Took an ass laden with bread] He must send a present to Saul to introduce his son; and this was probably the best he had.
Dr. Warburton pleads still farther on the propriety of his rectification of the chronology in this place. David had at this time vanquished the Philistine; was become a favourite with the people; had excited Saul's jealousy; and retired to shun its bad effects. In the interim, Saul was seized with the disorder in question; and is recommended by his servants to try the effects of music. They were acquainted with David's skill on the harp, and likewise with Saul's bad disposition toward him: the point was delicate, it required to be managed with address; and therefore they recommended David in this artful manner. "As you must have one constantly in attendance, both in court and on your military expeditions, to be always at hand on occasion, the son of Jesse will become both stations well: he will strengthen your camp, and adorn your court; for he is a tried soldier, and of a graceful presence. You have nothing to fear from his ambition; for you saw with what prudence he went into voluntary banishment, when his popularity had incurred your displeasure?" Accordingly, Saul is prevailed on; David is sent for, and 21 And David came to Saul, and ^sstood before him: and he loved him greatly; and he became his armour-bearer.

22 And Saul sent to Jesse, saying, Let David, I pray thee, stand before me; for he hath found favour in my sight.

23 And it came to pass, when ^tthe evil spirit from God was upon Saul, that David took a harp, and played with his hand: so Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him.

^r See Ch. 10. 27. & 17. 18. Gen. 43. 11. Prov. 18. 16.—^s Gen. 41. 46. 1 Kings 10. 8. Prov. 22. 29.—^t Ver. 14, 16.

succeeds with his music: This dissipates all former umbrage; and, as one who is ever to be in attendance, he is made Saul's armour-bearer. This sunshine still continued, till his great successes awakened Saul's jealousy afresh; and then the lifted javelin was to strike off all obligations. Thus we see what light is thrown upon the whole history, by the supposition of an anticipation in the latter part of this chapter; an anticipation the most natural, proper, and necessary, for the purpose of the historian. Thus reasons Bishop Warburton; and with very considerable plausibility, though the intelligent reader may still have his doubts.

Verse 23. The evil spirit from God] The word evil is not in the common Hebrew text; but it is in the Vulgate, Septuagint, Targum, Syriac, and Arabic; and in eight of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., which present the text thus, ורוח אלהים רע ruach Elohim ra'ah, Spiritus Domini malus, the evil spirit of God. The Septuagint leave out θεος, of God, and have πνευμα πονηρον, the evil spirit. The Targum says, The evil spirit from before the Lord; and the Arabic has it, The evil spirit by the permission of God: this is at least the sense.

And the evil spirit departed from him.] The Targum says, And the evil spirit ascended up from off him. This considers the malady of Saul to be more than a natural disease.

There are several difficulties in this chapter: those of the chronology are pretty well cleared, in the opinion of some, by the observations of Bishop Warburton; but there is still something more to be done, to make this point entirely satisfactory. Saul's evil spirit, and the influence of music upon it, are not easily accounted for. I have considered his malady to be of a mixed kind, natural and diabolical: there is too much of apparent nature in it to permit us to believe it was all spiritual; and there is too much of apparent supernatural influence, to suffer us to believe that it was all natural.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Philistines gather together against Israel, at Ephes-dammim; and Saul and his men pitch their camp near the valley of Elah, 1—3. Goliath of Gath, a gigantic man, whose height was six cubits and a span, defies the armies of Israel, and proposes to end all contests by single combat; his armour is described, 4—11. Saul and his host are greatly dismayed, 12. David, having been sent by his father with provisions to his brethren in the army, hears the challenge; inquires into all the circumstances; thinks it a reproach to Israel that no man can be found to accept the challenge; is brought before Saul; and proposes to undertake the combat, 13—32. Saul objects to his youth and inexperience, 33. David shows the grounds on which he undertakes it, 34—37. Saul arms him with his own armour; but David, finding them an encumbrance, puts them off, and takes his staff, his sling, and five stones out of the brook, and goes to meet Goliath, 38—40. The Philistine draws near; despises, defies, and curses him, 41—44. David retorts his defiance, 45—47. They draw near to each other; and David slings a stone, hits Goliath in the forehead, slays him, and cuts off his head with his own sword, 48—51. The Philistines flee, and are pursued by the Israelites, 52, 53. David brings the head of the Philistine to Jerusalem, 54. NOTES ON CHAPTER XVII.

Verse 1. Now the Philistines gathered together] Calmet thinks that this war happened eight years after the anointing of David; and ten or twelve years after the war with the Amalekites. We have already seen that there was war between Saul and the Philistines all his days. See chap. xiv. 52.

Shochoh and Azekah] Places which lay to the south of Jerusalem, and to the west of Bethlehem; about five leagues from the former. Ephes-dammim was somewhere in the vicinity; but it is not known where. See Calmet.

Verse 2. The valley of Elah] Some translate this the turpentine valley, or the valley of the terebinth trees; and others, the valley of oaks. The situation of this valley is well known.

Verse 3. The Philistines stood on a mountain] These were two eminences, or hills, from which they could see and talk with each other.

Verse 4. There went out a champion] Our word champion comes from campus, the field; Campio est enim ille qui pugnât in campo, hoc est, in castris; Champion is he, properly, who fights in the field; i. e. in camps. A man well skilled in arms, strong, brave, and patriotic.

But is this the meaning of the original ישׁוּב הַבְּנִים ish ha-benim; a middle man, the man between two: that is, as here, the man who undertakes to settle the disputes between two armies or nations. So our ancient champions settled disputes between contending parties, by what was termed camp-fight: hence the campio, or champion. The versions know not well what to make of this man. The Vulgate calls him vir spurius, a bastard; the Septuagint, ἀνὴρ δυνατός, a strong or powerful man; the Targum, גבר מביינהו gabra mibbeynehon, "a man from between them;" the Arabic, رجل حيار rujil jibar, "a great or gigantic man;" the Syriac is the same; and Josephus terms him ἀνὴρ ταυμνησίστατος, an immensely great man. The Vulgate has given him the notation of spurius, or bastard, because it considered the original mountain on the one side, and Israel stood on a mountain on the other side; and there was a valley between them.

4 ¶ And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philistines, named ^eGoliath, of ^fGath, whose height was six cubits and a span.

as expressing a son of two: i. e. a man whose parents were unknown. Among all these, I consider our word champion, as explained above, the best and most appropriate to the original terms.

Whose height was six cubits and a span.] The word cubit signifies the length from cubitus, the elbow, to the top of the middle finger, which is generally rated at one foot six inches. The span is the distance from the top of the middle finger to the end of the thumb, when extended as far as they can stretch on a plain; this is ordinarily nine inches. Were we sure that these were the measures, and their extent, which are intended in the original words, we could easily ascertain the height of this Philistine: it would then be nine feet nine inches; which is a tremendous height for a man.

But the versions are not all agreed in his height. The Septuagint read τεσσαράρατον καὶ στίβας, four cubits and a span; and Josephus reads the same. It is necessary, however, to observe, that the Septuagint, in the Codex Alexandrinus, read with the Hebrew text. But what was the length of the ancient cubit? This has been variously computed; eighteen inches, twenty inches and a half, and twenty-one inches. If we take the first measurement, he was nine feet nine; if the second, and read palm instead of span, with the Vulgate and others, he was ten feet seven inches and a half; if we take the last, which is the estimate of Grævius, with the span, he was eleven feet three inches; or, if we go to the exactest measurement, as laid down in Bishop Cumberland's tables, where he computes the cubit at 21·388 inches, the span at 10·944 inches, and the palm at 3·684 inches, then the six cubits and the span will make exactly 11 feet 10·272 inches. If we take the palm instead of the span, then the height will be 11 feet 3·012 inches. But I still think that the nine feet nine inches is the most reasonable.

Verse 5. He was armed with a coat of mail] coat was five thousand shekels of brass.

6 And he had greaves of brass upon his legs, and a target of brass between his shoulders.

7 And the staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam; and his spear's head weighed six hundred shekels of iron: and one bearing a shield went before him.

8 And he stood and cried unto the armies of Israel, and said unto them, Why are ye come out to set your battle in array? am not I a Philistine, and h Or, forget.—i 2 Sam. 21. 19.—k Ch. 8. 17.

The words in the original שריון קששון shirion kaskassim, means a coat of mail, formed of plates of brass, overlapping each other like the scales of a fish, or tiles of a house. This is the true notion of the original terms.

With thin plates of brass or iron, overlapping each other, were the ancient coats of mail formed in different countries: many formed in this way may be now seen in the Tower of London.

The weight—five thousand shekels] Following Bishop Cumberland's tables, and rating the shekel at two hundred and nineteen grains, and the Roman ounce at four hundred and thirty-eight grains, we find that Goliath's coat of mail, weighing five thousand shekels, was exactly one hundred and fifty six pounds four ounces, avoirdupois. A vast weight for a coat of mail; but not at all out of proportion to the man.

Verse 6. Greaves of brass upon his legs] This species of armour may be seen on many ancient monuments. It was a plate of brass, (though perhaps sometimes formed of lamina, or plates like the mail,) which covered the shin, or forepart of the leg, from the knee down to the instep; and was buckled with straps behind the leg. From ancient monuments we find that it was commonly worn only on one leg. VEGETIUS, de Re Militari, says, "Pedites Scutati etiam ferreas ocreas in dextris cruribus cohebantur accipere." The foot soldiers, called Scutati, from their particular species of shield, were obliged to use iron greaves on their right legs. One of these may be seen in the monument of the gladiator Buto, in Montfaucon; and another in the Mosaic pavement at Bognor, in Surrey.

A target of brass between his shoulders.] When not actually engaged, soldiers threw their shields behind their back; so that they appeared to rest or hang between the shoulders.

There are different opinions concerning this piece of armour; called here קרן kiddon. Some think it was a covering for the shoulders; others, that it was a javelin, or dart; others, that it was a lance; some, a club; and others, a sword. It is certainly distinguished from the shield, ver. 41. and is translated a spear, Josh. viii. 18.

Verse 7. The staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam] Either like that on which the warp is rolled, or that on which the cloth is rolled. We know not how thick this was, because there were several sorts of looms; and the sizes of the beams very dissimilar. Our woollen, linen, cotton, and silk looms, are all ye servants to Saul? choose you a man for you, and let him come down to me.

9 If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and serve us.

10 And the Philistine said, I defy the armies of Israel this day; give me a man, that we may fight together.

11 When Saul and all Israel heard those words of the Philistine, they were dismayed, and greatly afraid.

different in the size of their beams. And I have seen several that I should not suppose too thick, though they might be too short, for Goliath's spear.

His spear's head weighed six hundred shekels of iron] That is, his spear's head was of iron, and it weighed six hundred shekels: this, according to the former computation, would amount to eighteen pounds twelve ounces.

And one bearing a shield] הונח ha-tsinnah, from tsan, pointed or penetrating, if it do not mean some kind of a lance, must mean a shield, with what is called the umbo, a sharp protuberance in the middle; with which they could as effectually annoy their enemies as defend themselves. Many of the old Highland targets were made with a projecting dagger in the centre. Taking the proportions of things unknown to those known, the armour of Goliath is supposed to have weighed not less than two hundred and seventy-two pounds thirteen ounces! Plutarch informs us, that the ordinary weight of a soldier's panoply, or complete armour, was one talent, or sixty pounds; and that one Alcimus, in the army of Demetrius, was considered as a prodigy, because his panoply weighed two talents, or one hundred and twenty pounds.

Verse 8. I a Philistine] The Targum adds much to this speech. This is the substance: "I am Goliath the Philistine, of Gath, who killed the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, the priests; and led into captivity the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, and placed it in the temple of Dagon, my god; and it remained in the cities of the Philistines seven months. Also, in all our battles I have gone at the head of the army; and we conquered and cut down men, and laid them as low as the dust of the earth; and to this day the Philistines have not granted me the honour of being chief of a thousand men. And ye, men of Israel, what noble exploit has Saul the son of Kish, of Gibeath, done, that ye should have made him king over you? If he be a hero, let him come down himself and fight with me; but if he be a weak or cowardly man, then choose you out a man that he may come down to me."

Verse 9. Then will we be your servants] Of this stipulation we hear nothing farther.

Verse 10. I defy] אני חרפתי ani cherephati, "I strip and make bare" the armies of Israel; for none dared to fight him.

Verse 12.—The 12th verse, to the 31st inclusive, are wanting in the Septuagint; as also the 41st verse; and from the 54th to the end; with the five first verses of chap. xviii. and the 9th, 10th, 11th, 17th, 18th, and 19th, of the same.

All these parts are found in the Codex Alexandrinus: but it appears that the MS. from which the Codex Alexandrinus was copied had them not. See observations at the end of this chapter. Dr. Kennicott has rendered it very probable that these portions are not a genuine part of the text.

Notwithstanding what Bishop Warburton and others have done to clear the chronology of the present printed Hebrew, it is impossible to make a clear consistent sense of the history, unless these verses are omitted. Let any one read the eleventh verse in connexion with the thirty-second, (leave out the forty-first, and connect the fifty-fourth with the sixth of chap. xviii. and he will be perfectly convinced that there is nothing wanting to make the sense complete; to say nothing of the other omissions noted above. If the above be taken in as genuine, the ingenuity of man has hitherto failed to free the whole from apparent contradiction and absurdity. I must confess that where every one else has failed, I have no hope of succeeding: I must, therefore, leave all farther attempts to justify the chronology; and refer to those who have written for and against the genuineness of this part of the common Hebrew text. At the end of the chapter I shall introduce some extracts from Kennicott and Pilkington; and leave the whole with the unprejudiced and discerning reader.

Verse 18. Carry these ten cheeses] Cheeses of milk, says the margin. In the East they do not make what we call cheese: they press the milk but slightly; and carry it in rush baskets. It is highly salted, and little different from curds.

Verse 19. Fighting with the Philistines.] See at the end of the chapter.

A. M. 2941. 27 And the people answered him after this manner, saying, ^{287.} So shall it be done to the man that killeth him.

28 ¶ And Eliab his eldest brother heard when he spake unto the men; and Eliab's ¹ anger was kindled against David, and he said, Why camest thou down hither? and with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness? I know thy pride, and the naughtiness of thine heart; for thou art come down that thou mightest see the battle.

29 And David said, What have I now done? ^{287.} Is there not a cause?

30 ¶ And he turned from him toward another, and ¹ spake after the same manner: and the people answered him again after the former manner.

31 And when the words were heard which David spake, they rehearsed them before Saul; and he ² sent for him.

32 ¶ And David said to Saul, ^{287.} Let no man's heart fail because of him; ^{287.} thy servant will go and fight with this Philistine.

33 And Saul said to David, ^{287.} Thou art not able to go against this Philistine to fight with him: for thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth.

A. M. 2941. 34 And David said unto Saul, Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion, and a bear, and took a ^{287.} lamb out of the flock:

35 And I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him.

36 Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear: and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing he hath defied the armies of the living God.

37 David said moreover, ^{287.} The LORD, that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. And Saul said unto David, Go, and ^{287.} the LORD be with thee.

38 ¶ And Saul ^{287.} armed David with his armour, and he put a helmet of brass upon his head; also he armed him with a coat of mail.

39 And David girded his sword upon his armour, and he assayed to go; for he had not proved it. And David said unto Saul, I cannot go with these; for I have not proved them. And David put them off him.

Verse 29. Is there not a cause? הלא דבר הוא halo daber hu. I believe the meaning is what several of the versions express: I have spoken but a word; and should a man be made an offender for a word?

Verse 32. And David said] This properly connects with verse the eleventh:—Thou art but a youth; supposed to be about twenty-two or twenty-three years of age.

Verse 34. Thy servant kept his father's sheep] He found it necessary to give Saul the reasons why he undertook this combat; and why he expected to be victorious. 1. I have courage to undertake it, and strength to perform it. 2. Both have been tried in a very signal manner. 1. A lion came upon my flock, and seized a lamb; I ran after him, he attacked me, I seized hold of him by his shaggy locks, smote and slew him, and delivered the lamb. 2. A bear came in the same way, and I attacked and slew him. 3. This, with whom I am to fight, is a Philistine, an uncircumcised man; one who is an enemy to God: God, therefore, will not be on his side. On that ground I have nothing to fear. 4. He has defied the armies of the Lord; and has, in effect, defied Jehovah himself: therefore, the battle is the Lord's; and he will stand by me. 5. I have perfect confidence in his protection and defence; for they that trust in him shall never be confounded. 6. I conclude, therefore, that the Lord, who delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine.

Verse 35.—The slaying of the lion and the bear, mentioned here, must have taken place at two different times: perhaps the verse should be read thus—I went out after him, (the lion,) and smote him, &c. And when he, (the bear) rose up against me, I caught him by the beard, and slew him.

Verse 37. Go, and the LORD be with thee.] Saul saw that these were reasonable grounds of confidence; and, therefore, wished him success.

Verse 38. Saul armed David] He knew that, although the battle was the Lord's, yet prudent means should be used to secure success.

Verse 39. I cannot go with these] In ancient times, it required considerable exercise and training to make a man expert in the use of such heavy armour: armour which, in the present day, scarcely a man is to be found who is able to carry: and so it must have been then, until that practice, which arises from frequent use, had made the proprietor perfect. I have not proved them, says David: I am wholly unaccustomed to such armour, and it would be an encumbrance to me.

Verse 40. He took his staff] What we would call his crook.

Five smooth stones] Had they been rough, or angular—1. They would not have passed easily through the air; and their asperities would, in the course of their passage, have given them a false direction. 2. Had they not been smooth, they could not have been readily despatched from the sling.

A shepherd's bag] That in which he generally carried his provisions, while keeping the sheep in the open country.

And his sling] The sling, both among the Greeks and Hebrews, has been a most powerful offensive weapon. See what has been said on Judg. xx. 16. It is composed of two strings, and a leathern strap: the strap is in the middle, and is the place where the stone or bullet lies. The string, on the right end of the strap, is firmly fastened to the hand: that on the left, is held between the thumb and middle joint of the forefinger. It is then whirled two or three times round the head; and, when discharged, the finger and thumb let go their hold of the left end string. The velocity and force of the sling are in proportion to the distance of the strap, where the bullet lies, from the shoulder joint. Hence the ancient Balleares, or inhabitants of Majorca and Minorca, are said to have had three slings of different lengths: the longest they used when the enemy was at the greatest distance; the middle one, on their nearer approach; and the shortest, when they came into the ordinary fighting distance in the field. The shortest is the most certain, though not the most powerful. The Ballearians are said to have had one of their slings constantly bound about their head; to have used the second as a girdle; and to have carried the third always in their hand. See Dion. Sic. lib. v. chap. 18. page 286. Edit. Bipont.

In the use of the sling, it requires much practice to hit the mark: but, when once this dexterity is acquired, the sling is nearly as fatal as the musket or bow. See on ver. 49. David

Come to me, and I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field.

45 Then said David to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: ^cbut I come to thee in the name of the LORD of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast ^ddefied.

was evidently an expert marksman: and his sling gave him greatly the advantage over Goliath; an advantage of which the giant does not seem to have been aware. He could hit him within any speaking distance: if he missed once, he had as many chances as he had stones; and, after all, being unencumbered with armour, young and athletic, he could have saved his life by flight. Against him the Philistine could do but little, except in close fight: it is true he appears to have had a javelin, or missile spear; see on ver. 6: but David took care to prevent the use of all such weapons, by giving him the first blow.

Verse 41. The man that bare the shield] See on ver. 7.

Verse 42. He disdained him] He held him in contempt: he saw that he was young; and, from his ruddy complexion, supposed him to be effeminate.

Verse 43. Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves?] It is very likely that Goliath did not perceive the sling, which David might have kept coiled up within his hand.

Cursed David by his gods.] Prayed his gods to curse him. This long parley between David and Goliath is quite in the style of those times. Homer's heroes have generally an altercation before they engage; and sometimes enter into geographical and genealogical discussions; and vaunt and scold most contemptibly.

Verse 44. Come to me, and I will give thy flesh] He intended, as soon as he could lay hold on him, to pull him to pieces.

Verse 45. Thou comest to me with a sword] I come to thee with the name (שם be shem) of Jehovah of hosts; the God of the armies of Israel. What Goliath expected from his arms, David expected from the ineffable name.

Verse 46. This day will the LORD deliver thee into mine hand] This was a direct and circumstantial prophecy of what did take place.

Verse 47. For the battle is the LORD's] It is the LORD's war: you are fighting against him; and his religion, as the champion of your party.

48 And it came to pass, when the Philistine arose, and came and drew nigh to meet David, that David hasted, and ran toward the army to meet the Philistine.

49 And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and slang it, and smote the Philistine in his forehead, that the stone sunk into his forehead; and he fell upon his face to the earth.

50 So ^kDavid prevailed over the Philistine with a sling and with a stone, and smote the Philistine, and slew him; but there was no sword in the hand of David.

51 Therefore David ran, and stood upon the Philistine, and took his sword, and drew it out of the sheath thereof, and slew him, and cut off his head therewith. And when the Philistines

I am fighting for God, as the champion of his cause.

Verse 48. The Philistine arose] This was an end of the parley: the Philistine came forward to meet David: and David, on his part, ran forward to meet the Philistine.

Verse 49. Smote the Philistine in his forehead] Except his face, Goliath was every where covered over with strong armour. Either he had no beaver to his helmet; or it was lifted up, so as to expose his forehead: but it does not appear that the ancient helmets had any covering for the face. The Septuagint, however, suppose that the stone passed through the helmet, and sunk into his forehead—Και διεδν ὁ λιθος δια της περικεφαλίας εις το μετωπον αυτου, "and the stone passed through his helmet, and sunk in his skull." To some this has appeared perfectly improbable: but we are assured, by ancient writers, that scarcely any thing could resist the force of the sling.

Diodorus Siculus, lib. v. c. 13. p. 287. Edit. Bipont, says, "The Balleares, in time of war, sling greater stones than any other people; and, with such force, that they seem as if projected from a catapult." Διό και κατα τας τευχωμαχίας εν ταις προσβολαίς τητοντί τους προ των επαλειων εριστάτας, κατατραυματιζουσιν εν δε ταις παρατάξεσι τους τε θυρούους και τα κρηνη, και παν σκεπασμεριον ὅπλων συντριβουσι. the body is defended. And they are such exact marksmen, that they scarcely ever miss that at which they aim."

The historian accounts for their great accuracy and power in the use of the sling, from this circumstance: Αιτιαι δε τούτων, &c. τ. λ. "They attain to this perfection by frequent exercise, from their childhood; for, while they are young, and under their mothers' care, they are obliged to learn to sling; for they fasten bread for a mark, at the top of a pole; and, till the child hit the bread, he must remain fasting; and when he has hit it, the mother gives it to him to eat." Ibid.

I have given these passages at large, because they contain several curious facts; and sufficiently account for the force and accuracy with which David slung his stone at Goliath. We find also, in the μη αμαρτανειν, not miss the mark, of the historian, the true notion of αμαρτανειν, to sin, which I have contended for elsewhere. He who sins, though he aims thereby at his gratification and profit, misses the mark of present and eternal felicity.

Verse 51. When the Philistines saw their champion was dead, they fled.] They were panic-struck; and not being willing to fulfil the condition which was stipulated by Goliath, they precipitately left the field. The Israelites took a proper advantage of these circumstances, and totally routed their enemies.

Verse 54. David took the head of the Philistine] It has been already remarked that this, with the following verses, and the five first verses of the xviiiith chapter, are omitted by the Septuagint. See the observations at the end.

slaughter of the Philistine, Abner took him, and brought him before Saul, with the head of the Philistine in his hand.

o Ver. 54.

Verse 58. Whose son art thou, thou young man? That Saul should not know David, with whom he had treated a little before, and even armed him for the combat; and, that he should not know who his father was, though he had sent to his father for permission to David to reside constantly with him, chap. xvi. 22. is exceedingly strange! I fear all Bishop Warburton's attempts to rectify the chronology, by assumed anticipations, will not account for this. I must honestly confess they do not satisfy me; and I must refer the reader to what immediately follows, on the authenticity of the verses which concern this subject.

On the subject of that large omission in the Septuagint, of which I have spoken on ver. 12. I here subjoin the reasons of Mr. Pilkington and Dr. Kennicott, for supposing it to be an interpolation of some rabbinical writer; added at a very early period to the Hebrew text.

"Had every version of the Hebrew text," says Mr. Pilkington, "agreed to give a translation of this passage, as we now find, the attempts of clearing it from its embarrassments would have been attended with very great difficulties; but, as in several other cases before-mentioned, so here, the providence of God seems to have so far secured the credit of those who were appointed to be the penmen of the oracles of truth, that the defence of their original records may be undertaken upon good grounds, and supported by sufficient evidence. For we are now, happily, in possession of an ancient version of these two chapters, which appears to have been made from a Hebrew copy, which had none of the thirty-nine verses which are here supposed to have been interpolated, nor was similar to what we have at present in those places, which are here supposed to have been altered. This version is found in the Vatican copy of the Seventy; which, whoever reads and considers, will find the accounts there given regular, consistent, and probable. It will be proper, therefore, to examine the several parts where such alterations are supposed to have been made in the Hebrew text; in order to produce such other external or internal evidence, as shall be necessary to support the charge of interpolation; which ought not to be laid merely upon the authority of any single version.

"The first passage, which is not translated in the Vatican copy of the Greek version, is from the 11th to the 32d verse of the xviii chapter, wherein we have an account—1. Of David's being sent to the camp to visit his brethren.—2. Of his conversation with the men of Israel, relating to Goliath's challenge; and their informing him of the premium Saul had offered to any one that should accept it, and come off victorious.—3. Of Eliab's remarkable behaviour to his brother David, upon his making this inquiry.—And, 4. Of Saul's being made acquainted with what David had said upon this occasion.

"It is obvious to remark upon this passage: 1. That after David had been of so much service to the king, in causing the evil spirit to depart from him; after its being recorded how greatly Saul loved him, and that he had made him his armour-bearer; after the king had sent to Jesse, to signify his intention of keeping his son with him; all of which are particularly mentioned in the latter part of the preceding chapter: the account of his keeping his father's sheep afterward, and being sent to his brethren upon this occasion, must appear to be somewhat improbable.—2. That what is here said of the premium that Saul had offered to him who should conquer the Philistine is not well consistent with the accounts afterward given; of which we shall have occasion to take particular notice.—3. That Eliab's behaviour, as here represented, is not only remarkable, but unaccountable and absurd.—And, 4. That the inquiries of a young man, who is not said to have declared any intentions of accepting the challenge of the Philistine, would scarcely have been related to the king. But now, if this passage be supposed to have been interpolated, we must see how the connexion stands upon its being omitted.

"Verse 11. 'When Saul and all Israel heard these words of the Philistine, they were dismayed, and greatly afraid.'

"Verse 32. 'Then David said unto Saul, Let no man's heart fail because of him; thy servant will go and fight with this Philistine.'

"No connexion can be more proper; and in this view David is represented as being at that time an attendant upon the king: and, when we had been told just before, chap. xvi. 21. that Saul had made him his armour-bearer, we might justly expect to find him with him when the battle was set in array, chap. xvii. 2. In this connexion David is also represented as fully answering the character before given of him; 'A mighty valiant man, and a man of war,' chap. xvi. 18. and ready to fight with the giant upon the first proposal; (for the account of the Philistine presenting himself forty days is in this passage here supposed to have been interpolated, chap. xvii. 16.) I shall leave it to the critical Hebrew reader to make what particular remarks he may think proper in respect to the style and manner of expression in these twenty verses; and let Jesse go for an old man among men in the days of Saul, &c." PILKINGTON'S Remarks upon several passages of Scripture, p. 62.

"The authorities," says Dr. Kennicott "here brought to prove this great interpolation, are the internal evidence arising from the context, and the external arising from the Vatican copy of the Greek version. But how then reads the Alexandrian MS.? The remarks acknowledge that this MS. agrees here with the corrupted Hebrew; and, therefore, was probably translated, (in this part,) from some late Hebrew copy, which had been thus interpolated: see pages 72, 75. Now that these two MSS. do contain different readings, in some places, I observed in pages 398—404. and 414. And in this xviiith chapter of Samuel, ver. 4. the Alexandrian MS. says, (agreeably to the present Hebrew.) that the height of Goliath was six cubits and a span; i. e. above eleven feet: but the Vatican MS. (agreeably to Josephus.) that it was four cubits and a span; i. e. near eight feet.

“And, in ver. 43, what the Vatican renders he cursed David by his gods, the Alexandrian renders by his idols. But though the Hebrew text might be consulted, and a few words differently rendered by the transcriber of one of these MSS. or by the transcribers of the MSS. from which these MSS. were taken; yet, as these MSS. do contain in this chapter, as is almost universally the same (in verb, noun, and participle,) I presume, that they contain here the same translation with the designed alteration of a few words, and with the difference of the interpolated verses found in the Alexandrian MS.

“But, after all, what if the Alexandrian MS. which now has these verses, should itself prove them interpolated? What if the very words of this very MS. demonstrate that these verses were not in some former Greek MS.? Certainly, if the Alexandrian MS. should be thus found, at last, not to contradict, but to confirm the Vatican in its omission of these twenty verses, the concurrence of these authorities will render the argument much more forcible and convincing.

“Let us then state the present question; which is, Whether the twenty verses, between ver. 11. and 32. which are now in the Hebrew text, are interpolated? The Vatican MS. goes on immediately from the end of the 11th verse, (καὶ ἐφοβήσαν οὐδρα.) to ver. 32, which begins καὶ εἶπε Δαυὶδ: whereas the 12th verse in the Hebrew begins not with a speech, but with David's birth and parentage. If, then, the Alexandrian MS. begins its present 12th verse as the 32^d verse begins, and as the 12th verse could not begin properly, I appeal to any man of judgment, whether the transcriber was not certainly copying from a MS. in which the 32^d verse succeeded the 11th verse; and, if so, then from a MS. which had not these intermediate verses? Now, that this is the fact, the case will at once appear upon examining the Alexandrian copy, where the 12th verse begins with ΚΑΙ ΕΙΠΕ ΔΑΥΙΔ; exactly as the 32^d verse begins, and as the 12th verse could not begin properly.

“The case seems clearly to be, that the transcriber, having wrote what is now in the 11th verse, was beginning what is now the 32^d verse; when, after writing καὶ εἶπε Δαυὶδ, he perceived that either the Hebrew, or some other Greek copy, or the margin of his own copy, had several intermediate verses; upon which, without blotting out the significant word ΕΙΠΕ, he goes on to write the addition; thus fortunately leaving a decisive proof of his own great interpolation. If this addition was in the margin of that MS. from which the Alexandrian was transcribed, it might be inserted by that transcriber; but, if it was inserted either from the Hebrew, or from any other Greek copy, the transcriber of this MS. seems to have had too little learning for such a proceeding. If it was done by the writer of that former MS. then the interpolation may be a hundred, or a hundred and fifty years older than the Alexandrian MS. Perhaps the earliest Christian writer who enlarges upon the strong circumstance of David's coming from the sheep to the army, is Chrysostom, in his homily upon David and Saul: so that it had then been long in some copies of the Greek version. The truth seems to be, that the addition of these twenty verses took its first rise from what Josephus had inserted in his variation and embellishment of this history; but that many circumstances were afterward added to his additions.

“For, (and it is extremely remarkable,) though Josephus has some, he has not half the improbabilities which are found at present in the Sacred History: as, for instance, nothing of the armies being fighting in the valley, or fighting at all; when David was sent by his father, as in ver. 19. Nothing of the host going forth, and shouting for the battle, at the time of David's arrival, as in ver. 20. Nothing of all the men of Israel fleeing from Goliath, as in ver. 24: on the contrary, the two armies, (it should seem,) continued upon their two mountains. Nothing of David's long conversation with the soldiers, ver. 25—27; in seasons so very improper, as, while they were shouting for the battle, or while they were fleeing from Goliath; and fleeing from a man after they had seen him, and heard him twice in every day for forty days together, ver. 16: the two armies, all this long while, leaning upon their arms, and looking very peaceably at one another. Nothing of Goliath's repeating his challenge every morning and every evening, as in ver. 16. David, (it is said, ver. 23.) happened to hear one of these challenges; but, if he heard the evening challenge, it would have been then too late for the several transactions before, and the long pursuit after, Goliath's death; and David could not well hear the morning challenge, because he could scarce have arrived so early, after travelling from Beth-lehem to the army, (about fifteen miles,) and bringing with him an ephah of parched corn, and ten loaves, and ten cheeses; as in ver. 17, 18. Nothing of encouraging any man to fight Goliath, by an offer of the king's daughter, ver. 25; which, as it seems from the subsequent history, had never been thought of; and which, had it been offered, would probably have been accepted by some man or other out of the whole army. Nothing of Eliab's reprimanding David for coming to see the battle, as in ver. 28; but for a very different reason: and, indeed, it is highly improbable that Eliab should treat him at all with contempt and scurrility, after having seen Samuel anoint him for the future king of Israel, see chap. xvi. 1—13. Nothing of a second conversation between David and the soldiers, as in ver. 30, 31. Nothing of Saul and Abner's not knowing who was David's father, at the time of his going forth against the Philistine, as in ver. 55. Nothing of David's being introduced to the king by Abner, in form, after killing the Philistine, ver. 57; at a time when the king and the captain of the host had no leisure for complimentary ceremony; but were set out, ver. 57. in immediate and full pursuit of the Philistines.—Nor, lastly, is any notice taken here by Josephus, of what now begins the xviiith chapter, Jonathan's friendship for David, which is related elsewhere, and in a different manner: on the contrary, as soon as Josephus has mentioned Goliath's death, and told us that Saul and all Israel shouted, and fell at once upon the Philistines; and that, when the pursuit was ended, the head of Goliath was carried by David into his own tent, (and he could have then no tent of his own, if he had not been then an officer in the army;) I say, as soon as Josephus has recorded these circumstances, he goes on to Saul's envy and hatred of David, arising from the women's songs of congratulation; exactly as these capital parts of the history are connected in the VATICAN MS. And with this circumstance I shall conclude these remarks; earnestly recommending the whole to the learned reader's attentive examination.

"It must not, however, be forgot, that the learned F. Houbigant has, in his Bible, placed these twenty verses, (from the 11th to the 32d,) between books; as containing a passage which comes in very improperly.

"If it be inquired as to this interpolation in Samuel, when it could possibly be introduced into the text? It may be observed that, about the time of Josephus, the Jews seem to have been fond of enlarging, and, (as they vainly thought,) embellishing the Sacred History, by inventing speeches, and prayers, and hymns, and also new articles of history; and these of considerable length: witness the several additions to the Book of Esther; witness the long story concerning wine, women, and truth, inserted amidst parts of the genuine history of Ezra and Nehemiah, and worked up into what is now called the First Book of Esdras; witness the hymn of the three children in the fiery furnace, added to Daniel; and witness also, the many additions in Josephus. Certainly, then, some few remarks might be noted by the Jews, and some few of their historical additions might be inserted in the margin of their Hebrew copies; which might afterward be taken into the text itself by injudicious transcribers.

"The history of David's conquest of the mighty and insulting Philistine is certainly very engaging; and it gives a most amiable description of a brave young man, relying with firm confidence upon the aid of the God of battle, against a blaspheming enemy. It is not, therefore, very strange that some fanciful rabbin should be particularly struck with the strange circumstances of the Philistine's daring to challenge all Israel; and David's cutting off the giant's head with the giant's own sword. And then, finding that Josephus had said that David came from the sheep to the camp, and happened to hear the challenge, the rabbin might think it very natural that David should be indignant against the giant, and talk valorously to the soldiers, and that the soldiers should mightily encourage David; and then, (to be sure,) this was the most lucky season to introduce the celebrated friendship of Jonathan for David; particularly when, (according to these additions,) Jonathan had seen Abner leading David in triumph to the king's presence; every one admiring the young hero, as he proudly advanced with the grim head of the Philistine in his hand. So that this multiform addition, and fanciful embellishment of the rabbin, reminds one of the motley absurdity described by the poet in the famous lines—

Injungere si velit, et varias inducere plumas, &c.*

"The passage, supposed to be interpolated here, was in the Hebrew text before the time of Aquila; because there are preserved a few of the differences in those translations of it, which were made by Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus. These verses, being thus acknowledged at that time, would doubtless be found in such copies as the Jews then declared to be genuine, and which they delivered afterward to Origen as such. And that Origen did refer to the Jews for such copies as they held genuine, he allows in his Epistle to Africanus: for there he speaks of soothing the Jews, in order to get pure copies from them." KENNICOTT'S Second Dissertation on the Hebrew Text, p. 419.

In the general dissertation which Dr. KenNICOTT has prefixed to his edition of the Hebrew Bible, he gives additional evidence that the verses in question were not found originally in the Septuagint, and consequently not in the Hebrew copy used for that version. Several MSS. in the royal library at Paris either omit these verses, or have them with asterisks, or notes of dubiousness. And the collation by Dr. Holmes, and his continuators, have brought farther proof of the fact. From the whole, there is considerable evidence that these verses were not in the Septuagint in the time of Origen; and, if they were not in the MSS. used by Origen, it is very probable they were not in that version at first; and, if they were not in the Septuagint at first, it is very probable that they were not in the Hebrew text one hundred and fifty years before Christ; and, if not then in the Hebrew text, it is very probable they were not in that text originally. See Dissertation on Gen. p. 9; and Remarks on Select Passages, p. 104.

I have only to remark here, that the historical books of the Old Testament have suffered more by the carelessness, or infidelity, of transcribers, than any other parts of the sacred volume: and of this the two Books of Samuel, the two Books of Kings, and the two Books of Chronicles, give the most decided and unequivocal proofs. Of this, also, the reader has already had considerable evidence; and he will find this greatly increased as he proceeds.

It seems to me that the Jewish copyists had not the same opinion of the divine inspiration of those books as they had of those of the law and the prophets; and have, therefore, made no scruple to insert some of their own traditions, or the glosses of their doctors, in different parts: for, as the whole must evidently appear to them as a compilation from their public records, they thought it no harm to make different alterations and additions, from popular statements of the same facts, which they found in general circulation. This is notoriously the case in Josephus: this will account, and it does to me very satisfactorily, for many of the various readings now found in the Hebrew text of the Historical Books. They were held in less reverence, and they were copied with less care, and emended with less critical skill, than the Pentateuch and the Prophets; and on them the hands of careless, ignorant, and temerarious scribes, have too frequently been laid. To deny this, only betrays a portion of the same ignorance which was the parent of those disorders; and attempts to blink the question, though they may with some be an argument of zeal, yet, with all the sincere and truly enlightened friends of divine revelation, they will be considered to be as dangerous as they are absurd.

Where the rash or ignorant hand of man has fixed a blot on the divine records, let them who, in the providence of God, are qualified for the task, wipe it off: and, while they have the thanks of all honest men, God will have the glory.

There have been many who have affected to deny the existence of giants. There is no doubt that the accounts given of several, are either fabulous, or greatly exaggerated. But men of an extraordinary size are not uncommon even in our own day: I knew two brothers, of the name of Knight, who were born in the same township with myself, who were seven feet six inches high; and another, in the same place, Charles Burns, who was eight feet six! These men were well and proportionably made. I have known others of this height, whose limbs were out of all proportion; their knees bent in, and joints rickety.

Ireland, properly speaking, is the only nation on the earth that produces GIANTS: and let me tell the poor, that this is the only nation in the world that may be said to live on potatoes; with little bread, and less flesh-meat.

I have seen, and entertained in my house, the famous Polish dwarf, the Count Boruwolski, who was about thirty-six inches high, every part of whose person was formed with the most perfect and delicate symmetry. The prodigious height and bulk of Charles Burns, and the astonishing diminutiveness of Count Boruwolski, could not be properly estimated but by comparing both together. Each was a perfect man; and yet, in quantum, how disproportionate! Man is the only creature in whom the extremes of minuteness and magnitude are so apparent; and yet the proportion of the parts in each strictly correlative.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Jonathan and David commence a lasting friendship; and David acts prudently with respect to Saul, 1—5. Saul becomes jealous of David, on account of the esteem in which he is held in Israel; and, in his fury, endeavours to destroy him, 6—12. David is made captain over a thousand; and the people love and respect him, 13—16. Saul, in order to ensnare him, offers him his daughter in marriage, 17—24. And requires a hundred foreskins of the Philistines for a dowry; hoping that, in endeavouring to procure them, David might fall by the hand of the Philistines, 25. David agrees to the conditions, fulfils them, and has Michal to wife, 26—30.

3 Then Jonathan and David made a covenant, because he loved him as his own soul.

Verse 1. When he had made an end of speaking] These five first verses are omitted by the Septuagint. See the notes on the preceding chapter.

Jonathan loved him as his own soul.] The most intimate friendship subsisted between them; and they loved each other with pure hearts fervently. No love was lost between them: each was worthy of the other. They had a friendship which could not be affected with changes or chances; and which exemplified all that the ancients have said on the subject: ἡ φιλικὴ ἰσοτιμία ἐστίν, καὶ μίαν ψυχὴν, τὸν φίλον ἑταίρον αὐτοῦ.—Friendship produces an entire sameness; it is one soul in two bodies: a friend is another self."

Verse 4. Jonathan stripped himself] Presents of clothes, or rich robes, as tokens of respect and friendship, are frequent in the East. And how frequently arms and clothing were presented by warriors to each other, in token of friendship, may be seen in Homer, and other ancient writers.

Verse 5. Set him over the men of war] Made him generalissimo; or what we would call field-marshal.

Verse 6. When David was returned] This verse connects well with the 54th verse of the preceding chapter; and carries on the narration without any break or interruption. See the notes there.

The women came out] It was the principal business of certain women to celebrate victories, sing at funerals, &c.

With instruments of music.] The original word שָׁלָשִׁים shalashim, signifies instruments with three strings: and is, I think, properly translated by the Vulgate, cum sistris, with sistrums. This instrument is well known as being used among the ancient Egyptians: it was made of brass, and had three, (sometimes with instruments of music.

7 And the women answered one another as they played, and said, 'Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands.

8 And Saul was very wroth, and the saying displeased him; and he said, They have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me they have ascribed but thousands: and what can he have more but the kingdom?

9 And Saul eyed David from that day and forward.

10 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that the evil spirit from God came upon Saul, and he prophesied in the midst of the house; and David played with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand.

11 And Saul cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it. And David avoided out of his presence twice.

more,) brass rods across; which, being loose in their holes, made a jingling noise when the instrument was shaken.

Verse 7. Saul hath slain his thousands] As it cannot literally be true that Saul had slain thousands, and David ten thousands, it would be well to translate the passage thus: Saul hath smitten, or fought, against thousands; David against tens of thousands. "Though Saul has been victorious in all his battles; yet he has not had such great odds against him as David has had: Saul, indeed, has been opposed by thousands; David by ten thousands." We may here remark, that the Philistines had drawn out their whole forces at this time; and, when Goliath was slain, they were totally discomfited by the Israelites, led on chiefly by David.

Verse 10. The evil spirit from God] See chap. xvi. 14, &c.

He prophesied in the midst of the house] He was beside himself; made prayers, supplications, and incoherent imprecations: "God preserve my life," "Destroy my enemies;" or such like prayers which frequently escape from him in his agitated state. The Arabic intimates that he was actually possessed by an evil spirit; and that, through it, he uttered a sort of demoniacal predictions.

But let us examine the original more closely: it is said that Saul prophesied in the midst of his house; that is, he prayed in his family, while David was playing on the harp; and then suddenly threw his javelin, intending to have killed David. Let it be observed that the word וַיִּתְּנָהוּ vayethnabe, is the third person singular of the future, hithpaal; the sign of which is not

12 ¶ And Saul was afraid of David, because the LORD was with him, and was departed from Saul.

13 Therefore Saul removed him from him, and made him his captain over a thousand; and he went out and came in before the people.

14 And David behaved himself wisely in all his ways; and the LORD was with him.

15 Wherefore when Saul saw that he behaved himself very wisely, he was afraid of him.

16 But all Israel and Judah loved David, because he went out and came in before them.

17 ¶ And Saul said to David, Behold my elder daughter Merab, her will I give thee to wife; only be thou valiant for me, and fight the LORD's battles. For Saul said, Let not mine hand be upon him, but let the hand of the Philistines be upon him.

only to do an action on or for one's self, but also to feign or pretend to do it. The meaning seems to be: Saul pretended to be praying in his family, the better to conceal his murderous intentions, and render David unsuspecting; who was, probably, at this time, performing the musical part of the family worship. This view of the subject makes the whole case natural and plain.

Verse 11. Saul cast the javelin] The javelin, or spear, was the emblem of regal authority: kings always had it at hand; and, in ancient monuments, they are always represented with it.

In ancient times, says Justin, kings used a spear instead of a diadem: Per ea tempora reges hastas pro diademate habebant. Hist. lib. xliii. And, as spears were the emblems of supreme power, hence they were reputed as attributes of the divinity, and were worshipped as representatives of the gods. Ab origine rerum, pro diis immortalibus veteres hastas coluerunt, ob cujus religionis memoriam, adhuc deorum simulachris hastæ adduntur. Ibid.

Verse 13. Made him his captain] This was under pretence of doing him honour: when it was, in effect, only to rid himself of the object of his envy.

Verse 15. He was afraid of him] He saw that, by his prudent conduct, he was every day gaining increasing influence.

Verse 17. Fight the LORD's battles.] Mr. Calmet properly remarks, that the wars of the Hebrews, while conducted by the express orders of God, were truly the wars of the Lord: but, when the spirit of worldly ambition and domination became mingled with them, they 22 ¶ And Saul commanded his servants, saying, Commune with David secretly, and say, Behold, the king hath delight in thee, and all his servants love thee: now, therefore, be the king's son-in-law.

23 And Saul's servants spake those words in the ears of David. And David said, Seemeth it to you ^alight thing to be a king's son-in-law, seeing that I ^{am} a poor man, and lightly esteemed?

24 And the servants of Saul told him, saying, ^mOn this manner spake David.

were no longer the wars of the Lord, but wars of lust and profanity.

Verse 21. That she may be a snare to him] Saul had already determined the condition on which he would give his daughter to David: viz. that he should slay one hundred Philistines: this he supposed he would undertake for the love of Michal, and that he must necessarily perish in the attempt; and thus Michal would become a snare to him.

Verse 25. But a hundred foreskins] That is, Thou shalt slay one hundred Philistines; and thou shalt produce their foreskins, as a proof not only that thou hast killed one hundred men; but that these are of the uncircumcised.

25 And Saul said, Thus shall ye say to David, The king desireth not any ^adowry, but a hundred foreskins of the Philistines, to be ^eavenged of the king's enemies. But Saul ^pthought to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines.

26 And when his servants told David these words, it pleased David well to be the king's son-in-law: and ^rthe days were not ^sexpired.

27 Wherefore David arose and went, he and ^this men, and slew of the Philistines two hundred men; and ^uDavid brought their foreskins, and they gave them in full tale to the king, that he might be the king's son-in-law. And Saul gave him Michal his daughter to wife.

28 ¶ And Saul saw and knew that the LORD was with David, and that Michal, Saul's daughter, loved him.

29 And Saul was yet the more afraid of David; and Saul became David's enemy continually.

30 Then the princes of the Philistines ^vwent forth; and it came to pass, after they went forth, that David ^wbehaved himself more wisely than all the servants of Saul; so that his name was much ^xset by.

Verse 27. Slew two hundred men] The Septuagint has only one hundred men. Saul covenanted with David for a hundred; and David himself says, 2 Sam. iii. 14. that he espoused Michal for a hundred; hence it is likely that one hundred is the true reading.

Verse 30. Then the princes of the Philistines went forth] Probably to avenge themselves on David and the Israelites; but of this war we know no more than that David was more skilful and successful in it than any of the other officers of Saul. His military skill was greater, and his success was proportionate to his skill and courage; hence it is said, he behaved himself more wisely than all the servants of Saul.

CHAPTER XIX.

Jonathan pleads for David before Saul; who is, for the present, reconciled, 1—7. David defeats the Philistines; and Saul becomes again envious, and endeavours to slay him, but he escapes, 8—10. Saul sends men to David's house, to lie in wait for him; but Michal saves him by a stratagem, 11—17. David flees to Samuel, at Ramah, 18. Saul, hearing of it, sends messengers three several times to take him; but the Spirit of God coming upon them they prophesy, 19—21. Saul, hearing of this, goes after David himself, and falls under the same influence, 22—24.

AND Saul spake to Jonathan his son, and to all his servants, that they should kill David.

2 But Jonathan, Saul's son, delighted much in David; and Jonathan told David, saying, Saul my father seeketh to kill thee: now, therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyself until the morning, and abide in a secret place, and hide thyself:

3 And I will go out and stand beside my father in the field where thou art, and I will commune with my father of thee; and what I see, that I will tell thee.

4 ¶ And Jonathan spake good of David unto Saul his father, and said unto him, Let not the king sin against his servant, against David; because he hath not sinned against thee, and because his works have been to thee-ward very good.

5 For he did put his life in his hand, and slew the Philistine, and the LORD wrought a great salvation for all Israel: thou sawest it, and didst rejoice: wherefore then wilt thou sin against innocent blood, to slay David without a cause?

6 And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan: and Saul sware, As the LORD liveth, he shall not be slain.

7 And Jonathan called David, and Jonathan showed him all those things. And Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he was in his presence, as in times past.

8 ¶ And there was war again; and David went out, and fought with the Philistines, and slew them with a great slaughter: and they fled from him.

9 And the evil spirit from the LORD was upon Saul, as he sat in his house with his javelin in his hand; and David played with his hand.

10 And Saul sought to smite David even to the wall with the javelin; but he slipped away out of Saul's presence, and he smote the javelin into the wall: and David fled, and escaped that night.

11 ¶ Saul also sent messengers unto David's house, to watch him, and to slay him in the morning: and Michal, David's wife, told him, saying, If thou save not thy life to-night, to-morrow thou shalt be slain.

12 ¶ So Michal let David down through a window; and he went, and fled, and escaped.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIX.

Verse 1. That they should kill David.] Nothing less than the especial interposition of God could have saved David's life, when every officer about the king's person, and every soldier, had got positive orders to despatch him.

Verse 2. Take heed to thyself until the morning.] Perhaps the order was given to slay him the next day; and therefore Jonathan charges him to be particularly on his guard at that time, and to hide himself.

Verse 4. Jonathan spake good of David.] It is evident that Jonathan was satisfied that David was an innocent man; and that his father was most unjustly incensed against him.

Verse 5. For he did put his life in his hand.] The pleadings in this verse, though short, are exceedingly cogent; and the argument is such as could not be resisted.

Verse 6. He shall not be slain.] In consequence of this oath, we may suppose he issued orders contrary to those which he had given the preceding day.

Verse 7. He was in his presence, as in times past.] By Jonathan's advice he had secreted himself on that day on which he was to have been assassinated: the king having sworn that he should not be slain, David resumes his place in the palace of Saul.

Verse 9. And the evil spirit from the LORD.] His envy and jealousy again returned; producing distraction of mind, which was exacerbated by diabolic influence. See on chap. xvi. 14.

Verse 10. But he slipped away.] He found he could not trust Saul; and, therefore, was continually on his watch. His agility of body was the means of his preservation at this time.

Verse 11. And to slay him in the morning.] When they might be able to distinguish between him and Michal his wife; for, had they attempted his life in the night season, there would have been some danger to Michal's life. Besides, Saul wished to represent him as a traitor; and, consequently, an attack upon him was justifiable at any time, even in the fullest daylight.

Verse 12. Let David down through a window.] As Saul's messengers were sent to David's house to watch him, they would naturally guard the gate, or lie in wait in that place by which David would come out; Michal, seeing this, let him down to the ground through a window, probably on the back part of the house; and,

13 And Michal took an image, and laid it in the bed, and put a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster, and covered it with a cloth.

14 And when Saul sent messengers to take David, she said, He is sick.

15 And Saul sent the messengers again to see David, saying, Bring him up to me in the bed, that I may slay him.

16 And when the messengers were come in, behold, there was an image in the bed, with a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster.

17 And Saul said unto Michal, Why hast thou deceived me so, and sent away mine enemy, that he is escaped? And Michal answered Saul, He said unto me, Let me go; why should I kill thee?

18 ¶ So David fled, and escaped, and came to Samuel to Ramah, and told him all that Saul had done to him. And he and Samuel went and dwelt in Naioth.

19 And it was told Saul, saying, Behold, David is at Naioth in Ramah.

20 And Saul sent messengers to take there being neither entrance nor issue that way, the liars in wait were easily eluded.

Verse 13. Michal took an image] אֶת הַתְּרָפִים et ha teraphim, the teraphim. The Hebrew word appears to mean any kind of image, in any kind of form, as a representative of some reality. Here, it must have been something in the human form; because it was intended to represent a man lying in bed indisposed.

A pillow of goats' hair] Perhaps she formed the appearance of a sick man's head, muffled up by this pillow, or bag of goats' hair. So, I think, the original might be understood. The goats' hair was merely accidental; unless we could suppose that it was designed to represent the hair of David's head, which is not improbable.

Verse 17. Let me go; why should I kill thee?] That is, If thou do not let me go, I will kill thee. This she said to excuse herself to her father: as a wife she could do no less than favour the escape of her husband; being perfectly satisfied that there was no guilt in him. It is supposed that it was on this occasion that David wrote the sixth Psalm, Deliver me from mine enemies, &c.

Verse 18. David fled and escaped—to Samuel] He, no doubt, came to this holy man to ask advice; and Samuel thought it best to retain him, David: "and when they saw the company of the prophets prophesying, and Samuel standing as appointed over them, the Spirit of God was upon the messengers of Saul, and they also prophesied.

21 And when it was told Saul, he sent other messengers, and they prophesied likewise. And Saul sent messengers again the third time, and they prophesied also.

22 Then went he also to Ramah, and came to a great well that is in Sechu; and he asked and said, Where are Samuel and David? And one said, Behold, they be at Naioth in Ramah.

23 ¶ And he went thither to Naioth in Ramah: and the Spirit of God was upon him also, and he went on, and prophesied, until he came to Naioth in Ramah.

24 *And he stripped off his clothes also, and prophesied before Samuel in like manner, and lay down naked all that day and all that night. Wherefore they say, Is Saul also among the prophets?

for the present, with himself at Naioth, where it is supposed he had a school of prophets.

Verse 20. The company of the prophets prophesying] Employed in religious exercises.

Samuel—appointed over them] Being head or president of the school at this place.

The Spirit of God was upon] They partook of the same influence, and joined in the same exercise: and thus were prevented from seizing David.

Verse 23. He went on and prophesied] The Divine Spirit seemed to have seized him at the well of Sechu; and he went on from that, prophesying, praying, singing praises, &c. till he came to Naioth.

Verse 24. He stripped off his clothes] Threw off his royal robes, or military dress, retaining only his tunic; and continued so all that day and all that night; uniting with the sons of the prophets in prayers, singing praises, and other religious exercises; which were unusual to kings and warriors; and this gave rise to the saying, Is Saul also among the prophets? By bringing both him and his men thus under a divine influence, he prevented them from injuring the person of David. See the notes on ch. x. 6, &c.; and see a Sermon on The Christian Prophet and his Work.

CHAPTER XX.

David complains to Jonathan of Saul's enmity against him; Jonathan comforts him, 1-10. They walk out into the field, and renew their covenant, 11-17. David asks Jonathan's leave to absent himself from Saul's court; and Jonathan informs him how he shall ascertain the disposition of his father toward him, 18-23. David hides himself; is missed by Saul; Jonathan is questioned concerning his absence; makes an excuse for David; Saul is enraged, and endeavours to kill Jonathan, 24-33. Jonathan goes out to the field; gives David the sign which they had agreed on, and by which he was to know that the king had determined to take away his life, 34-39. He sends his servant back into the city; and then he and David meet, renew their covenant, and have a very affectionate parting, 40-42.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Verse 1. David fled from Naiothin] On hearing that Saul had come to that place, knowing that he was no longer in safety, he fled for his life.

Verse 2. My father will do nothing] Jonathan thought that his father would have no evil design against David, because of the oath which he had sworn to himself, ch. xix. 6; and, at any rate, that he would do nothing against David, without informing him.

Verse 3. There is but a step between me and death.] My life is in the most imminent danger. Your father has, most assuredly, determined to destroy me.

The same figure used here, there is but a step between me and death, may be found in Juvenal, who, satirizing those who risk their lives for the sake of gain, in perilous voyages, speaks thus:

*In nunc et ventis animam committe, dolato
Confusus ligno, digitis a morte remotus
Quatuor aut septem, si sit latissima teda.*

Sat. xii. v. 57.

“Go now, and commit thy life to the winds, trusting to a hewn plank, four or seven fingers thick, if the beam out of which it has been cut, have been large enough.”

Verse 5. To-morrow is the new moon] The months of the Hebrews were lunar months, and they reckoned from new moon to new moon. And, as their other feasts, particularly the passover, were reckoned according to this, they were very scrupulous in observing the first appearance of each new moon. On these new moons they offered sacrifices, and had a feast, as we learn from Numb. x. 10. xxviii. 11. And we may suppose that the families, on such occasions, sacrificed and feasted together: To this David seems to refer: but the gathering together all the families of a whole tribe seems to have taken place only once in the year. There is a yearly sacrifice there for all the family. ver. 6.

Verse 8. If there be in me iniquity] If thou seest that I am plotting either against the state, or the life of thy father, then slay me thyself.

Verse 10. Who shall tell me?] Who shall give me the necessary information? What means wilt thou use to convey this intelligence to me?

Verse 11. Come, and let us go out into the field.] In answer to David's question, he now shows him how he shall convey this intelligence to him.

Come, and let us go out into the field. And they went out both of them into the field.

12 And Jonathan said unto David, O LORD God of Israel, when I have sounded my father about to-morrow any time, or the third day, and, behold, if there be good toward David, and I then send not unto thee, and ° show it thee;

13 ¶ The LORD do so and much more to Jonathan: but if it please my father to do thee evil, then I will show it thee, and send thee away, that thou mayest go in peace: and the LORD be with thee, as he hath been with my father.

14 And thou shalt not only, while yet I live, show me the kindness of the LORD, that I die not;

15 But also ° thou shalt not cut off thy kindness from my house for ever: no, not when the LORD hath cut off the enemies of David every one from the face of the earth.

16 So Jonathan made a covenant with the house of David, saying, ° Let the LORD even require it at the hand of David's enemies.

17 And Jonathan caused David to swear again, ° because he loved him: ° for he loved him as he loved his own soul.

18 ¶ Then Jonathan said to David, ° To-morrow is the new moon: and thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be ° empty.

19 And, when thou hast staid three

Verse 12. Jonathan said—O LORD God of Israel] There is, most evidently, something wanting in this verse. The Septuagint has, The Lord God of Israel doth know. The Syriac and Arabic, The Lord God of Israel is witness. Either of these makes a good sense. But two of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. supply the word in chai, "liveth;" and the text reads thus, As the Lord God of Israel LIVETH, when I have sounded my father,—if there be good, and I then send not unto thee; and show it thee, the Lord do so and much more to Jonathan. This makes a still better sense.

Verse 13. The LORD be with thee, as he hath been with my father.] From this, and other passages here, it is very evident that Jonathan knew that the Lord had appointed David to the kingdom.

Verse 14. Show me the kindness of the LORD] When thou comest to the kingdom, if I am alive, thou shalt show kindness to me; and days, then thou shalt go down quickly, and come to the place where thou didst hide thyself ° when the business was in hand, and shalt remain by the stone ° Ezel.

20 And I will shoot three arrows on the side thereof, as though I shot at a mark.

21 And, behold, I will send a lad, saying, Go, find out the arrows. If I expressly say unto the lad, Behold, the arrows are on this side of thee, take them; then come thou: for there is peace to thee, and ° no hurt, ° as the LORD liveth.

22 But if I say thus unto the young man, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee; go thy way: for the LORD hath sent thee away.

23 And as touching ° the matter which thou and I have spoken of, behold, the LORD be between thee and me for ever.

24 ¶ So David hid himself in the field: and when the new moon was come, the king sat him down to eat meat.

25 And the king sat upon his seat, as at other times, even upon a seat by the wall: and Jonathan arose, and Abner sat by Saul's side, and David's place was empty.

thou shalt continue that kindness to my family after me.

Verse 20. I will shoot three arrows] Jonathan intended that David should stay at the stone Ezel, where probably there was some kind of cave, or hiding-place; that, to prevent all suspicion, he would not go to him himself, but take his servant into the fields, and pretend to be exercising himself in archery; that he would shoot three arrows, the better to cover his design; and, that if he should say to his servant, who went to bring back the arrows, "The arrows are on this side of thee," this should be a sign to David that he might safely return to court, no evil being designed to him. But if he should say, "The arrows are beyond thee;" then David should escape for his life, Saul having determined his destruction.

Verse 25. The king sat upon his seat] It seems that there was one table for Saul, Jonathan, David, and Abner; Saul having the chief 27 And it came to pass on the morrow, which was the second day of the month, that David's place was empty: and Saul said unto Jonathan his son, Wherefore cometh not the son of Jesse to meat, neither yesterday nor to-day?

28 And Jonathan answered Saul, David earnestly asked leave of me to go to Beth-lehem:

29 And he said, Let me go, I pray thee; for our family hath a sacrifice in the city; and my brother, he hath commanded me to be there: and now, if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and see my brethren. Therefore he cometh not unto the king's table.

30 Then Saul's anger was kindled against Jonathan, and he said unto him; ^kThou son of the perverse, rebellious woman, do not I know that thou hast chosen the son of Jesse to thine own confusion, and unto the confusion of thy mother's nakedness?

31 For as long as the son of Jesse liveth upon the ground, thou shalt not be established, nor thy kingdom. Wherefore now send and fetch him unto me, for he ^mshall surely die.

32 And Jonathan answered Saul his father, and said unto him. ⁿWherefore shall he be slain? What hath he done?

seat, that next to the wall. As only four sat at this table, the absence of any one would soon be noticed.

Verse 29. Our family hath a sacrifice] Such sacrifices were undoubtedly festal ones; the beasts slain for the occasion were first offered to God, and their blood poured out before him: afterward, all that were bidden to the feast, ate of the flesh. This was a family entertainment, at the commencement of which God was peculiarly honoured.

Verse 30. Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman] This clause is variously translated, and understood. The Hebrew might be translated, Son of an unjust rebellion: that is, "Thou art a rebel against thy own father." The VULGATE, Fili mulieris virum ultro rapientis: "Son of the woman, who, of her own accord, forces the man." The SEPTUAGINT is equally curious, Τὸς κορασιῶν αυτομολούτων: "Son of the damsels who came of their own accord." Were these the meaning of the Hebrew, then the bitter reflection must refer to some secret transaction between Saul and Jonathan's mother; which certainly reflects more 34 So Jonathan arose from the table in fierce anger, and did eat no meat the second day of the month: for he was grieved for David, because his father had done him shame.

35 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field, at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him.

36 And he said unto his lad, Run, find out now the arrows which I shoot. And as the lad ran, he shot an arrow ^rbeyond him.

37 And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and said, Is not the arrow beyond thee?

38 And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make speed, haste, stay not. And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his master.

39 But the lad knew not any thing; only Jonathan and David knew the matter.

40 And Jonathan gave his ^sartillery unto his lad, and said unto him, Go, carry them to the city.

41 ¶ And as soon as the lad was gone, David arose out of a place toward the south, and fell on his face to the ground, dishonour on himself than on his brave son. Most sarcasms bear as hard upon the speaker, as they do on him against whom they are spoken. Abusive language always argues a mean, weak, and malevolent heart.

Verse 34. Jonathan arose—in fierce anger] We should probably understand this rather of Jonathan's grief than of his anger, the latter clause explaining the former; for he was grieved for David. He was grieved for his father; he was grieved for his friend.

Verse 38. Make speed, haste, stay not] Though these words appear to be addressed to the lad, yet they were spoken to David, indicating that his life was at stake, and only a prompt flight could save him.

Verse 40. Jonathan gave his artillery] I believe this to be the only place in our language where the word artillery is not applied to cannon or ordnance. The original כלי keley, signifies simply instruments; and here means the bow, quiver, and arrows.

Verse 41. Until David exceeded] David's distress must, in the nature of things, be the greatest. Besides his friend Jonathan, whom he was now about to lose for ever, he lost his wife, relatives, country; and, what was most afflictive, the altars of his God, and the ordinances of religion.

Saul saw David's growing popularity, and was convinced of his own maleadministration. He did not humble himself before God; and, therefore, became a prey to envy, pride, jealousy, cruelty, and every other malevolent temper. From him David had every thing to fear; and, therefore, he thought it was safer to yield to the storm, than attempt to brave it; though he could have even raised a very powerful party in Israel, had he used the means both of us in the name of the LORD, saying, The LORD be between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed for ever. And he arose and departed: and Jonathan went into the city.

which were so much in his power. But, as he neither sought nor affected the kingdom, he left it to the providence of God to bring him in, by such means, in such a way, and at such a time, as was most suited to his godly wisdom. He that believeth shall not make haste: God's way and time are ever the best; and he who, even in God's way, runs before he is sent, runs at random; runs without light, and without divine strength. Feeble, therefore, must be his own might, his own counsel, and his own wisdom: though he encompass himself with his own sparks, yet this hath he at the Lord's hand; he shall lie down in sorrow.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXI.

Verse 1. Then came David to Nob] There were two places of this name: one on this side, the second on the other side, of Jordan: but it is generally supposed that Nob, near Gibeath of Benjamin, is the place here intended: it was about twelve miles from Jerusalem.

Why art thou alone] Ahimelech probably knew nothing of the difference between Saul and David; and as he knew him to be the king's son-in-law, he wondered to see him come without any attendants.

Verse 2. The king hath commanded me a business] All said here is an untruth, and could not be dictated by the spirit of the Lord: but there is no reason to believe that David was under the influence of divine inspiration at this time. It is well known that, from all antiquity, it was held no crime to tell a lie in order to save life. Thus Diphilus:

4 And the priest answered David, and said, There is no common bread under mine hand, but there is ^d hallowed bread; ^e if the young men have kept themselves at least from women.

Πολεμῶν το φεύδον ἐπὶ σάτρηι ἀγομενον, οὐδὲν περιποιεῖσθαι δυσχερὲς.

"I hold it right to tell a lie, in order to procure my personal safety: nothing should be avoided in order to save life.

A heathen may say or sing thus: but no Christian can act thus, and save his soul; though he, by doing so, may save his life.

Verse 6. So the priest gave him hallowed bread] To this history our Lord alludes, Mark ii. 25. in order to show that, in cases of from before the LORD, to put hot bread in the day when it was taken away.

7 Now a certain man of the servants of Saul was there that day, detained before the LORD: and his name was ¹Doeg, an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen that belonged to Saul.

8 ¶ And David said unto Ahimelech, And is there not here under thine hand spear or sword? for I have neither brought my sword nor my weapons with me, because the king's business required haste.

9 And the priest said, The sword of Goliath the Philistine, whom thou slewest in ^mthe valley of Elah, ⁿbehold, it is here, wrapped in a cloth behind the ephod: if thou wilt take that, take it: for there is no other save that here. And David said, There is none like that; give it me.

absolute necessity, a breach of the ritual law was no sin. It was lawful for the priests only to eat the show-bread: but David and his companions were starving; no other bread could be had at the time; and, therefore, he and his companions ate of it without sin.

Verse 7. Detained before the Lord] Probably fulfilling some vow to the Lord; and, therefore, for a time was resident at the tabernacle.

And his name was Doeg] From chap. xxii. 9. we learn that this man betrayed David's secret to Saul, which caused him to destroy the city, and slay eighty-five priests. We learn from its title, that the fifty-second Psalm was made on this occasion: but these titles are not to be implicitly trusted.

Verse 9. The sword of Goliath] It has already been conjectured, (see ch. xvii.) that the sword of Goliath was laid up as a trophy in the tabernacle.

Verse 10. Went to Achish the king of Gath.] This was the worst place to which he could have gone: it was the very city of Goliath, whom he had slain, and whose sword he now wore; and he soon found, from the conversation of the servants of Achish, that his life was in the most imminent danger in this place.

Verse 13. And he changed his behaviour] Some imagine David was so terrified at the danger to which he was now exposed, that he was thrown into a kind of phrensy, accompanied with epileptic fits. This opinion is countenanced by the Septuagint, who render the passage thus: Ἰδοὺ, ἰδὲς ἀνδρὰ ἐπιληπτικόν, "Behold, ye see an epileptic man. Why have ye introduced him to me?" Μη ἐλαττωμαί ἐπιληπday for fear of Saul, and went to ^oAchish the king of Gath.

11 And ^pthe servants of Achish said unto him, Is not this David the king of the land? Did they not sing one to another of him in dances, saying, 'Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands?'

12 And David ^slaid up these words in his heart, and was sore afraid of Achish the king of Gath.

13 And ^the changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands, and ^uscrabbled on the doors of the gate, and let his spittle fall down upon his beard.

ταρῶσα; "Have I any need of epileptics, that ye have brought him to have his fits before me?" (ἐπιληπτικεῖσθαι πρὸς με.) It is worthy of remark, that the spittle falling upon the beard, i. e. slavering or frothing at the mouth, is a genuine concomitant of an epileptic fit.

If this translation be allowed, it will set the conduct of David in a clearer point of view than the present translation does. But others think the whole was a feigned conduct; and that he acted the part of a lunatic or madman, in order to get out of the hands of Achish and his courtiers. Many vindicate this conduct of David: but if mocking be catching, according to the proverb, he who feigns himself to be mad, may, through the just judgment of God, become so. I dare not be the apologist of insincerity, or lying. Those who wish to look farther into this subject, may consult Dr. Chandler, Mr. Saurin, and Ortlieb, in the first volume of Dissertations, at the end of the Dutch edition of the Critici Sacri.

Verse 15. Shall this fellow come into my house?] I will not take into my service a man who is liable to so grievous a disease. Chandler, who vindicates David's feigning himself mad, concludes thus—"To deceive the deceiver is, in many instances, meritorious; in none criminal. And what so likely to deceive as the very reverse of that character, which they had so misconstrued? He was undone as a wise man; he had a chance to escape as a madman: he tried, and the experiment succeeded." I confess I can neither feel the force, nor the morality of this. Deceit and hypocrisy can never be pleasing in the sight of God.

CHAPTER XXII.

David flees to the cave of Adullam, where he is joined by four hundred men of various descriptions, 1, 2. He goes afterward to Moab; and, by the advice of the prophet Gad, to the forest of Haroth, 3-5. Saul, suspecting his servants of infidelity, upbraids them, 6-8. Doeg informs him of David's coming to Nob; of his being entertained by Ahimelech; on which Saul slays Ahimelech and all the priests, to the number of eighty-five, and destroys the city of Nob, 9-19. Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech, only escapes; he joins with David, by whom he is assured of protection, 20-23.

DAVID therefore departed thence, and ^aescaped ^bto the cave Adullam: and when his brethren and all his father's house heard it, they went down thither to him.

2 ^c And every one that was in distress, and every one that ^d*was* in debt, and every one that was ^ediscontented, gathered themselves unto him; and he became a captain over them: and there were with him about four hundred men.

3 ¶ And David went thence to Mizpeh of Moab: and he said unto the king of Moab, Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, come forth, and be with you, till I know what God will do for me.

4 And he brought them before the king of Moab; and they dwelt with him all the while that David was in the hold.

5 ¶ And the prophet ^fGad said unto David, Abide not in the hold; depart, and get thee into the land of Judah.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXII.

Verse 1. The cave Adullam] This was in the tribe of Judah; and, according to Eusebius and Jerom, ten miles eastward of what they call Eleutheropolis.

Verse 2. And every one that was in distress—debt—discontented] It is very possible that these several disaffected and exceptionable characters might, at first, have supposed that David, unjustly persecuted, would be glad to avail himself of their assistance, that he might revenge himself upon Saul; and so they, in the mean time, might profit by plunder, &c. But if this were their design, they were greatly disappointed; for David never made any improper use of them. They are never found plundering or murdering; on the contrary, they always appear under good discipline; and are only employed in services of a beneficent nature, and in defence of their country. Whatever they were before they came to David, we find that he succeeded in civilizing them, and making profitable to the state those who were before unprofitable. It is not necessary to strain the words of the original, in order to prove that these were oppressed people, and not exceptionable characters, as some have done.

Verse 3. He said unto the king of Moab] David could not trust his parents within the reach of Saul; and he found it very inconvenient to them to be obliged to go through all the fatigues of a military life; and, therefore,

Then David departed, and came into the forest of Harreth.

6 ¶ When Saul heard that David was discovered, and the men that were with him, (now Saul abode in Gibeah under a ^gtree in Ramah, having his spear in his hand, and all his servants were standing about him,)

7 Then Saul said unto his servants that stood about him, Hear now, ye Benjamites; will the son of Jesse ^hgive every one of you fields and vineyards, and make you all captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds;

8 That all of you have conspired against me, and there is none that ⁱshoweth me that ^kmy son hath made a league with the son of Jesse, and there is none of you that is sorry for me, or showeth unto me that my son hath stirred up my servant against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

9 Then answered ^lDoeg the Edomite begs the king of Moab to give them shelter. The king of Moab, being one of Saul's enemies, would be the more ready to oblige a person from whom he might at least expect friendship, if not considerable services.

Verse 5. Get thee into the land of Judah] God saw that in this place alone he could find safety.

Verse 6. Saul abode in Gibeah] Saul and his men were in pursuit of David; and had here, as is the general custom in the East, encamped on a height, for so Ramah should be translated, as in the margin. His spear, the ensign of power, (see on ch. xviii. 11.) was at his hand; that is, stuck in the ground where he rested, which was the mark to the soldiers that there was their general's tent.

And all his servants were standing about him] That is, they were encamped around him; or perhaps here there is a reference to a sort of council of war, called by Saul, for the purpose of delivering the speech recorded in the following verses.

Verse 8. There is none that showeth me] He conjectured that Jonathan had made a league with David, to dethrone him; and he accuses them of disloyalty for not making the discovery of this unnatural treason. Now, it was impossible for any of them to show what did not exist; no such league having ever been made between David and Jonathan.

which was set over the servants of Saul, and said, I saw the son of Jesse coming to Nob, to ^m Ahimelech the son of ⁿ Ahitub.

10 ^o And he inquired of the LORD for him, and ^p gave him victuals, and gave him the sword of Goliath the Philistine.

11 [†] Then the king sent to call Ahimelech the priest, the son of Ahitub, and all his father's house; the priests that were in Nob: and they came all of them to the king.

12 And Saul said, Hear now, thou son of Ahitub. And he answered, [†] Here I am, my lord.

13 And Saul said unto him, Why have ye conspired against me, thou and the son of Jesse, in that thou hast given him bread, and a sword, and hast inquired of God for him, that he should rise against me, to lie in wait as at this day?

14 Then Ahimelech answered the king, and said, And who is so faithful among all thy servants as David, which is the king's son-in-law, and goeth at thy bidding, and is honourable in thine house?

15 Did I then begin to inquire of God for him? be it far from me: let not the king impute any thing unto his servant, nor to all the house of my father; for over the servants of Saul.] In ch. xxi. 7. he is said to be the chiefest of the herdmen that belonged to Saul; and the Septuagint intimate that he was over the mules of Saul. Probably he was what we call the king's equerry, or groom.

Verse 10. And he inquired of the Lord for him.] This circumstance is not related in the history: but it is probably true; as David would most naturally wish to know where to direct his steps in this very important crisis.

Verse 14. And who is so faithful.] The word נֶעְמָן Neeman, which we here translate faithful, is probably the name of an officer. See the note on Numb. xii. 7.

Verse 15. Did I then begin to inquire of God?] He probably means, that his inquiring now for David was no new thing, having often done so before; and without ever being informed it was either wrong in itself, or displeasing to the king. Nor is it likely that Ahimelech knew of any disagreement between Saul and David. He knew him to be the king's son-in-law, and he treated him as such.

Verse 17. But the servants of the king would not.] They dared to disobey the commands of the king, in a case of such injustice, inhumanity, and irreligion.

16 And the king said, Thou shalt surely die, Ahimelech, thou, and all thy father's house.

17 [†] And the king said unto the ^t footmen ^u that stood about him, Turn, and slay the priests of the LORD; because their hand also is with David, and because they knew when he fled, and did not show it to me. But the servants of the king ^v would not put forth their hand to fall upon the priests of the LORD.

18 And the king said to Doeg, Turn thou, and fall upon the priests. And Doeg the Edomite turned, and he fell upon the priests, and ^w slew on that day fourscore and five persons that did wear a linen ephod.

19 ^x And Nob, the city of the priests, smote he with the edge of the sword, both men and women, children and sucklings, and oxen, and asses, and sheep, with the edge of the sword.

Fourscore and five persons.] The Septuagint read τριακούς καὶ πέντε ἄνδρας, three hundred and five men; and Josephus has three hundred and eighty-five men. Probably the eighty-five were priests; the three hundred, the families of the priests; three hundred and eighty-five being the whole population of Nob.

That did wear a linen ephod.] That is, persons who did actually administer, or had a right to administer, in sacred things. The linen ephod was the ordinary clothing of the priests.

Verse 19. And Nob—smote he with the edge of the sword.] This is one of the worst acts in the life of Saul: his malice was implacable: and his wrath was cruel; and there is no motive of justice or policy by which such a barbarous act can be justified.

Verse 20. Abiathar, escaped.] This man carried with him his sacerdotal garments, as we find from chap. xxiv. 6, 9.

CHAPTER XXIII.

David succours Keilah, besieged by the Philistines; defeats them; and delivers the city, 1—6. Saul hearing that David was at Keilah, determines to come and seize him, 7, 8. David inquires of the Lord concerning the fidelity of the men of Keilah toward him, is informed that if he stays in the city, the men of Keilah will betray him to Saul, 9—12. David and his men escape from the city, and come to the wilderness of Ziph, 13—15. Jonathan meets him in the wood of Ziph; strengthens his hand in God, and they renew their covenant, 16—18. The Ziphites endeavour to betray David to Saul, but he and his men escape to Maon, 19—24. Saul comes to Maon; and having surrounded the mountain on which David and his men were, they must inevitably have fallen into his hands, had not a messenger come to call Saul to the succour of Judah, then invaded by the Philistines, 25—27. Saul leaves the pursuit of David, and goes to succour the land; and David escapes to Engedi, 28, 29.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIII.

Verse 1. The Philistines fight against Keilah] Keilah was a fortified town in the tribe of Judah, near to Eleutheropolis, on the road to Hebron.

Rob the thrashing-floors.] This was an ancient custom of the Philistines, Midianites, and others. See Judges v. 4. When the corn was ripe, and fit to be thrashed, and they had collected it at the thrashing-floors, which were always in the open field; then their enemies came upon them, and spoiled them of the fruits of their harvest.

Verse 2. Therefore David inquired of the LORD] In what way David made this inquiry we are not told; but it was probably by means of Abiathar; and, therefore, I think, with Houbigant, that the sixth verse should be read immediately after the first. The adventure mentioned here was truly noble. Had not David loved his country, and been above all motives of private and personal revenge, he would have rejoiced in this invasion of Judah, as producing a strong diversion in his favour, ed him, and said, Arise, go down to Keilah; for I will deliver the Philistines into thine hand.

5 So David and his men went to Keilah, and fought with the Philistines, and brought away their cattle, and smote them with a great slaughter. So David saved the inhabitants of Keilah.

6 And it came to pass, when Abiathar the son of Ahimelech ^c fled to David to Keilah, that he came down with an ephod in his hand.

7 ¶ And it was told Saul that David was come to Keilah. And Saul said, God hath delivered him into mine and embroiling his inveterate enemy. In most cases, a man with David's wrongs would have joined with the enemies of his country, and avenged himself on the author of his adversities; but he thinks of nothing but succouring Keilah, and using his power and influence in behalf of his brethren! This is a rare instance of disinterested heroism.

The Lord said.—Go and smite] He might now go with confidence, being assured of success. When God promises success, who need be afraid of the face of any enemy?

Verse 4. David inquired of the LORD yet again] This was to satisfy his men; who made the strong objections mentioned in the preceding verse.

Verse 5. Brought away their cattle] The forage and spoil which the Philistines had taken; driving the country before them round about Keilah.

hand; for he is shut in, by entering into a town that hath gates and bars.

8 And Saul called all the people together to war, to go down to Keilah, to besiege David and his men.

9 ¶ And David knew that Saul secretly practised mischief against him: and ^ahe said to Abiathar the priest, Bring hither the ephod.

10 Then said David, O LORD God of Israel, thy servant hath certainly heard that Saul seeketh to come to Keilah, ^eto destroy the city for my sake.

11 Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? will Saul come down, as thy servant hath heard? O LORD God of Israel, I beseech thee, tell thy servant. And the LORD said, He will come down.

12 Then said David, Will the men of Keilah ^fdeliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? And the LORD said, They will deliver thee up.

13 ¶ Then David and his men, ^gwhich were about six hundred, arose and departed out of Keilah, and went whithersoever they could go. And it was told Saul that David was escaped from Keilah; and he forbore to go forth.

14 And David abode in the wilderness in strong-holds, and remained in ^ha mountain in the wilderness of ⁱZiph. And Saul ^ksought him every day, but God delivered him not into his hand.

15 And David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life: and David was in the wilderness of Ziph in a wood.

16 And Jonathan, Saul's son, arose, and went to David into the wood, and strengthened his hand in God.

17 And he said unto him, Fear not: for the hand of Saul my father shall not find thee; and thou shalt be king over Israel, and I shall be next unto thee; and ^lthat also Saul my father knoweth.

18 And they two ^mmade a covenant before the LORD: and David abode in the wood, and Jonathan went to his house.

[Verse 8. Saul called all the people together] That is, all the people of that region or district; that they might scour the country, and hunt out David from all his haunts.

[Verse 9. Bring hither the ephod.] It seems as if David himself, clothed with the ephod, had consulted the Lord: and the 10th, 11th, and 12th verses contain the words of the consultation, and the Lord's answer. But see on verse 2.

Verses 11, 12. In these verses we find the following questions and answers: David said, Will Saul come down to Keilah? And the Lord said, He will come down. Will the men of Keilah deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? And the Lord said, They will deliver thee up. In this short history we find an ample proof that there is such a thing as contingency in human affairs: that is, God has poised many things between a possibility of being and not being; leaving it to the will of the creature to turn the scale. In the above answers of the Lord, the following conditions were evidently implied: If thou continue in Keilah, Saul will certainly come down; and, if Saul come down, the men of Keilah will deliver thee into his hands. Now, though the text positively asserts that Saul would come to Keilah, yet he did not come; and that the men of Keilah would deliver David into his hand, yet David was not thus delivered to him. And why? Because David left Keilah;—but had he staid, Saul would have come down, and the men of Keilah would have betrayed David. We may observe from this, that, however positive a declaration of God may appear, that refers to any thing in which man is to be employed, the prediction is not intended to suspend or destroy free-agency, but always comprehends in it some particular condition.

[Verse 14. Wilderness of Ziph] Ziph was a city in the southern part of Judea, not far from Carmel.

[Verse 16. And Jonathan—strengthened his hand in God.] It is probable that there was always a secret intercourse between David and Jonathan; and that, by this most trusty friend, he was apprised of the various designs of Saul to take away his life. As Jonathan well knew that God had appointed David to the kingdom, he came now to encourage him to trust in the Most High; and to assure him that the hand of Saul should not prevail against him: and at this interview they renewed their covenant of friendship. Now, all this Jonathan could do, consistently with his duty to his father and his king. He knew that David had delivered the kingdom: he saw that his father was ruling unconstitutionally; and he knew that God had appointed David to succeed Saul. This he knew would come about in the order of providence; and neither he nor David took one step to hasten the time. Jonathan, by his several interferences, prevented his father from imbruing his hands in innocent blood: a more filial, and a more loyal part, he could not have acted; and, therefore, in his attachment to David, he is wholly free of blame.

Verse 25. The wilderness of Maon.] Maon was a mountainous district, in the most southern parts of Judah. Calmet supposes it to be the city of Menois, which Eusebius places in the vicinity of Gaza; and the Menemi Castrum, which the Theodosian code places near to Beer-sheba.

Verse 26. Saul went on this side of the mountain] Evidently not knowing that David and his men were on the other side.

Verse 27. There came a messenger] See the providence of God exerted for the salvation of David's life! David and his men are almost surrounded by Saul and his army, and on the point of being taken, when a messenger arrives, and informs Saul that the Philistines had invaded the land! But behold the workings of providence! God had already prepared the invasion of the land by the Philistines, and kept Saul ignorant how much David was in his power: but as his advanced guards and scouts must have discovered him in a very short time, the messenger arrives just in the nick of time to prevent it! Here David was delivered by God; and, in such a manner too, as rendered the divine interposition visible.

Verse 28. They called that place Sela-hammah-lekoth.] That is, the rock of divisions; because, says the Targum, the heart of the king was divided to go hither and thither. Here Saul was obliged to separate himself from David, in order to go and oppose the invading Philistines.

Verse 29. Strong-holds at En-gedi.] En-gedi was situated near to the western coast of 25 Saul also and his men went to seek him. And they told David: wherefore he came down ^{into} a rock, and abode in the wilderness of Maon. And when Saul heard that, he pursued after David in the wilderness of Maon.

26 And Saul went on this side of the mountain, and David and his men on that side of the mountain: ^{and} David made haste to get away for fear of Saul; for Saul and his men ^w compassed David and his men round about to take them.

27 ¶ ^{* But} there came a messenger unto Saul, saying, Haste thee, and come; for the Philistines have ^v invaded the land.

28 Wherefore Saul returned from pursuing after David, and went against the Philistines: therefore they called that place ^z Sela-hammah-lekoth.

the Dead sea, not far from Jeshimon: it literally signifies the kid's well; and was celebrated for its vineyards, Cant. i. 14. It was also celebrated for its balm. It is reported to be a mountainous territory, filled with caverns; and, consequently, proper for David in his present circumstances.

How thrashing-floors were made among the ancients, we learn from CATO, De Re Rusticâ, chap. xci. and cxxix. And, as I believe it would be an excellent method to make the most durable and efficient barn-floors, I will set it down.

Area sic facito. Locum ubi facies confodilo; postea amurca conspergito bene, sinitoque combibat. Postea comminuito glebas bene. Deinde coequato, et paviculis verberato. Postea denuo amurca conspergito, sinitoque arescat. Si ita feceris neque formicæ nocebunt, neque herbe nascentur: et cum pluerit, lutum non erit. "Make a thrashing-floor thus: dig the place thoroughly; afterward sprinkle it well with the lees of oil, and give it time to soak in. Then beat the clods very fine; make it level, and beat it well down with a paviour's rammer. When this is done, sprinkle it afresh with the oil lees, and let it dry. This being done, the mice cannot burrow in it, no grass can grow through it, nor will the rain dissolve the surface to raise mud."

The directions of COLUMELLA are nearly the same; but, as there are some differences of importance, I will subjoin his account.

Area quoque si terrena erit, ut sit ad tritumram satis habilis, primum radatur, deinde confodiatur, permixtis paleis cum amurcâ, quæ salem non accipit, extergatur: nam ea res a populatione murium formicarumque frumentum defendit. Tum æquata paviculis, vel molari lapide condensetur, et rursus subjectis paleis inculcetur, atque ita solibus siccanda relinquatur. De Re Rusticâ, lib. ii. c. 20. "If you would have a thrashing-floor made on the open ground, that it may be proper for the purpose, first pare off the surface, then let it be well digged, and mixed with lees of oil, unsalted, with which chaff has been mingled; for this prevents the mice and ants from burrowing and injuring the corn. Then level it with a paver's rammer, or press it down with a millstone. Afterward, scatter chaff over it, tread it down, and leave it to be dried by the sun."

This may be profitably used within doors, as well as in the field: and a durable and solid floor is a matter of very great consequence to the husbandman, as it prevents the flour from being injured by sand or dust.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Saul is informed that David is at En-gedi; and goes to seek him with three thousand men, 1, 2. He goes into a cave to repose, where David and his men lay hid; who, observing this, exhort David to take away his life: David refuses, and contents himself with privily cutting off Saul's skirt, 3-7. When Saul departed, not knowing what was done, David called after him; showed him that his life had been in his power; expostulates strongly with him; and appeals to God, the judge of his innocence, 8-15. Saul confesses David's uprightness; acknowledges his obligation to him for sparing his life; and causes him to swear that, when he should come to the kingdom, he would not destroy his seed, 17-21. Saul returns home and David and his men stay in the hold, 22.

AND it came to pass, ^a when Saul was returned from ^b following the Philistines, that it was told him, saying, Behold, David is in the wilderness of En-gedi.

2 Then Saul took three thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and ^c went to seek David and his men upon the rocks of the wild goats.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIV.

Verse 1. Saul was returned] It is very probable that it was only a small marauding party that had made an excursion in the Israelitish borders; and this invasion was soon suppressed.

Verse 2. Rocks of the wild goats.] The original צורי היקלים tsurey ha-yelim, is variously understood. The VULGATE makes a paraphrase; Super abruptissimas petras quæ solis ibicibus pervie sunt: "On the most precipitous rocks, over which the ibexes alone can travel." The TARGUM, the caverns of the rocks; the SEPTUAGINT make the original a proper name; for, out of צורי היקלים tsurey ha-yelim, they make Σαδδαια, Saddaiem; and in some copies Αιαιαμιν, Aiamein; which are evidently corruptions of the Hebrew.

Verse 3. The sheep-cotes] Caves in the rocks; in which it is common, even to the present time, for shepherds and their flocks to lodge. According to Strabo, there are caverns in Syria, one of which is capable of containing four thousand men: Ων ἐν καὶ τετρακισχιλίου ἀνθρώπων δεξασθαι δυνατόν, lib. xvi. p. 1096. Edit. 1707.

Saul went in to cover his feet] Perhaps this phrase signifies exactly what the Vulgate has rendered it, ut purgaret ventrem. The Septuagint, the Targum, and the Arabic, understand it in the same way. It is likely, that when he had performed this act of necessity, that he lay down to repose himself; and it was while he was asleep that David cut off the skirt of his robe. It is strange that Saul was not aware that there might be men lying in wait in such a place; and the rabbins have invented a most curious conceit to account for Saul's security:—"God, foreseeing that Saul would come to this cave, caused a spider to weave her

3 And he came to the sheep-cotes by the way, where was a cave; and ^e Saul went in to ^e cover his feet: and ^f David and his men remained in the sides of the cave.

4 ^g And the men of David said unto him, Behold the day of which the LORD said unto thee, Behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, that thou web over the mouth of it; which, when Saul perceived, he took for granted that no person had lately been there; and, consequently, he entered it without suspicion." This may be literally true: and we know that even a spider, in the hand of God, may be the instrument of a great salvation. This is a Jewish tradition; and one of the most elegant and instructive in their whole collection.

David and his men remained in the sides of the cave.] This is no hyperbole: we have not only the authority of Strabo, as above mentioned, but we have the authority of the most accurate travellers, to attest the fact of the vast capacity of caves in the East.

Dr. Pocock observes, "Beyond the valley (of Tekoa) there is a very large grotto, which the Arabs call El Maamah, a hiding-place: the high rocks on each side of the valley are almost perpendicular; and the way to the grotto is by a terrace formed in the rock, which is very narrow. There are two entrances into it; we went by the farthest, which leads by a narrow passage into a very large grotto, the rock being supported by great natural pillars: the top of it rises in several parts like domes; the grotto is perfectly dry. There is a tradition, that the people of the country, to the number of thirty thousand, retired into this grotto, to avoid a bad air. This place is so strong, that one would imagine it to be one of the strongholds of En-gedi, to which David and his men fled from Saul: and possibly it may be that very cave in which he cut off Saul's skirt; for David and his men might, with great ease, lie hid there, and not be seen by him." Pocock's Travels, vol. ii. part i. p. 41.

Verse 4. And the men of David said] We know not to what promise of God the men of David refer: they, perhaps, meant no more mayest do to him as it shall seem good unto thee. Then David arose, and cut off the skirt of ^b Saul's robe privily.

5 And it came to pass afterward, that David's heart smote him, because he had cut off Saul's skirt.

6 And he said unto his men, ^k The LORD forbid that I should do this thing unto my master, the LORD's anointed, to stretch forth mine hand against him, seeing he is the anointed of the LORD.

7 So David ^l stayed ^m his servants with these words, and suffered them not to rise against Saul. But Saul rose up out of the cave, and went on his way.

8 ¶ David also rose afterward, and went out of the cave, and cried after Saul, saying, My lord the king. And when Saul looked behind him, David stooped with his face to the earth, and bowed himself.

9 And David said to Saul, ⁿ Wherefore hearest thou men's words, saying, Behold, David seeketh thy hurt?

10 Behold, this day thine eyes have

than to say, "Behold, the Lord hath delivered thine enemy into thy hand; now do to him as he wishes to do to thee."

Then David arose] Though I have a high opinion of the character of David, yet the circumstances of the case seem to indicate that he arose to take away the life of Saul; and that it was in reference to this that his heart smote him. It appears that he rose up immediately, at the desire of his men, to slay his inveterate enemy, and one whom he knew the Lord had rejected: but, when about to do it, he was prevented by the remonstrance of God in his conscience; and instead of cutting off his head, as he might have done, an act which the laws and usages of war would have justified, he contented himself with cutting off the skirt of his robe; and he did this only to show Saul how much he had been in his power.

Verse 6. The LORD's anointed] Howsoever unworthily Saul was now acting, he had been appointed to his high office by God himself; and he could only be removed by the authority which placed him on the throne. Even David, who knew he was appointed to reign in his stead, and whose life Saul had often sought to destroy, did not conceive that he had any right to take away his life: and he grounds the reasons of his forbearance on this, he is my master; I am his subject. He is the Lord's anointed; and therefore sacred, as to his person, in the LORD's sight. It is an awful thing to kill a king, even the most untoward, when he has once been constitutionally appointed to the throne. No experiment of this kind has ever succeeded; the Lord abhors king-killing. Had David seen how that the LORD had delivered thee to-day into mine hand in the cave; and some bade me kill thee; but mine eye spared thee; and I said, I will not put forth mine hand against my lord; for he is the LORD's anointed.

11 Moreover, my father, see, yea, see the skirt of thy robe in my hand: for in that I cut off the skirt of thy robe, and killed thee not, know thou and see that there is ^o neither evil nor transgression in mine hand, and I have not sinned against thee; yet thou ^p huntest my soul to take it.

12 ^r The LORD judge between me and thee, and the LORD avenge me of thee: but mine hand shall not be upon thee.

13 As saith the proverb of the ancients, Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked: but mine hand shall not be upon thee.

14 After whom is the king of Israel come out? after whom dost thou pursue? ^s after a dead dog, after ^t a flea?

taken away the life of Saul, at this time, he would, in the sight of God, have been a murderer.

Verse 7. Suffered them not to rise against Saul.] As he could restrain them, it was his duty to do so: had he connived at their killing him, David would have been the murderer. In praying for the king, we call God the only ruler of princes; for this simple reason, that their authority is the highest among men, and next to that of God himself: hence, he alone is above them. We find this sentiment well expressed by an elegant poet:—

Regum timendum in proprios greges, Reges in ipsos imperium est Jovis.
Horace, Odar. l. iii. Od. i. ver. 5.

Kings are supreme over their own subjects;
Jove alone is supreme over kings.

Verse 13. Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked] This proverb may be thus understood: he that does a wicked act gives proof thereby that he is a wicked man. From him who is wicked, wickedness will proceed: he who is wicked, will add one act of iniquity to another. Had I conspired to dethrone you, I would have taken your life when it was in my power; and thus added wickedness to wickedness.

Verse 14. After a dead dog] A term used among the Hebrews to signify the most sovereign contempt. See 2 Sam. xvi. 9. One utterly incapable of making the least resistance against Saul, and the troops of Israel. The same idea is expressed in the term flea. The Targum properly expresses both thus: one who is weak, one who is contemptible.

Verse 15. The LORD therefore be judge] Let God determine who is guilty.

Verse 16. My son David] David had called Saul his master, lord, and king. Saul accosts him here as his son, to show that he felt perfectly reconciled to him, and wished to receive him, as formerly, into his family.

Verse 19. If a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away?] Or, rather, Will he send him in a good way? But Houbigant translates the whole clause thus: Si quis inimicum suum reperiens, dimittit eum in viam bonam, redditur ei à domino sua merces—"If a man finding his enemy, send him by a good way, the Lord will give him his reward." The words which are here put in italic, are not in the Hebrew text; but they are found, at least in the sense, in the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic; and seem necessary to complete the sense: therefore, adds Saul, the Lord will reward thee good for what thou hast done unto me.

Verse 20. I know well that thou shalt surely be king] Hebrew, Reigning, thou shalt reign. He knew this before; and yet he continued to pursue him with the most deadly hatred.

Verse 21. Swear now] Saul knew that an oath would bind David, though it was insufficient to bind himself: see chap. xix. 6. He had sworn to his son Jonathan that David should not be slain; and yet sought by all means in his power to destroy him!

Verse 22. Saul went home] Confounded at a sense of his own baseness; and overwhelmed with a sense of David's generosity.

David and his men gat them up unto the hold.] Went up to Mizpeh, according to the Syriac and Arabic. David could not trust Saul with his life; the utmost he could expect from him was, that he should cease from persecuting him; but even this was too much to expect from a man of such a character as Saul. He was no longer under the divine guidance; an evil spirit had full dominion over his soul. What God fills not, the devil will occupy.

CHAPTER XXV.

The death of Samuel, 1. The history of Nabal, and his churlishness toward David and his men, 2—12. David determining to punish him, is apposed by Abigail, Nabal's wife, 13—35. Abigail returns, and tells Nabal of the danger that he had escaped; who, on hearing it, is thunderstruck, and dies in ten days, 36—38. David, hearing of this, sends and takes Abigail to wife, 39—42. He marries also Ahinoam, of Jezreel, Saul having given Michal, David's wife, to Phalti, the son of Laish, 43, 44.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXV.

Versé 1. And Samuel died] Samuel lived, as is supposed, about ninety-eight years; was in the government of Israel before Saul from sixteen to twenty years; and ceased to live, according to the Jews, about four months before the death of Saul; but, according to Calmet and others, two years. But all this is very uncertain: how long he died before Saul cannot be ascertained. For some account of his character, see the end of the chapter.

Buried him in his house] Probably, this means not his dwelling-house, but the house or tomb he had made for his sepulture: and thus the Syriac and Arabic seem to have understood it.

^d in Maon, whose ^e possessions were in ^f Carmel; and the man was very great, and he had three thousand sheep, and a thousand goats: and he was shearing his sheep in Carmel.

3 Now the name of the man was Nabal; and the name of his wife Abigail: and she was a woman of good understanding, and of a beautiful countenance: but the man was churlish and evil in his doings; and he was of the house of Caleb.

4 ¶ And David heard in the wilderness that Nabal did ^k shear his sheep.

5 And David sent out ten young men; and David said unto the young men, Get you up to Carmel, and go to Nabal, and ^h greet him in my name:

6 And thus shall ye say to him that liveth in prosperity, ⁱ Peace be both to thee, and peace be to thine house, and peace be unto all that thou hast.

men find favour in thine eyes; for we come in ^m a good day; give, I pray thee, whatsoever cometh to thine hand unto thy servants, and to thy son David.

9 And when David's young men came, they spake to Nabal according to all those words in the name of David, and ⁿ ceased.

10 ¶ And Nabal answered David's servants, and said, ^o Who is David? and who is the son of Jesse? There be many servants nowadays, that break away every man from his master.

11 ^p Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and my ^r flesh that I have killed for my shearers, and give it unto men whom I know not whence they be?

12 So David's young men turned their way, and went again, and came and told him all those sayings.

13 And David said unto his men, Gird ye on every man his sword. And they girded on every man his sword; and David also girded on his sword: and there went up after David about four hundred men; and two hundred ^s abode by the stuff.

of Judah and mount Sinai: it is evident, from the history, that it was not far from Carmel, on the south confines of Judah.

Verse 3. The name of the man was Nabal] The word נבל nabal, signifies to be foolish, base, or villainous; and hence the Latin word nebulo, knave, is supposed to be derived.

The name of his wife Abigail] The joy or exultation of my father. A woman of sense and beauty, married to the hog mentioned above; probably because he was rich. Many women have been thus sacrificed.

Of the house of Caleb.] כלבי ve hu Calebi, "he was a Calebite." But as the word caleb signifies a dog, the Septuagint have understood it as implying a man of a canine disposition, and translated it thus: καὶ ὁ ἀνθρώπος κυνικός, he was a doggish man. It is understood in the same way by the Syriac and Arabic.

Verse 6. Peace be both to thee] This is the ancient form of sending greetings to a friend: Peace to thee, Peace to thy household, and Peace to all that thou hast. That is, may both thyself, thy family, and all that pertain unto thee, be in continual prosperity!

Perhaps David, by this salutation, wished Nabal to understand that he had acted so toward him and his property, that nothing had been destroyed, and that all had been protected: see ver. 15, 16, 17.

Verse 7. Thy shepherds which were with us, we hurt them not] It is most evident that David had a claim upon Nabal, for very essential services performed to his herdsmen at Carmel. He not only did them no hurt, and took none of their flocks for the supply of his necessities, but he protected them from the rapacity of others: they were a wall unto us, said Nabal's servants, both by night and day. In those times, and to the present day, wandering hordes of Arabs, under their several chiefs, think they have a right to exact contributions of provisions, &c. wherever they come: David had done nothing of this kind, but protected them against those who would.

Verse 8. Whatsoever cometh to thine hand] As thou art making a great feast for thy servants, and I and my men, as having essentially served thee, would naturally come in for a share, were we present; send a portion by my ten young men, for me and my men, that we also may rejoice with you. Certainly this was a very reasonable, and a very modest request.

Verse 10. Who is David?] Nabal's answer shows the surliness of his disposition. It was unjust to refuse so reasonable a request; and the manner of the refusal was highly insulting. It is true what his own servants said of him, He is such a son of Belial that one cannot speak to him, ver. 17.

14 ¶ But one of the young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, saying, Behold, David sent messengers out of the wilderness to salute our master; and he ^trailed on them.

15 But the men were very good unto us, and ^u we were not ^v hurt, neither missed we any thing, as long as we were conversant with them, when we were in the fields :

16 They were ^w a wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep.

17 Now therefore know and consider what thou wilt do ; for ^x evil is determined against our master, and against all his household : for he is such a son of ^y Belial, that a man cannot speak to him.

18 ¶ Then Abigail made haste, and ^z took two hundred loaves, and two bottles of wine, and five sheep ready dressed, and five measures of parched corn, and a hundred ^a clusters of raisins, and two hundred cakes of figs, and laid them on asses.

19 And she said unto her servants, ^b Go on before me ; behold, I come after you. But she told not her husband Nabal.

20 And it was so, as she rode on the ass, that she came down by the covert of the hill, and, behold, David and his men came down against her ; and she met them.

21 Now David had said, ^c Surely in vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was missed of all that pertained unto him : and he hath ^d required me evil for good.

22 ^e So and more also do God unto the enemies of David, if I ^f leave of all that pertain to him by the morning light ^g any that pisseth against the wall.

23 And when Abigail saw David, she hastened, ^h and lighted off the ass, and fell before David on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, 24 And fell at his feet, and said, Upon me, my lord, upon me let this iniquity be : and let thine handmaid, I pray thee, speak in thine ⁱ audience, and hear the words of thine handmaid.

25 Let not my lord, I pray thee, ^k regard this man of Belial, even Nabal : for as his name is, so is he ; ^l Nabal is his name, and folly is with him : but I thine handmaid saw not the young men of my lord, whom thou didst send.

26 Now, therefore, my lord, ^m as the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, seeing the LORD hath ⁿ withholden thee from coming to shed blood, and from ^o avenging ^p thyself with thine own hand, now ^r let thine enemies, and they that seek evil to my lord, be as Nabal.

Verse 18. Took two hundred loaves] The Eastern bread is ordinarily both thin and small ; and answers to our cakes.

Two bottles of wine] That is, two goat-skins full. The hide is pulled off the animal without ripping up ; the places where the legs, &c. were, are sewed up, and then the skin appears one large bag. This is properly the Scripture and Eastern bottle.

Five sheep] Not one sheep to one hundred men.

Cluster of raisins] Raisins dried in the sun.

Cakes of figs] Figs cured, and then pressed together. We receive the former in jars, and the latter in small barrels ; and both articles answer the description here given.

Now all this provision was a matter of little worth : and, had it been granted in the first instance, it would have perfectly satisfied David, and secured the good offices of him and his men. Abigail showed both her wisdom and prudence in making this provision. Out of three thousand sheep Nabal could not have missed five : and, as this claim was made only in the time of sheep-shearing, it could not have been made more than once in the year : and it certainly was a small price for such important services.

Verse 20. She came down—and David—came down] David was coming down mount Paran ; Abigail was coming down from Carmel. Calmet.

Verse 22. So and more also do God] Nothing can justify this part of David's conduct. Whatever his provocation might have been, he had suffered, properly speaking, no wrongs ; and his resolution to cut off a whole innocent family, because Nabal had acted ungenerously toward him, was abominable and cruel ; not to say diabolic. He who attempts to vindicate this conduct of David, is, at least constructively, a foe to God and truth. David himself condemns this most rash and unwarrantable conduct, and thanks God for having prevented him from doing this evil, ver. 32. &c.

I. Olymp. 284.

28 I pray thee, forgive the trespass of thine handmaid: for ^dthe LORD will certainly make my lord a sure house; because my lord ^efighteth the battles of the LORD, and ^fevil hath not been found in thee all thy days.

29 Yet a man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy soul; but the soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life with the LORD thy God; and the souls of thine enemies, them shall he ^gsling out, ^has out of the middle of a sling.

30 And it shall come to pass, when the LORD shall have done to my lord according to all the good that he hath spoken concerning thee, and shall have appointed thee ruler over Israel;

31 That this shall be ⁱa no grief unto thee, nor offence of heart unto my lord, either that thou hast shed blood causeless, or that my lord hath avenged himself: but when the LORD shall have dealt well with my lord, then remember thine handmaid.

32 ¶ And David said to Abigail, ^jBlessed be the LORD God of Israel, which sent thee this day to meet me:

36 ¶ And Abigail came to Nabal; and, behold, ^ohe held a feast in his house, like the feast of a king; and Nabal's heart was merry within him, for he was very drunken: wherefore she told him nothing, less or more, until the morning light.

37 But it came to pass in the morning, when the wine was gone out of Nabal, and his wife had told him these things, that his heart died within him, and he became as a stone.

38 And it came to pass about ten days after, that the LORD smote Nabal, that he died.

39 ¶ And when David heard that Nabal was dead, he said, 'Blessed be the LORD, that hath ^ppleaded the cause of my reproach from the hand of Nabal, and hath ^qkept his servant from evil: for the LORD hath ^rreturned the wickedness of Nabal upon his own head. And David sent and communed with Abigail, to take her to him to wife.

Verse 28. And evil hath not been found in thee] Thou hast not committed any act of this kind hitherto.

Verse 29. Shall be bound in the bundle of life] Thy life shall be precious in the sight of the Lord: it shall be found in the bundle of life; it shall be supported by him who is the spring and fountain of life; and ever be found united to those who are most favoured by the Almighty.

Them shall he sling out] Far from being bound and kept together in union with the fountain of life, he will cast them off from himself as a stone is cast out from a sling. This betokens both force and violence.

Verse 37. His heart died within him, and he became as a stone.] He was thunderstruck, and was so terrified at the apprehension of what he had escaped, that the fear overcame his mind: he became insensible to all things around him; probably refused all kinds of nourishment; and died in ten days.

Verse 39. To take her to him to wife.] It is likely that he had heard before this that Saul, to cut off all his pretensions to the throne, had married Michal to Phalti; and this justified David in taking Abigail, or any other woman: and, according to the then custom, it was not unlawful for David to take several wives. his marriage with Abigail, it is probable he became possessed of all Nabal's property in Carmel and Maon.

Verse 43. David also took Ahinoam Many think that this was his wife before he took Abigail: she is always mentioned first in the list of his wives; and she was the mother of his eldest son Amnon.

Of Jezreel] There were two places of this name; one in the tribe of Issachar, the other in the tribe of Judah.

Of Gallim.] Probably, a city or town in the tribe of Benjamin: see Isaiah x. 30. It is likely, therefore, that Saul chose this man because he was of his own tribe.

In this chapter we have the account of the death of Samuel; who, from his infancy, had been devoted to God, and the service of his people. He was born at a time in which religion was at a very low ebb in Israel, as there were but very few prophets, and no open vision; scarcely any revelation from God. Those who might be called prophets, had no regular ministry of God's word: they were extraordinary messengers, sent for a particular purpose, and not continued in the work any longer than the time necessary to deliver their extraordinary message.

Samuel is supposed to have been the first who established academies, or schools, for prophets: at least, we do not hear of them before his time: and it is granted that they continued till the Babylonish captivity. This was a wise institution; and no doubt contributed much to the maintenance of pure religion, and the prevention of idolatry among that people.

Samuel reformed many abuses in the Jewish state; and raised it to a pitch of political consequence to which it had been long a stranger. He was very zealous for the honour of God; and supported the rights of pure religion, of the king, and of the people, against all encroachments. He was chief magistrate in Israel before the appointment of a king; and afterward he acted as prime minister to Saul; though without being chosen, or formally appointed to that station. Indeed, he seems, on the whole, to have been the civil and ecclesiastical governor: Saul being little more than general of the Israelitish forces.

In his office of minister in the state, he gave the brightest example of zeal, diligence, inflexible integrity, and uncorruptedness. He reformed both the people and the king for their transgressions, with a boldness which nothing but his sense of the divine authority could in-went after the messengers of David, and became his wife.

43 David also took Ahinoam ^p of Jezreel; and they were also both of them his wives.

44 ¶ But Saul had given ^s Michal his daughter, David's wife, to ^t Phalti the son of Laish, which was of ^u Gallim.

spire; and yet he tempered it with a sweetness which showed the interest he felt in their welfare, and the deep and distressing concern he felt for their backslidings and infidelities.

He was incorrupt; he received no man's bribe; he had no pension from the state; he enriched none of his relatives from the public purse; left no private debts to be discharged by his country. He was among the Hebrews what Aristides is said to have been among the Greeks: so poor at his death, though a minister of state, that he did not leave property enough to bury him: justice was by him duly and impartially administered; and oppression and wrong had no existence.

If there ever was a heaven-born minister, it was Samuel; in whose public and private conduct there was no blemish; and whose parallel cannot be found in the ancient or modern history of any country in the universe.

Let ministers of state, who have sought for nothing but their own glory, and have increased the public burdens by their improvident expenditure; who have endeavoured, by their wordy representations, to dazzle and delude the people, and impose false grandeur in the place of true greatness and solid prosperity; who have oppressed the many, and enriched the worthless few; fall down at the feet of this heaven-born man, and learn from this immaculate judge of Israel what a faithful servant to his king, and an incorruptible minister of state, means: and, in retiring from their high station, or in going to appear before the judgment-seat of God, see whether, in the presence of their king, and in the face of the thousands of their people, they can boldly say, "Behold, here am I! witness against me before the Lord, and before his anointed, Whose ox have I taken? whose ass have I seized, and whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed (by the imposition of heavy taxes for the support of needless expenses, and the payment of venal men?) Or of whose hand have I taken any bribe to blind my eyes? scrutinize my conduct, examine the state of my family, compare their present circumstances with what they were previously to my administration; and see if you can find aught in my hands." See chap. xii. 1, &c.

Oh, how seldom in the annals of the world, from the assembled heads of the great body politic, can the departing prime minister hear, "Thou hast not defrauded us; thou hast not oppressed us; neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand." This voice can be heard from Gilgal: but of what other minister can this be spoken but of Samuel the seer, who was the gift of God's mercy to the people of Israel; whose memory was too precious to be intrusted to public monuments, but stands, and alas, almost unique, in the Book of God! Of Daniel, and his administration, I shall have occasion to speak elsewhere.

A prime minister, deeply devoted to God, and faithful to his king and to his country, is so rare a character in the world, that when he does occur, he should be held up to public admiration. See the notes on chap. xii. and chap. xxiv. 6.

CHAPTER XXVI.

The Ziphites inform Saul of David's hiding-place, 1. Saul, with three thousand men, goes in pursuit of him, 2, 3. David sends out spies; and finds where Saul had pitched his camp; and he and Abishai come to the camp by night, find all asleep, and bring away Saul's spear, and the cruse of water that was at his head, 4—12. David goes to the opposite hill; awakes Abner, captain of Saul's host; chides him for being so careless of his master's life; and calls on Saul to send one of his servants for the spear; and severely chides him for his continued hostility to him, 13—24. Saul humbles himself to David; promises to persecute him no more; and returns to his own place, 25.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVI.

Verse 1. The Ziphites came] This is the second time that these enemies of David endeavoured to throw him into the hands of Saul. See ch. xxiii. 10.

Verse 2. Three thousand chosen men] Though they knew that David was but six hundred strong, yet Saul thought it was not safe to pursue such an able general with a less force than that mentioned in the text: and, that he might the better depend on them, they were all elect or picked men out of the rest of his army.

Verse 5. David arose] As David and his men knew the country, they had many advantages of Saul and his men; and no doubt could often watch them without being discovered.

Saul lay in the trench] The word במגול bammaegol, which we translate in the trench; and in the margin, in the midst of his carriages; is rendered by some in a ring of carriages; and by others, in the circle; i. e. which was formed by his troops. Luther himself translates it wagenburg, a fortress formed of wagons or carriages.

7 So David and Abishai came to the people by night: and, behold, Saul lay sleeping within the trench: and his spear stuck in the ground at his bolster: but Abner and the people lay round about him.

8 Then said Abishai to David, God ^f hath delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day: now therefore let me smite him, I pray thee, with the spear, even to the earth at once, and I will not smite him the second time.

9 And David said to Abishai, Destroy him not: ^g for who can stretch forth his hand against the LORD's anointed, and be guiltless?

Verse 6. Abishai the son of Zeruiah] She was David's sister; and, therefore, Abishai and Joab were nephews to David.

Verse 8. God hath delivered thine enemy into thine hand] Here Abishai uses the same language as did David's men, when Saul came into the cave at En-gedi; (see ch. xxiv. 4, &c.) and David uses the same language in reply.

Verse 10. The LORD shall smite him] He shall die by a stroke of the divine judgment:—or, his day shall come to die; he shall die a natural death; which, in the course of things, must be before mine; and thus I shall get rid of mine enemy: or, he shall descend into battle, and perish; he shall fall by the enemies of his country. These are the three ordinary ways by which man accomplishes, as a hireling, his day. Murder David could not consider to be lawful: this would have been taking the matter out of God's hand; and this David would not do.

Verse 12. David took the spear and the cruise] The spear, we have already seen, was the emblem of power and regal dignity. But it is usual, in Arab camps, for every man to have his lance stuck in the ground beside him, that he may be ready for action in a moment. The cruise of water resembled, in some measure, the canteens of our soldiers. In such a climate, where water was always scarce, it was necessary for each man to carry a little with him, to refresh him on his march.

A deep sleep from the LORD] It is the same word which is used (Gen. ii. 21.) to describe the sleep which God caused to fall upon Adam, when he formed Eve out of his side.

Verse 15. Art not thou a valiant man] This is a strong irony: ye are worthy to die; ye are sons of death; ye deserve death for this neglect of your king. And had not Saul been so deeply affected with David's generosity, in preserving his life, he had doubtless put Abner and his chief officers to death; though they were not to blame, as their apparent neglect was the effect of a supernatural sleep.

Verse 19. Let him accept an offering] If God have stirred thee up against me, why, then let him deliver my life into thy hand, and accept it as a sacrifice. But as the word is מנחה minchah, a gratitude-offering, perhaps the sense may be this: Let God accept a gratitude-offering from thee, for having purged the land of a worker of iniquity: for, were I not such, God would never stir thee up against me.

But if they be the children of men] If men have, by false representations, lies, and slanders, stirred thee up against an innocent man, then let them be cursed before the Lord. If I am guilty, I deserve to die; if not, those who seek my life should be destroyed.

Saying, Go, serve other gods.] His being obliged to leave the tabernacle, and the place where the true worship of God was performed, and take refuge among idolaters, said, in effect, Go, and serve other gods.

Verse 20. As when one doth hunt a partridge] It is worthy of remark, that the Arabs, observing that partridges, being put up several times, soon become so weary as not to be able to fly, they in this manner hunt them upon the mountains, till at last they can knock them down with their clubs.

It was in this manner that Saul hunted David, coming hastily upon him, and putting him up from time to time, in hopes that he should at length, by frequent repetitions of it, be able to destroy him. See Harmer.

Verse 21. I have sinned] Perhaps the word מנחה chatati, "I have sinned," should be read; ^y Ch. 18. 30.—^z Psa. 7. 8. & 18. 20.

I have erred, or, have been mistaken. I have taken thee to be a very different man from what I find thee to be. Taken literally, it was strictly true. He often purposed the spilling of David's blood; and thus, again and again, sinned against his life.

Verse 25. Thou shalt do both great things, and also shalt still prevail.] The Hebrew is וְגַם אֲשֶׁךְ תַּעֲשֶׂה וְגַם יָצָאֵךְ תִּלְחָץ, ve gam aseh taseh, ve gam yacal tual. "Also in doing thou shalt do; and being able thou shalt be able." Which the Targum translates, also in reigning thou shalt reign; and in prospering thou shalt prosper; which, in all probability, is the meaning.

There is a vast deal of dignity in this speech of David, arising from a consciousness of his own innocence. He neither begs his life from Saul, nor offers one argument to prevail upon forth mine hand against the LORD's ^a anointed.

24 And, behold, as thy life was much set by this day in mine eyes, so let my life be much set by in the eyes of the LORD, and let him deliver me out of all tribulation.

25 Then Saul said to David, Blessed be thou, my son David: thou shalt both do great things, and also shalt still ^b prevail. So David went on his way, and Saul returned to his place.

him to desist from his felonious attempts; but refers the whole matter to God, as the judge and vindicator of oppressed innocence. Saul himself is speechless, except in the simple acknowledgment of his sin: and, in the behalf of their king, not one of his officers have one word to say! It is strange that not one of them offered now to injure the person of David! But they saw that he was most evidently under the guardian care of God, and that their master was apparently abandoned by him. Saul invites David to return; but David knew the uncertainty of Saul's character too well, to trust himself in the power of this infatuated king. How foolish are the counsels of men against God! When he undertakes to save, who can destroy? And who can deliver out of his hands?

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVII.

Verse 1. I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul] This was a very hasty conclusion: God had so often interposed in behalf of his life, that he was authorized to believe the reverse. God had hitherto confounded all Saul's stratagems; and it was not at all likely that he would now abandon him: there was now no additional reason why he should withdraw from David his helping hand.

Verse 2. David arose, and he passed over—unto Achish] There is not one circumstance in this transaction that is not blameable. David joins the enemies of his God, and of his country; acts a most inhuman part against the Geshurites and Amalekites, without even a pretence of a divine authority; tells a most deliberate falsehood to Achish, his protector, relative to the people against whom he had perpetrated this cruel act; giving him to understand that he had been destroying the Israelites, his enemies. I undertake no defence of this conduct of David: it is all bad; all defenceless; God vindicates him not. The inspired penman tells what he did, but passes no eulogium upon his conduct; and it is false to say that, because these things are recorded, therefore they are approved. In all these transactions David was, in no one sense, a man after God's own heart. Chandler attempts to vindicate all this conduct: those who can receive his saying, let them receive it.

had wives and families. David and his company resembled a tribe of the wandering Arabs.

Verse 5. Why should thy servant dwell in the royal city? He seemed to intimate that two princely establishments, in the same city, were too great. Achish appears to have felt the propriety of his proposal; and, therefore, appoints him Ziklag.

Verse 6. Achish gave him Ziklag] Ziklag was at first given to the tribe of Judah; but afterward it was ceded to that of Simeon, Josh. xv. 31. & xix. 5. The Philistines had, however, made themselves masters of it, and held it till the time here mentioned: it then fell into the tribe of Judah again; and continued to be the property of the kings of Judah. This verse is a proof that this book was written long after the days of Samuel: and that it was formed by a later hand, out of materials which had been collected by a contemporary author. See the preface.

10 And Achish said, ⁿ Whither have ye made a road to-day? And David said, Against the south of Judah, and against the south of ^o the Jerahmeelites, and against the south of ^p the Kenites.

11 And David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, Lest they should tell on us, saying, So did David, and so will be his manner all the while he dwelleth in the country of the Philistines.

Verse 9. David smote the land] Here was a complete extirpation of all these people; not one being left alive, lest he should carry tidings of the disasters of his country! The spoil which David took consisted in sheep, oxen, asses, camels, and apparel.

Verse 10. Whither have ye made a road to-day? He had probably been in the habit of making predatory excursions. This seems to be implied in the question of Achish.

Verse 12. He hath made his people—utterly to abhor him] This deception, which, Dr. De-laney says, “did harm to nobody, and to the account of which he is at an utter loss what degree of guilt to charge,” imposed upon Achish, had the most direct tendency to make him imagine himself secure, while in the utmost danger; and to have a faithful friend and able ally in David, while he was the veriest enemy he could possibly have. Shame on him who becomes the apologist of such conduct.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Philistines prepare to attack the Israelites, and Achish informs David that he shall accompany him to battle, 1, 2. Saul, unable to obtain any answer from God, applies to a witch at En-dor to bring up Samuel, that he may converse with him on the issue of the war, 3—11. Samuel appears, 12—14. He reproaches Saul with his misconduct, and informs him of his approaching ruin, 15—19. He is greatly distressed; but, at the solicitations of the woman, and his own servants, he takes some food, and departs the same night, 20—25.

to battle, thou and thy men. 2 And David said to Achish, Surely thou shalt know what thy servant can do. And Achish said to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever.

3 ¶ Now ^b Samuel was dead, and all Israel had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city. And Saul had put away ^c those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land.

4 ¶ And the Philistines gathered themselves together, and came and pitched in ^d Shunem; and Saul gathered all Israel together, and they pitched in ^e Gilboa.

5 And when Saul saw the host of the Philistines, he was ^f afraid, and his heart greatly trembled.

6 And when Saul inquired of the LORD, ^g the LORD answered him not, neither by ^h dreams, nor ⁱ by Urim, nor by prophets.

7 ¶ Then said Saul unto his servants, death, and David's disgrace, were no inconsiderable motives to a new war, from which the Philistines had now every thing to hope.

Thou shalt go out with me to battle] This he said, being deceived by what David had told him.

Verse 2. Surely thou shalt know what thy servant can do.] This was another equivocal answer; and could only be understood by his succeeding conduct. It might imply what he could do in favour of the Philistines against Israel; or in favour of Israel against the Philistines. Achish understood it in the former sense; and, therefore, he said to David, I will make thee keeper of my head for ever: i. e. Thou shalt be captain of my life-guards.

Verse 3. Samuel was dead] And there was no longer a public accredited prophet to consult.

Those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards] See the note on Lev. xx. 31. and Exod. xxii. 18.

Verse 5. When Saul saw] He saw, from the superiority of his enemies, from the state of his own army, and especially from his own state toward God, that he had every thing to fear.

Verse 6. The LORD answered him not] He used the three methods by which supernatural intelligence was ordinarily given:

1. Dreams.—The person prayed for instruction; and begged that God would answer by a significant dream.

2. Urim.—This was a kind of oracular answer, given to the high priest, when clothed with the ephod; on which were the Urim and Thummim. How these communicated the answer is not well known.

3. Prophets.—Who were requested by the party concerned to consult the Lord on the subject in question; and to report his answer. The prophets, at that time, could only be those in the schools of the prophets, whom Samuel had established at Naioth and Gibeah. These were the only successors of Samuel that we know.

Verse 7. Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit] Literally, Seek me a woman, בַּעֲלַת אוֹב, baalath ob, the mistress of the Ob, or Pythonic spirit; one who had a familiar spirit, whom she could invoke when she pleased, and receive answers from him relative to futurity.

Strange, that a man who had banished all such from the land, as dangerous to the state, as impostors and deceivers, should now have recourse to them, as the only persons in whom he could safely put his confidence, in the time in which Jehovah had refused to help him!

At En-dor.] This was a city in the valley of Jezreel, at the foot of mount Gilboa, where the army of Saul had now encamped.

Verse 8. Saul disguised himself] That he might not be known by the woman, lest she, being terrified, should refuse to use her art.

Verse 11. Whom shall I bring up] The woman certainly meant no more than making her familiar personify whomsoever the querist should wish. In the evocation of spirits, this is all that, according to the professed rules of their art, such persons pretend to: for over human souls in paradise, or in the infernal regions, they have no power. If we allow that there is such an art, founded on true principles, said, Bring me up Samuel.

12 And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice: and the woman spake to Saul, saying, Why hast thou deceived me? for thou art Saul.

13 And the king said unto her, Be not afraid: for what sawest thou?
And the woman said unto Saul, I saw gods ascending out of the earth.

14 And he said unto her, What form is he of? And she said, An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself.

15 ¶ And Samuel said to Saul, Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up? And Saul answered, I am sore distressed; for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more, neither by prophets, nor by dreams: therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do.

16 ¶ Then said Samuel, Wherefore then dost thou ask of me, seeing the LORD is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy?

17 And the LORD hath done to him, as he spake by me: for the LORD hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to thy neighbour, even to David:

18 ¶ Because thou obeyedst not the voice of the LORD, nor executedst his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore hath the LORD done this thing unto thee this day.

all it can pretend to is, to bring up the familiar;
cause him, when necessary, to assume the form and character of some particular person;
and to give such notices, relative to futurity, as he is able to collect. And this, even in the cases to which authenticity is generally allowed, is often scanty, vague, and uncertain; for fallen spirits do not abound in knowledge: this is an attribute of God; and rays of this perfection are imparted to pure and holy intelligences; and even Satan himself, as may be seen from most of his temptations, is far from excelling in knowledge. He may be cunning and insidious, but he certainly is not wise and prudent: we,
in general, give this fallen spirit credit for much more wisdom than he possesses.

Verse 12. When the woman saw Samuel] That Samuel did appear on this occasion, is most evident from the text; nor can this be denied from any legitimate mode of interpretation: and it is as evident, that he was neither raised by the power of the devil, nor the incantations of the witch, for the appearances which took place at this time were such as she was wholly unacquainted with. Her familiar did not appear; and, from the confused description she gives, it is fully evident that she was both surprised and alarmed at what she saw; being so widely different from what she expected to see.

Verse 13. I saw gods ascending out of the earth.] The word אלהים elohim, which we translate gods, is the word which is used for the Supreme Being throughout the Bible: but all the versions, the Chaldee excepted, translate it in the plural number, as we do. The Chaldee has, I see מלאכא מלכא malacca diyai, an angel of the Lord—ascending from the earth. This sight alarmed the woman; it was what she did not expect; in this she could not recognise her familiar, and she was terrified at the appearance.

Verse 14. An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle.] This seems to have been a second apparition; she cannot mean that she had seen gods ascending out of the earth, and these gods were like an old man with a mantle. The angelic appearance first mentioned prepared the way for Samuel; and the whole was done so as to show to the woman that her art had not prevailed in the present instance; and that what was now taking place was wholly independent of her incantations.

Saul perceived that it was Samuel] The description was suitable to his person and clothing.

Verse 15. Why hast thou disquieted me] The complaint is not directed against the woman, but against Saul. Indeed, her incantations had no influence in the business; and it does not appear that she had commenced her operations before the angels had prepared the way of the prophet; and before the prophet himself had made his appearance.

That thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do.] In his former difficulties, and when pressed by his enemies, he was in the habit of consulting Samuel; and now he applies to him as his former preceptor. God, he knew, might answer by such a man as Samuel, when he would answer by no other means.

Verse 16. Wherefore then dost thou ask of me?] Was ever I wont to give answers that were not dictated by the Lord? It is his counsel alone that I communicate.

Verse 17. The Lord hath done to him] I believe these words are spoken of Saul; and as they are spoken to him, it seems evident that him should be thee. The Vulgate has tibi, the Septuagint οι, to THEE; and this is the reading of five of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. as well as of both the Bibles printed at Venice, in 1518, where we read לך leca, to THEE, instead of לו lo, to HIM.

As he spake by me] Here was no illusion:
none but Samuel could say this.

Verse 18. Nor executedst his fierce wrath

19 Moreover, the LORD will also deliver Israel with thee into the hand of the Philistines; and to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me: the LORD also shall deliver the host of Israel into the hand of the Philistines.

20 Then Saul ^a fell straightway all along on the earth, and was sore afraid, because of the words of Samuel: and there was no strength in him; for he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night.

21 ¶ And the woman came unto Saul, and saw that he was sore troubled, and said unto him, Behold, thine handmaid hath obeyed thy voice, and I have ^b put my life in mine hand, and have hearkened unto thy words which thou spakest unto me.

upon Amalek] See chap. xv. and the notes there.

Verse 19. To-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me] What an awful message! in the course of the ensuing day thou shalt be slain; thy three sons shall be slain; and the armies of Israel shall be delivered into the hands of the Philistines! Can any person read this, properly considering the situation of this unfortunate monarch, the triumph of the enemies of God, and the speedy ruin in which the godlike Jonathan is about to be involved, without feeling the keenest anguish of heart?

But Samuel says, "he and his sons should be with him." Does not this mean that they were to go to paradise? I suppose it means no more than that they should all die. Yet the paraphrase of the Rev. C. Wesley is beautiful:

"What do these solemn words portend?
A ray of hope when life shall end.
Thou and thy sons, though slain, shall be
To-morrow in repose with me.
Not in a state of hellish pain,
If Saul with Samuel do remain:
Not in a state of damn'd despair,
If loving Jonathan be there."¹

Saul had committed the sin unto death; the sin to be visited with a violent death, while the mercy of God was extended to the soul. Thus say my faith, my hope, and my charity:—and doth not the mercy of God say the same?

Verse 20. Then Saul fell straightway all along on the earth] Literally, he fell with his own length, or with the fulness of his stature. He was so overwhelmed with this most dreadful message, that he swooned away, and thus fell at his whole length upon the ground. The woman, being terrified, had probably withdrawn to some distance at the first appearance of the prophet; and Saul was left alone with Samuel. After some short time, the woman came again unto Saul, found him sore troubled, and offered him those succours which humanity dictated

22 Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou also unto the voice of thine handmaid, and let me set a morsel of bread before thee; and eat, that thou mayest have strength when thou goest on thy way.

23 But he refused, and said, I will not eat. But his servants, together with the woman, compelled him; and he hearkened unto their voice. So he arose from the earth, and sat upon the bed.

24 And the woman had a ^c fat calf in the house; and she hasted, and killed it, and took flour, and kneaded it, and did bake ^d unleavened bread thereof;

25 And she brought it before Saul, and before his servants; and they did eat. Then they arose up, and went away that night.

^b Judg. 12. 3. Chap. 19. 5. Job 13. 14.—^c Gen. 18. 6, 7, 8.
^d Gen. 19. 3.

Verse 23. I will not eat] It is no wonder that not only his strength, but also his appetite, had departed from him.

And sat upon the bed] Beds, or couches, were the common places on which the ancients sat to take their repasts.

Verse 24. The woman had a fat calf] The ancients used great despatch in their cookery. In hot countries they could not keep flesh meat by them any length of time: hence they generally kept young animals, such as calves, lambs, and kids, ready for slaughter: and when there was occasion, one of them was killed, and dressed immediately.

Unleavened bread] There was not time to bake leavened bread: that would have taken considerable time, in order that the leaven might leaven the whole lump.

Verse 25. They rose up, and went away that night] The transactions of this chapter occupy one night only. 1. Saul came by night to En-dor, ver. 8. 2. He consulted the woman, and had his conference with Samuel the same night; for no time whatever appears to have been lost after his arrival at En-dor. 3. He was overcome by the heavy tidings which he heard: and which, for a time, appear to have deprived him of all power. 4. The woman kills a calf; dresses a part; makes and bakes bread; and Saul and his servants eat. And, 5. They rose and went away that night, ver. 25. The next day, in all probability, the battle happened, in which Israel was defeated, and Saul and his sons lost their lives.

THERE is a considerable diversity of opinion, both among learned and pious men, relative to the subject mentioned in this chapter, that of raising Samuel from the dead. Some deny the possibility of the thing, and say that it was the devil that personified Samuel: and others, that the whole was the imposition of this cunning woman; and that there was no supernatural agency in the business. This is not a proper place to argue the point. I have given my opinion in the notes. I may sum up in a few particulars.

1. I believe there is a supernatural and spiritual world, in which HUMAN spirits, both good and bad, live in a state of consciousness.

2. I believe there is an invisible world, in which various orders of spirits, not human, live and act.

3. I believe that any of these spirits may, according to the order of God, in the laws of their place of residence, have intercourse with this world, and become visible to mortals.

4. I believe there is a possibility, by arts not strictly good, to evoke and have intercourse with spirits, not HUMAN; and to employ in a certain limited way, their power and influence.

5. I believe that the woman of En-dor had no power over Samuel; nor that any incantation can avail over any departed saint of God; nor indeed over any human spirit.

6. I believe Samuel did actually appear to Saul, and that he was sent, by the especial mercy of God, to warn this infatuated king of his approaching death, that he might have an opportunity to make his peace with his Maker.

7. I believe that the woman found, from the appearances, that her real or pretended charms had no effect; and that, what now took place, came from a totally different disposition of things from those with which she was conversant.

8. I believe that direct, circumstantial, and unequivocal oracles were now delivered, concerning which neither human nor diabolical wisdom could foresee or penetrate; that the defeat of the Israelites, and the death of Saul and his three sons on the following day, were matters which, from their nature, could only be known to God himself; and that no demon or bad spirit could be employed in such a transaction.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIX.

Verse 1. To Aphek] This was a place in the valley of Jezreel, between mount Tabor and Gilboa.

Pitched by a fountain] To be near a fountain, or copious spring of water, was a point of great importance to an army in countries such as these, where water was so very scarce. It is supposed that it was at this same fountain that, William of Tyre says, Saladin pitched his camp, while Baldwin, king of Jerusalem, pitched his by another fountain, between Nazareth and Sepphoris; each being anxious to secure that without which it was impossible for their armies to subsist.

Verse 2. By hundreds, and by thousands]

They were probably divided, as the Jewish armies, by fifties, hundreds, and thousands; each having its proper officer or captain.

Verse 3. These days, or these years] I suppose these words to mark no definite time; and may be understood thus: "Is not this David, who has been with me for a considerable time?"

Verse 4. The princes of the Philistines were wroth] It is strange that they had not yet heard of David's destruction of a village of the Geshurites, Gezrites, and Amalekites, chap. xxvii. Had they heard of this, they would have seen much more cause for suspicion.

Verse 6. Thou hast been upright] So he thought; for, as yet, he had not heard of the above transaction; David having given him to understand that he had been fighting against Israel.

Verse 8. David said—what have I done?]
Dr. Chandler, and others, may say what they will to make David act a consistent part in this business; but it is most evident, whatever his intentions might be as to the part he was to take in the approaching battle, he did intend to persuade Achish that he would fight against Israel; and affects to feel his reputation injured by not being permitted, on this occasion, to show his fidelity to the king of Gath.

It was in the order of God's gracious providence that the Philistine lords refused to let David go with them to this battle. Had he gone, he had his choice of two sins: First, If he had fought for the Philistines, he would have fought against God, and his country. Secondly, If he had in the battle gone over to the Israelites, he would have deceived, and become a traitor to the hospitable Achish. God, therefore, so ordered it, in his mercy, that he was not permitted to go to a battle in which he was sure to be disgraced, whatever side he took, or with what success soever he might be crowned.

Verse 9. As an angel of God] There is some reason to think that Achish had actually embraced, or was favourably disposed toward, the Jewish religion. He speaks here of the angels of God, as a Jew might be expected to speak; and, in ver. 6. he appeals to, and swears by, Jehovah: which, perhaps, no Philistine ever did. It is possible that he might have learned many important truths from David, during the time he sojourned with him.

Verse 10. With thy master's servants] Who were these? has been very properly asked; and, to this question, there can be but two answers:

1. The six hundred Israelites which were with him; and who might still be considered the subjects of SAUL, though now residing in a foreign land.

2. The servants of ACHISH: i. e. David's men thus considered; because, on his coming to Gath, he had, in effect, given up himself and his men to Achish. But Saul may be the master to whom Achish refers, and the words convey a delicate information to David that he is no vassal, but still at liberty.

CHAPTER XXX.

While David is absent with the army of Achish, the Amalekites invade Ziklag, and burn it with fire; and carry away captive David's wives, and those of his men, 1, 2. David and his men return; and, finding the desolate state of their city, are greatly affected, 3—5. The men mutiny, and threaten to stone David, who encourages himself in the Lord, 6. David inquires of the Lord, and is directed to pursue the Amalekites; with the promise that he shall recover all, 7, 8. He and his men begin the pursuit; but two hundred, through fatigue, are obliged to stay behind, at the brook Besor, 9, 10. They find a sick Egyptian, who directs them in their pursuit, 11—15. David finds the Amalekites secure, feasting on the spoils they had taken; he attacks and destroys the whole host, except four hundred, who escape on camels, 16, 17. The Israelites recover their wives, their families, and all their goods, 18—20. They come to the two hundred who were so faint as not to be able to pursue the enemy, with whom they divide the spoil; and this becomes a statute in Israel, 21—25. David sends part of the spoil which he had taken to different Jewish cities, which had suffered by the incursion of the Amalekites; and where David and his men had been accustomed to resort, 26—31.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXX.

Verse 1. On the third day] This was the third day after he had left the Philistine army at Aphek. Culmet supposes that Aphek was distant from Ziklag more than thirty leagues.

The Amalekites had invaded] These were, doubtless, a travelling predatory horde; who, availing themselves of the war between the Philistines and Israelites, plundered several unprotected towns, and among them Ziklag.

It is likely they had not heard of what David did to some of their tribes, else they would have avenged themselves by slaying all they found in Ziklag.

slew not any; either great or small, but carried them away, and went on their way.

3 ¶ So David and his men came to the city, and, behold, it was burnt with fire; and their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, were taken captives.

4 Then David and the people that were with him lifted up their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep.

5 And David's ^ctwo wives were taken captives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite.

6 And David was greatly distressed; ^dfor the people spake of stoning him, because the soul of all the people was ^egrieved, every man for his sons and for his daughters: ^fbut David encouraged himself in the LORD his God.

7 ^gAnd David said to Abiathar the priest, Ahimelech's son, I pray thee, bring me hither the ephod. And Abiathar brought thither the ephod to David.

8 ^hAnd David inquired at the LORD, saying, Shall I pursue after this troop? shall I overtake them? And he answered him, Pursue; for thou shalt Verse 4. Wept, until they had no more power to weep.] This marks great distress; they wept, as says the Vulgate, till their tears failed them.

Verse 6. The people spake of stoning him] David had done much to civilize those men; but we find, by this, of what an unruly and ferocious spirit they were: and yet they strongly felt the ties of natural affection; they grieved every man for his sons and for his daughters.

David encouraged himself in the LORD] He found he could place very little confidence in his men; and, as he was conscious that this evil had not happened either through his neglect or folly, he saw he might the more confidently expect succour from his Maker.

Verse 7. Bring me hither the ephod] It seems as if David had put on the ephod, and inquired of the Lord for himself: but it is more likely that he caused Abiathar to do it.

Verse 9. The brook Besor] This had its source in the mountain of Idumea, and fell into the Mediterranean sea beyond Gaza. Some suppose it to have been the same with the river of the wilderness, or the river of Egypt. The sense of this, and the following verse, is, that when they came to the brook Besor, there were found two hundred out of his six hundred surely overtake them, and without fail recover all.

9 ¶ So David went, he and the six hundred men that were with him, and came to the brook Besor, where those that were left behind stayed.

10 But David pursued, he and four hundred men: ⁱfor two hundred abode behind, which were so faint that they could not go over the brook Besor.

11 And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David, and gave him bread, and he did eat; and they made him drink water;

12 And they gave him a piece of a cake of figs, and two clusters of raisins: and ^kwhen he had eaten, his spirit came again to him: for he had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water, three days and three nights.

13 And David said unto him, To whom belongeth thou? and whence art thou? And he said, I am a young man of Egypt, servant to an Amalekite; and my master left me here, because three days ago I fell sick.

14 We made an invasion upon the south of ^lthe Cherethites, and upon the coast which belongeth to Judah, and upon the south of ^mCaleb; and we burnt Ziklag with fire.

men so spent with fatigue, that they could proceed no farther. The baggage, or stuff, was left there, (ver. 24.) and they were appointed to guard it.

Verse 12. A piece of a cake of figs] See on chap. xxv. 18.

Verse 13. My master left me, because three days ago I fell sick] This was very inhuman; though they had booty enough, and no doubt asses plenty to carry the invalids, yet they left this poor man to perish: and God visited it upon them; as he made this very person the means of their destruction, by the information which he was enabled to give to David and his men.

Verse 14. Upon the south of the Cherethites] Calmet and others maintain that the cherethi, which, without the points, might be read Creti, were not only at this time Philistines, but that they were aborigines of Crete, from which they had their name Cerethites, or Cretans; and are the same of whom Zephaniah speaks, chap. ii. 5. Wo to the inhabitants of the seacoasts, the nation of the Cherethites. And by Ezekiel, chap. xxv. 16. Behold, I will stretch out mine hand upon the Philistines, and will cut off the Cherethim. In 2 Sam. xv. 18. we find that the Cherethites formed a part of David's guards.

15 And David said to him, Canst thou bring me down to this company? And he said, Swear unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my master, and I will bring thee down to this company.

16 ¶ And when he had brought him down, behold, they were spread abroad upon all the earth, ^aeating, and drinking, and dancing, because of all the great spoil that they had taken out of the land of the Philistines, and out of the land of Judah.

17 And David smote them from the twilight even unto the evening of ^othe next day: and there escaped not a man of them, save four hundred young men, which rode upon camels, and fled.

18 And David recovered all that the Amalekites had carried away: and David rescued his two wives.

19 And there was nothing lacking to them, neither small nor great, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil, nor any thing that they had taken to them: ^pDavid recovered all.

South of Caleb] Somewhere about Kirjath-arba, or Hebron, and Kirjath-sepher; these being in the possession of Caleb and his descendants.

Verse 15. Swear unto me] At the conclusion of this verse, the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, add, that David swore to him. This is not expressed in the Hebrew, but is necessarily implied.

Verse 16. Out of the land of the Philistines] That these Amalekites were enemies to the Philistines is evident; but it certainly does not follow from this that those whom David destroyed were enemies also. This, I think, has been too hastily assumed by Dr. Chandler, and others, in order to vindicate, the better, the character of David.

Verse 17. There escaped not a man of them] It is well known to every careful reader of the Bible, that the Amalekites were a proscribed people, even by God himself; and that, in extirpating them, it has been supposed David fulfilled the express will of God. But all this depends on whether he had an express commission to do so, received from God himself, as Saul had.

Verse 20. And David took all the flocks] He and his men not only recovered all their own property, but they recovered all the spoil which these Amalekites had taken from the south of 21 And David came to the ^atwo hundred men, which were so faint that they could not follow David, whom they had made also to abide at the brook Besor: and they went forth to meet David, and to meet the people that were with him: and when David came near to the people, he ^asaluted them.

22 ¶ Then answered all the wicked men, and men ^tof Belial, of ^uthose that went with David, and said, Because they went not with us, we will not give them ought of the spoil that we have recovered, save to every man his wife and his children, that they may lead them away, and depart.

23 Then said David, Ye shall not do so, my brethren, with that which the LORD hath given us, who hath preserved us, and delivered the company that came against us into our hand.

24 For who will hearken unto you in this matter? but ^vas his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff: they shall part alike.

25 And it was so from that day ^wforward, that he made it a statute and an ordinance for Israel unto this day.

Judah, the Cherethites, and the south of Caleb. When this was separated from the rest, it was given to David, and called David's spoil.

Verse 22. Men of Belial] This is a common expression, to denote the sour, the rugged, the severe, the idle, and the profane.

Verse 23. That which the LORD hath given us] He very properly attributes this victory to God; the numbers of the Amalekites being so much greater than his own. Indeed, as many fled away on camels as were in the whole host of David.

Verse 25. He made it a statute and an ordinance for Israel] Nothing could be more just and proper than this law: he who stays at home to defend house and property, has an equal right to the booty taken by those who go out to the war. There was a practice of this kind among the Israelites long before this time; see Numb. xxxi. 27. and Josh. xxii. 8. and the note on this latter verse.

Unto this day] This is another indication that this book was composed long after the facts it commemorates. See hypothesis in the preface.

Verse 31. To them which were in Hebron]
This was a place strongly attached to David, and David to it; and the place where he was proclaimed king; and where he reigned more than seven years, previously to the death of Ishbosheth, Saul's son, who was, for that time, his competitor in the kingdom.

David's having sent presents to all these places, not only shows his sense of gratitude, but that the booty which he took from the Amalekites must have been exceedingly great.
And we learn from this also, that David sojourned in many places which are not mentioned in the preceding history; for these are all said to be places where David and his men were wont to haunt.

We are not to suppose that the transactions mentioned here, and in the preceding chapter, took place after Saul's interview with the woman of En-dor; they were considerably antecedent to this, but how long we do not know.
What is recorded in the following chapter must have taken place the next day after Saul

send the news to all the houses of their idols, and fasten the bodies of Saul and his three sons to the walls of Beth-shan,

5 And when his armour-bearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell likewise upon his sword, and died with him.

6 So Saul died, and his three sons, and his armour-bearer, and all his men, that same day together.

Verse 3. He was sore wounded of the archers.] It is likely that Saul's sons were slain by the archers; and that Saul was now mortally wounded by the same. Houbigant translates, The archers rushed upon him, from whom he received a grievous wound. He farther remarks that, had not Saul been grievously wounded, and beyond hope of recovery, he would not have wished his armour-bearer to despatch him; as he might have continued still to fight, or have made his escape from this most disastrous battle. Some of the versions render it, He feared the archers greatly; but this is by no means likely.

Verse 4. Draw thy sword, and thrust me through] Dr. Delaney has some good observations on this part of the subject; "Saul and his armour-bearer died by the same sword. That his armour-bearer died by his own sword is out of all doubt, the text expressly tells us so; and that Saul perished by the same sword is sufficiently evident. Draw thy sword, says he to him, and thrust me through; which, when he refused, Saul, says the text, took the sword ^{אֶת הַחֶרֶב} ath ha chereb, (the very sword,) and fell upon it. What sword? Not his own, for then the text would have said so; but, in the plain, natural, grammatical construction, the sword before mentioned must be the sword now referred to, that is, his armour-bearer's, 1 Chron. x. 4, 5. Now, it is the established tradition of all the Jewish nation, that this armour-bearer was Doeg; and I see no reason why it should be discredited: and, if so, then Saul and his executioner both fell by that weapon with which they had before massacred the priests of God. So Brutus and Cassius killed themselves with the same swords with which they stabbed Cæsar; and Calippus was stabbed with the same sword with which he stabbed Dio."

Verse 6. And all his men] Probably meaning those of his troops which were his life or body guards: as to the bulk of the army, it fled at the commencement of the battle, ver. 1.

Verse 7. The men of Israel that were on the other side of the valley] They appear to have been panic-struck, and therefore fled as far as they could out of the reach of the Philistines. As the Philistines possessed Beth-shan, situated near to Jordan, the people on the other side of that river, fearing for their safety, fled also.

Verse 8: On the morrow] It is very likely that the battle and pursuit continued till the night, so that there was no time till the next day to strip and plunder the slain.

Verse 9. And they cut off his head] It is possible that they cut off the heads of his three sons likewise: for, although only his head is said to be cut off, and his body only to be fastened to the walls of Beth-shan, yet we find that the men of Jabesh-gilead found both his body, and the bodies of his three sons, fastened to the walls, ver. 12.

Perhaps they only took off Saul's head, which they sent about to their temples, as a trophy of their victory, when they sent the news of the defeat of the Israelites through all their coasts; and at last placed it in the temple of Dagon, 1 Chron. x. 10.

Verse 10. They put his armour in the house of Ashtaroth] As David had done, in placing the sword of Goliath in the tabernacle. We have already seen, that it was common for the conquerors to consecrate armour and spoils, taken in war, to those who were the objects of religious worship.

They fastened his body to the wall] Probably by means of iron hooks: but it is said, (2 Sam. xxi. 12.) that these bodies were fastened in the street of Beth-shan. This may mean, that the place where they were fastened to the wall, was the main street or entrance into the city.

bash-gilead^d was an act of gratitude due to Saul, who, at the very commencement of his reign, rescued them from Nahash, king of the Ammonites; (see ch. xi. 1, &c.) and, by his timely succours, he saved them from the deepest degradation, and the most oppressive tyranny. This heroic act, with the seven days' fast, showed that they retained a due sense of their obligation to this unfortunate monarch.

Verse 12. And burnt them there] It has been denied that the Hebrews burnt the bodies of the dead; but that they buried them in the earth, or embalmed them; and often burnt spices around them, &c. These, no doubt, were the common forms of sepulture; but neither of these could be conveniently practised in the present case. They could not have buried them about Beth-shan, without being discovered; and as to embalming, that was most likely out of all question; as, doubtless, the bodies were now too putrid to bear it. They, therefore, burnt them, because there was no other way of disposing of them at that time, so as to do them honour: and the bones and ashes they collected, and buried under a tree, or in a grove at Jabesh.

Verse 13. And fasted seven days] To testify their sincere regret for his unfortunate death; and the public calamity that had fallen upon the land.

Thus ends the troublesome, and I had almost said, the useless, reign of Saul. A king was chosen in opposition to the will of the Most High; and the government of God, in effect, rejected, to make way for this king.

Saul was, at first, a very humble young man, and conducted himself with great propriety; but his elevation made him proud, and he soon became tyrannical in his private conduct, and in his political measures. His natural temper was not good: he was peevish, fretful, and often outrageous; and these bad dispositions, unchecked by proper application to the grace of God, became every day more headstrong and dangerous. Through their violence, he seems at times to have been wholly carried away, and deranged; and this derangement appears to have been occasionally greatly exacerbated by diabolical influence. This led him to take his friends for his foes, so that, in his paroxysms, he strove to imbrue his hand in their blood; and more than once to attempt to assassinate his own son! and most causelessly and inhumanly ordered the innocent priests of the Lord at Nob to be murdered. This was the worst act in his whole life.

Saul was but ill qualified for a proper discharge of the regal functions. The reader will remember that he was chosen rather as general of the armies, than as civil governor. The administration of the affairs of the state was left chiefly to Samuel; and Saul led forth the armies to battle.

As a general, he gave proof of considerable capacity: he was courageous, prompt, decisive, and persevering; and, except in the last unfortunate battle, in which he lost his life, generally led his troops to victory.

Saul was a weak man, and very capricious: this is amply proved by his unreasonable jealousy against David, and his continual suspicion that all were leagued against him. It is also evident, in his foolish adjuration relative to the matter of the honey, (see ch. xiv.) in which, to save his rash and nonsensical oath, he would have sacrificed Jonathan his son!

The question, "Was Saul a good king?" has already, in effect, been answered. He was, on the whole, a good man, as far as we know, in private life; but he was a bad king; for he endeavoured to reign independently of the Jewish constitution: he, in effect, assumed the sacerdotal office and functions, and thus even changed what was essential to that constitution. He not only offered sacrifices which belonged to the priests alone; but, in the most positive manner, went opposite to the orders of that God whose vicegerent he was.

Of his conduct, in visiting the woman at En-dor, I have already given my opinion; and to this I must refer. His desperate circumstances imposed on the weakness of his mind; and he did, in that instance, an act which, in his jurisprudential capacity, he had disapproved by the edict which banished all witches, &c. from Israel. Yet, in this act, he only wished to avail himself of the counsel and advice of his friend Samuel.

To the question, "Was not Saul a self-murderer?" I scruple not to answer, "No." He was, to all appearance, mortally wounded, when he begged his armour-bearer to extinguish the remaining spark of life; and he was afraid that the Philistines might abuse his body, if they found him alive; and we can scarcely say how much of indignity is implied in this word; and his falling on his sword was a fit of desperation, which, doubtless, was the issue of a mind greatly agitated, and full of distraction. A few minutes longer, and his life would, in all probability, have ebbed out: but, though this wound accelerated his death, yet it could not be properly the cause of it, as he was mortally wounded before; and did it on the conviction that he could not survive.

Taking Saul's state and circumstances together, I believe there is not a coroner's inquest in this nation that would not have brought in a verdict of derangement; while the pious and the humane would every where have consoled themselves with the hope, that God had extended mercy to his soul.

INTRODUCTION

SECOND BOOK OF SAMUEL,

OTHERWISE CALLED

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE KINGS.

AS this is a continuation of the preceding history, without any interruption, it can scarcely be called another book. Originally, this and the preceding made but one book; and they have been separated without reason or necessity. For a general account of both, see the Preface to the First Book of Samuel.

It is generally allowed that this book comprehends a period of forty years, from about A. M. 2949 to 2989. See the prefixed chronological account.

It has been divided into three parts: in the first, we have an account of the happy commencement of David's reign, chap. i—x. In the second, David's unhappy fall, and its miserable consequences, chap. xi—xviii. In the third, his restoration to the divine favour, the re-establishment of his kingdom, and the events which signalized the latter part of his reign, chap. xix—xxiv.

THE SECOND BOOK OF SAMUEL.

Year from the creation, 2949.—Year before the incarnation, 1055.—Year before the first Olympiad, 279.—Year before the building of Rome, 302.—Year of the Julian Period, 3659.—Year of the Dionysian Period, 467.—Cycle of the Sun, 19.—Cycle of the Moon, 11.

CHAPTER I.

An Amalekite comes to David, and informs him that the Philistines had routed the Israelites; and that Saul and his sons were slain, 1—4. And pretends that he himself had despatched Saul, finding him ready to fall alive into the hands of the Philistines, and had brought his crown and bracelets to David, 5—10. David and his men mourn for Saul and his sons, 11, 12. He orders the Amalekite to be slain, who professed that he had killed Saul, 13—16. David's funeral song for Saul and Jonathan, 17—27.

NOW it came to pass, after the death of Saul, when David was returned from the slaughter of the Amalekites, and David had abode two days in Ziklag;

2 It came even to pass on the third day, that, behold, a man came out of the camp from Saul, with his clothes rent, and earth upon his head: and so it was, when he came to David, that he fell to the earth, and did obeisance.

3 And David said unto him, From whence comest thou? And he said unto him, Out of the camp of Israel am I escaped.

4 And David said unto him, How went the matter? I pray thee, tell me. And he answered, That the people are fled from the battle, and many of the people also are fallen and dead; and Saul and Jonathan his son are dead also.

5 And David said unto the young man that told him, How knowest thou that Saul and Jonathan his son be dead?

6 And the young man that told him, said, As I happened by chance upon mount Gilboa, behold, Saul leaned upon his spear; and, lo, the chariots and horsemen followed hard after him.

7 And when he looked behind him, he saw me, and called unto me; and I answered, Here am I.

8 And he said unto me, Who art thou? And I answered him, I am an Amalekite.

9 He said unto me again, Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and slay me; for anguish is come upon me, because my life is yet whole in me.

10 So I stood upon him, and slew him, because I was sure that he could not live after that he was fallen: and I took the crown that was upon his head, and the bracelet that was on his arm, and have brought them hither unto my lord.

Verse 2. A man came out of the camp] The whole account which this young man gives is a fabrication: in many of the particulars it is grossly self-contradictory. There is no fact in the case but the bringing of the crown or diadem, and bracelets of Saul; which, as he appears to have been a plunderer of the slain, he found on the field of battle: and he brought them to David, and told the lie of having despatched Saul, merely to ingratiate himself with David.

Verse. 8. I am an Amalekite.] Dr. Delaney remarks, that an Amalekite took that crown from off the head of Saul, which he had forfeited by his disobedience in the case of Amalek.

Verse 10. The crown—and the bracelet] The crown was probably no more than a royal fillet, or diadem, both being the ensigns of royalty. It is sometimes customary, in the East, for a sovereign prince to give a crown and bracelets, when investing others with dominion or authority over certain provinces. Had Saul these in token of his being God's vicegerent? and that he held the kingdom from him alone?

The word kasheth is to be understood of the title of the song which immediately follows, and 22 From the blood of the slain, from the fat of the mighty, ^cthe bow of Jonathan turned not back, and the sword of Saul returned not empty.

23 Saul and Jonathan were lovely and ^dpleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided: they were swifter than eagles, they were ^estronger than lions.

24 Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul, who clothed you in scarlet, with other delights; who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel.

25 How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle! O Jonathan, thou wast slain in thine high places.

26 I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan; very pleasant hast thou been unto me: ^fthy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women.

not of the use of the bow, as our translation intimates.

Many of David's psalms have titles prefixed to them: some are termed Shosannim, some Maschil, Nehiloth, Neginoth, &c. and this one here Kasheth, or The Bow, because it was occasioned by the Philistine archers, 1 Sam. xxxi. 1—3. "And the archers hit him."

But especially respecting the bow of Jonathan, "which returned not back from the blood of the slain," as the song itself expresses. And David could not but remember the bow of Jonathan, out of which "the arrow was shot beyond the lad," 1 Sam. xx. 36. It was the time when that covenant was made, and that affection expressed between them, "which was greater than the love of women."

On these accounts the song was entitled Kasheth; or, The song of the Bow; and David commanded the chief musicians, Ethan, Heman, and Jeduthun, to teach the children of Judah how to sing it.

"It is written in the book of Jasher," &c.

βιβλίον του ενθους, Sept. "In the Book of the upright."

ספר דיוראיתא Siphra dioraita, "The book of the Law." Jonathan.

The Arabic says, "Behold it is written in the Book of Asheh; this is the Book of Samuel;" the interpretation of which is, "book of songs, or canticles."

This lamentation is justly admired as a picture of distress, the most tender and the most striking; unequally divided by grief into longer and shorter breaks, as nature could pour them forth from a mind interrupted by the alternate recurrence of the most lively images of love and greatness.

His reverence for Saul, and his love for Jonathan, have their strongest colourings; but their greatness and bravery come full upon him, and are expressed with peculiar energy.

Being himself a warrior, it is in that character he sees their greatest excellence; and, though his imagination hurries from one point of recollection to another, yet we hear him at first, at last, every where, lamenting—How are the mighty fallen!

It is almost impossible to read the noble original without finding every word swollen with a sigh, or broken with a sob. A heart pregnant with distress, and striving to utter expressions descriptive of its feelings, (which are repeatedly interrupted by an excess of grief,) is most sensibly painted throughout the whole. Even an English reader may be convinced of this, from the following specimen, in European characters:—

19. Hatsbi Yishrael al bamothecha chahal;
Eich naphetu Gibborim!
20. Al taggidu begath,
Al tebasaru bechusoth Ashkelon

Yehonathan, naámia li meod,

27. Eich naphetu Gibborim, Fayobedu kele Milchamah!

The three last verses in this sublime lamentation have sense and sound so connected as to strike every reader.

Dr. Kennicott, from whom I have taken several of the preceding remarks, gives a fine Latin version of this song, which I here sub-join:

O decus Israelis, super excelsa tua miles!
Quomodo ceciderunt fortes!
Nolite indicare in Gath, Nolite indicare in plateis Ascalonis:
Ne lætentur filii Philistæorum, Ne exultent filii incircumcisorum:
Montes Gibeoni, super vos
Nec ros, nec pluvius, neque agri primitiarum;
Ibi enim abjectus fuit clypeus fortium,
Clypeus Saulis, arma inuncti oleo!

Sine sanguine militum,
Sine adipe fortium,
Arcus Jonathanis non retrocesserat;
Gladiusque Saulis non redierat incassum,
Saul et Jonathan
Amabiles erant et jucundi in vitis suis,
Et in morte suânon separati.
Præ aquilis veloces!
Præ leonibus fortes!
Filie Israelis deflete Saulum;
Qui coccois cum deliciis vos vestivit,
Qui vestibus vestris ornamenta imposuit aurea!
Quomodo ceciderunt fortes, in medio belli!
O Jonathan, super excelsa tua miles!
Versor in angustiis, tui causâ, Frater mi, Jonathan!
Mihi fuisti admodum jucundus!
Mihi tuus amor admodum mirabilis,
Mulierum exuperans amorem!
Quomodo ceciderunt fortes,
Et perierunt arma belli!

Dissertation i. pag. 122.

In ver. 21. I have inserted כלי keley, for בלי beli. Dr. Delaney rightly observes that the participle בלי beli, is not used in any part of the Bible in the sense of quasi non, as though not; in which sense it must be used here, if it be retained as a genuine reading; the shield of Saul as though it had not been anointed with oil.

In a MS. written about the year 1200, numbered 30 in Kennicott's Bible, כלי keley is found; and also in the first edition of the whole Hebrew Bible printed Soncini 1488. Neither the Syriac nor Arabic versions, nor the Chaldee paraphrase, acknowledge the negative participle בלי beli, which they would have done had it been in the copies from which they translated. It was easy to make the mistake, as there is such a similarity between ב beth and כ caph; the line, therefore, should be read thus—The shield of Saul, weapons anointed with oil.

In ver. 22. נשג nashog, to obtain, attain, seems to have been written for נסג nasog, to recede, return. The former destroys the sense; the latter, which our translation has followed, and which is supported by the authority of 30 MSS. makes it not only intelligible but beautiful.

In verses 19, 22, and 25, חלל chahal and חללית challim occur, which we translate the SLAIN, but which Dr. Kennicott, I think, from good authority, renders soldier, and soldiers; and thus the version is made more consistent and beautiful.

חל chahal, signifies to bore, or pierce through; and this epithet might be well given to a soldier—q. d. the PIERCER, because his business is to transfix, or pierce his enemies with sword, spear, and arrows.

If it be translated soldiers, in the several places of the Old Testament, where we translate it SLAIN, or WOUNDED, the sense will be much mended: See Judges xx. 31, 39. Psa. lxxxix. 10. Prov. vii. 26. Jer. li. 4, 47, 49. Ezek. xi. 6, 7. xxi. 14. In several others it retains its radical signification of piercing, wounding, &c.

AFTER these general observations, I leave the particular beauties of this inimitable song to be sought out by the intelligent reader. Much has been written upon this, which cannot, consistently with the plan of these notes, be admitted here. See Delaney, Kennicott, Lowth, &c.; and above all, let the reader examine the Hebrew text.

David, by the direction of God, goes up to Hebron, and is there anointed king over the house of Judah, 1-4. NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. David inquired of the LORD] By means of Abiathar, the priest; for he did not know whether the different tribes were willing to receive him, though he was fully persuaded that God had appointed him king over Israel.

Unto Hebron] The metropolis of the tribe of Judah, one of the richest regions in Judea. The mountains of Hebron were famed for fruits, herbage, and honey; and many parts were well adapted for vines, olives, and different kinds of grain, and abounding in springs of excellent water, as the most accurate travellers have asserted.

Verse 4. Anointed David king] He was anointed before by Samuel, by which he acquired jus ad regnum, a right to the kingdom: by the present anointing he had jus in regno, authority over the kingdom. The other parts of the kingdom were, as yet, attached to the family of Saul.

Verse 5. David sent messengers unto—Jabesh-gilead] This was a generous and noble act, highly indicative of the grandeur of David's mind. He respected Saul as his once legitimate sovereign; he loved Jonathan as his most intimate friend. The former had greatly injured him, and sought his destruction; but even this did not cancel his respect for him as the anointed of God, and as the king of Israel. This brings to my remembrance that fine speech of M. Saurin, when speaking of the banishment of the Protestants from France, by the revocation of the edict of Nantes. He thus them, Blessed be ye of the LORD, that ye have showed this kindness unto your lord, even unto Saul, and have buried him.

6 And now the LORD show kindness and truth unto you: and I also will requite you this kindness, because ye have done this thing.

7 Therefore now let your hands be strengthened, and be ye valiant: for your master Saul is dead, and also the house of Judah have anointed me king over them.

8 But Abner the son of Ner, captain of Saul's host, took Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and brought him over to Mahanaim;

9 And made him king over Gilead, and over the Ashurites, and over Jezreel, and over Ephraim, and over Benjamin, and over all Israel.

at the Hague apostrophizes Lewis XIV. their persecutor: Et toi, prince redoutable, que j'honorai jadis comme mon roi, et que je respecte encore comme le fléau du Seigneur. "And thou, O formidable prince, whom I once honoured as my king, and whom I still reverence as the scourge of the Lord!"

Verse 7. Now let your hands be strengthened] David certainly wished to attach the men of Jabesh to his interest: he saw that they were generous and valiant; and must be of great service to him whose part they espoused; and he was, no doubt, afraid that they would attach themselves to the house of Saul, in consideration of the eminent services Saul had rendered them, in rescuing them from Nahash, king of the Ammonites.

Verse 8. Abner the son of Ner] This man had long been one of the chief captains of Saul's army, and commander-in-chief on several occasions: he was probably envious of David's power, by whom he had often been outgeneralled in the field.

Verse 9. Made him king over Gilead] These were places beyond Jordan; for, as the Philistines had lately routed the Israelites, they were, no doubt, in possession of some of the principal towns; and were now enjoying the fruits of their victory. Abner was, therefore, afraid to bring the new king to any place where he was likely to meet with much resistance, till he had got his army well recruited.

Who the Ashurites were, is not generally agreed; probably men of the tribe of Ashur.

Verse 10. Ish-bosheth—reigned two years] It is well observed, that Ish-bosheth reigned all the time that David reigned in Hebron; which was seven years and six months. Perhaps the meaning of the writer is this: Ish-bosheth reigned two years before any but the tribe of Judah had attached themselves to the interest of David. Some think, that Abner in effect reigned the five last years of Ish-bosheth, who had only the name of king after the two first years. Or, the text may be understood thus: When Ish-bosheth had reigned two years over Israel, he was forty years of age.

Houbigant, dissatisfied with all the common modes of solution, proposes to read שתי שנים ששית שנה, six years; for the שנים שתי שנים ששית שנה, two years, of the text, which, he contends, is a solecism; for, in pure Hebrew, the words would be שנים ששית שנה as they are every where read in the first book: and שנה is the reading of eleven of Kennicott's MSS. and nine of De Rossi's; but the number two is acknowledged by all the ancient versions, and by all the MSS. yet collated. The critical reader may examine Houbigant on the place. After all, probably the expedition mentioned in the succeeding verses, is that to which the writer refers, and from which he dates. Ish-bosheth had reigned two years without any rupture with David, or his men, till under the direction of Abner, captain of his host, the Israelites passed over Jordan, from Mahanaim to Gibeon; called 'Helkath-hazzurim, which is in Gibeon.

17 And there was a very sore battle that day; and Abner was beaten, and the men of Israel, before the servants of David.

18 ¶ And there were ^u three sons of Zeruiah there, Joab, and Abishai, and Asahel: and Asahel was ^v as light ^w of foot ^x as ^y a wild roe.

19 And Asahel pursued after Abner; and in going he turned not to the right hand nor to the left ^z from following Abner.

20 Then Abner looked behind him, and said, Art thou Asahel? And he answered, I am.

21 And Abner said to him, Turn thee aside to thy right hand or to thy left, and lay thee hold on one of the young men, and take thee his ^a armour. But Asahel would not turn aside from following him.

22 And Abner said again to Asahel, Turn thee aside from following me: wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? how then should I hold up my face to Joab thy brother?

23 Howbeit he refused to turn aside:

and being opposed by Joab, captain of David's host, that battle took place which is described in the following verses.

Verse 14. Let the young men—play before us.] This was diabolical play, where each man thrust his sword into the body of the other, so that the twenty-four (twelve on each side) fell down dead together! but this was the signal for that sanguinary skirmish which immediately took place.

Verse 16. Caught every one his fellow by the head] Probably by the beard, if these persons were not too young to have one; or by the hair of the head. Alexander ordered all the Macedonians to shave their beards: and being asked by Parmenio, why they should do so? answered, "Dost thou not know, that in battle there is no better hold than the beard?"

Helkath-hazzurim] "The portion of the mighty;" or, "The inheritance of those who were slain," according to the Targum.

Verse 18. Asahel was as light of foot as a wild roe.] To be swift of foot, was deemed a great accomplishment in the heroes of antiquity: ποδας αινος Αχιλλεύς, the swift-footed Achilles, is an epithet which Homer gives to that hero no less than thirty times in the course of the Ilias. It was a qualification also among the Roman soldiers: they were taught both to run swiftly, and to swim well.

Verse 21. Take thee his armour] It seems Asahel wished to get the armour of Abner as a wherefore Abner, with the hinder end of his spear, smote him under the fifth rib, that the spear came out behind him; and he fell down there, and died in the same place: and it came to pass, that as many as came to the place where Asahel fell down and died, stood still.

24 Joab also and Abishai pursued after Abner: and the sun went down when they were come to the hill of Ammah, that lieth before Giah, by the way of the wilderness of Gibeon.

25 ¶ And the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together after Abner, and became one troop, and stood on the top of a hill.

26 Then Abner called to Joab, and said, Shall the sword devour for ever? knowest thou not that it will be bitterness in the latter end? how long shall it be then, ere thou bid the people return from following their brethren?

27 And Joab said, As God liveth, unless thou hadst spoken, surely then in the morning the people had gone up every one from following his brother.

28 So Joab blew a trumpet, and all the people stood still, and pursued after Israel no more, neither fought they any more.

29 And Abner and his men walked all that night through the plain, and passed over Jordan, and went through all Bith-ron, and they came to Mahanaim.

30 ¶ And Joab returned from following Abner: and when he had gathered all the people together, there lacked of David's servants nineteen men and Asahel.

31 But the servants of David had smitten of Benjamin, and of Abner's men, so that three hundred and threescore men died.

32 ¶ And they took up Asahel, and buried him in the sepulchre of his father, which was in Beth-lehem. And Joab and his men went all night, and they came to Hebron at break of day.

trophy; this also was greatly coveted by ancient heroes. Abner wished to spare him, for fear of exciting Joab's enmity; but, as Asahel was obstinate in the pursuit, and was swifter of foot than Abner, the latter saw that he must either kill or be killed; and therefore he turned his spear, and ran it through the body of Asahel. This turning about, that he might pierce him, is what we translate the hinder end of his spear. This slaying of Asahel cost Abner his life; as we shall find in the next chapter.

Verse 27. And Joab said] The meaning of this verse appears to be this: If Abner had not provoked the battle, (see ver. 14.) Joab would not have attacked the Israelites that day; as his orders were probably to act on the defensive. Therefore, the blame fell upon Israel.

Verse 29. They came to Mahanaim.] So they returned to the place whence they set out. See ver. 12. This was the commencement of the civil wars between Israel and Judah: and properly the commencement of the division of the two kingdoms; through which both nations were deluged with blood.

CHAPTER III.

Account of the children born to David in Hebron, 1—5. Abner being accused by Ish-bosheth of familiarities with Rizpah, Saul's concubine, he is enraged; offers his services to David; goes to Hebron, and makes a league with him, 6—22. Joab, through enmity to Abner, pretends to David that he came as a spy, and should not be permitted to return, 23—25. He follows Abner, and treacherously slays him, 26, 27. David, hearing of it, is greatly incensed against Joab, and pronounces a curse upon him, and upon his family, 28, 29. He commands a general mourning for Abner, and himself follows the bier weeping, 30—32. David's lamentation over Abner, 33, 34. The people solicit David to take meat; but he fasts the whole day; and complains to them of the insolence and intrigues of Joab and his brothers; the people are pleased with his conduct, 35—39.

6 ¶ And it came to pass, while there was war between the house of Saul and the house of David, that Abner made himself strong for the house of Saul.

7 And Saul had a concubine, whose name was ^sRizpah, the daughter of Aiah: and Ish-bosheth said to Abner, Wherefore hast thou ^bgone in unto my father's concubine?

8 Then was Abner very wroth for the words of Ish-bosheth, and said, Am I ^aa dog's head, which against Judah do show kindness this day unto the house of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hand of David, that thou chargest me to-day with a fault concerning this woman?

Ish-bosheth was slain by Rechab and Baanah.

Verse 6. Abner made himself strong] This strengthening of himself, and going in to the late king's concubine, were most evident proofs that he wished to seize upon the government. See 1 Kings ii. 21, 22. xii. 8. xvi. 21.

Verse 8. Am I a dog's head] Dost thou treat a man with indignity who has been the only prop of thy tottering kingdom, and the only person who could make head against the house of David?

Verse 9. Except, as the Lord hath sworn to David] And why did he not do this before, when he knew that God had given the kingdom to David? Was he not now, according to his own concession, fighting against God?

Verse 11. He could not answer Abner a word] Miserable is the lot of a king, who is governed by the general of his army; who may strip him of his power and dignity whenever he pleases! Witness the fate of poor Charles I. of England, and Lewis XVI. of France. Military men, above all others, should never be intrusted with any civil power; and should be great only in the field.

Verse 13. Except thou first bring Michal]

12 ¶ And Abner sent messengers to David on his behalf, saying, Whose is the land? saying also, Make thy league with me, and, behold, my hand shall be with thee, to bring about all Israel unto thee.

13 ¶ And he said, Well; I will make a league with thee: but one thing I require of thee, ⁿthat is, ^oThou shalt not see my face, except thou first bring ^pMichal, Saul's daughter, when thou comest to see my face.

14 And David sent messengers to Ish-bosheth, Saul's son, saying, Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me ^rfor a hundred foreskins of the Philistines.

15 And Ish-bosheth sent, and took her from her husband, even from ^sPhaltiel the son of Laish.

16 And her husband went with her ^talong weeping behind her to ^uBahurim. Then said Abner unto him, Go, return. And he returned.

17 ¶ And Abner had communication with the elders of Israel, saying, Ye sought for David ^vin times past to be king over you:

18 Now then do ^wit: ^xfor the LORD hath spoken of David, saying, By the hand of my servant David I will save

David had already six wives at Hebron; and none of them could have such pretensions to legitimacy as Michal, who had been taken away from him, and married to Phaltiel. However distressing it was, to take her from a husband who loved her most tenderly, (see verse 16.) yet prudence and policy required that he should strengthen his own interest in the kingdom as much as possible; and that he should not leave a princess in the possession of a man, who might, in her right, have made pretensions to the throne. Besides, she was his own lawful wife; and he had a right to demand her when he pleased.

Verse 14. Deliver me my wife] It is supposed that he meant to screen Abner; and to prevent that violence which he might have used in carrying off Michal.

Verse 16. Weeping behind her] If genuine affection did not still subsist between David and Michal, it was a pity to have taken her from Phaltiel; who had her to wife from the conjoint authority of her father and her king. Nevertheless David had a legal right to her, as she had never been divorced: for she was taken from him by the hand of violence.

my people Israel out of the hand of the Philistines, and out of the hand of all their enemies.

19 And Abner also spake in the ears of ^s Benjamin: And Abner went also to speak in the ears of David in Hebron all that seemed good to Israel, and that seemed good to the whole house of Benjamin.

20 So Abner came to David to Hebron, and twenty men with him. And David made Abner, and the men that were with him, a feast.

21 And Abner said unto David, I will arise and go, and ^y will gather all Israel unto my lord the king, that they may make a league with thee, and that thou mayest ^z reign over all that thine heart desireth. And David sent Abner away; and he went in peace.

22 ¶ And, behold, the servants of David and Joab came from pursuing a troop, and brought in a great spoil with them: but Abner was not with David in Hebron; for he had sent him away, and he was gone in peace.

23 When Joab and all the host that was with him were come, they told Joab, saying, Abner the son of Ner came to the king, and he hath sent him away, and he is gone in peace.

24 Then Joab came to the king, and said, What hast thou done? behold, Abner came unto thee; why is it that thou hast sent him away, and he is quite gone?

25 Thou knowest Abner the son of Ner, that he came to deceive thee, and to know ^a thy going out and thy coming in, and to know all that thou doest.

26 And when Joab was come out from David, he sent messengers after Abner, which brought him again from the well of Sirah: but David knew it not.

27 And when Abner was returned to Hebron, Joab ^b took him aside in the gate to speak with him ^c quietly, and smote him there ^d under the fifth rib, that he died, for the blood of ^e Asahel his brother.

28 ¶ And afterward, when David heard it, he said, I and my kingdom are guiltless before the LORD for ever from the ^f blood of Abner the son of Ner;

29 ^g Let it rest on the head of Joab, and on all his father's house; and let there not ^h fail from the house of Joab one ⁱ that hath an issue, or that is a leper, or that leaneth on a staff, or that falleth on the sword, or that lacketh bread.

30 So Joab and Abishai his brother slew Abner, because he had slain their brother ^k Asahel at Gibeon in the battle.

31 ¶ And David said to Joab, and to all the people that were with him, ^l Rend your clothes, and ^m gird you with sackcloth, and mourn before Abner. And King David himself followed the ⁿ bier.

32 And they buried Abner in Hebron: and the king lifted up his voice, and wept at the grave of Abner; and all the people wept.

Where is this spoken? Such a promise is not extant. Perhaps it means no more than, "Thus, it may be presumed, God hath determined."

Verse 21. He went in peace.] David dismissed him in good faith, having no sinister design in reference to him.

Verse 27. And smote him there.] Joab feared that, after having rendered such essential services to David, Abner would be made captain of the host: he, therefore, determined to prevent it, by murdering the man, under pretence of avenging the death of his brother Asahel.

The murder, however, was one of the most unprovoked and wicked: and such was the power and influence of this nefarious general, that the king dared not to bring him to justice for his crime. In the same way he murdered Amasa, a little time afterward. See ch. xx. ver. 10. Joab was a cool-blooded, finished mur-derer. "Treason and murder ever keep together like two yoke-devils."

Verse 29. Let it rest on the head.] All these verbs may be rendered in the future tense: it will rest on the head of Joab, &c. This was a prophetic declaration, which sufficiently showed the displeasure of God against this execrable man.

Verse 31. David said to Joab.] He commanded him to take on him the part of a principal mourner.

Verse 33. The king lamented over Abner.] This lamentation, though short, is very pathetic. It is a high strain of poetry; but the measure cannot be easily ascertained. Our own translation may be measured thus:

We talk much of ancient manners, their simplicity and ingenuousness; and say, that the former days were better than these. But who says this who is a judge of the times? In those days, of celebrated simplicity, &c. there were not so many crimes as at present, I grant: but what they craved in number, they made up in degree; deceit, cruelty, rapine, murder, and wrong of almost every kind, then flourished. We are refined in our vices; they were gross and barbarous in theirs; they had neither so many ways, nor so many means, of sinning; but the sum of their moral turpitude was greater than ours. We have a sort of decency and good breeding, which lay a certain restraint on our passions; they were boorish and beastly, and their bad passions ever in full play. Civilization prevents barbarity and atrocity; mental cultivation induces decency of manners: those primitive times were generally without these. Who that knows them would wish such ages to return ?

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. All the Israelites were troubled.] Abner was their great support; and on him they depended; for, it appears that Ish-bosheth was a feeble prince, and had few of those qualities requisite for a sovereign.

Verse 2. Captains of bands]. Principes latronum, captains of banditti, says the Vulgate :

the Syriac is the same. Whether Ish-bosheth kept bands of marauders, whose business it was to make sudden incursions into the country places, and carry off grain, provisions, cattle, &c. we know not; but such persons would be well qualified for the bloody work in which those two men were afterward employed.

4 And Jonathan, Saul's son, had a son that was lame of his feet. He was five years old when the tidings came of Saul and Jonathan out of Jezreel, and his nurse took him up, and fled: and it came to pass, as she made haste to flee, that he fell, and became lame. And his name was Mephibosheth.

5 And the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, Rechab and Baanah, went, and came about the heat of the day to the house of Ish-bosheth, who lay on a bed at noon.

6 And they came thither into the midst of the house, as though they would have fetched wheat: and they smote him under the fifth rib: and Rechab and Baanah his brother escaped.

7 For when he came into the house, he lay on his bed in his bedchamber, and they smote him, and slew him, and beheaded him, and took his head, and gat them away through the plain all night.

8 And they brought the head of Ish-bosheth unto David to Hebron, and said to the king, Behold the head of Ish-bosheth; the son of Saul, thine enemy, ^k which sought thy life; and the LORD hath avenged my lord the king this day of Saul, and of his seed.

9 ¶ And David answered Rechab and Baanah his brother, the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, and said unto them, As the LORD liveth, who hath redeemed my soul out of all adversity,

10 When ^m one told me, saying, Behold, Saul is dead, ⁿ thinking to have brought good tidings, I took hold of him, and slew him in Ziklag, ^o who thought that I would have given him a reward for his tidings:

11 How much more, when wicked men have slain a righteous person in his own house upon his bed? shall I not therefore now ^p require his blood of your hand, and take you away from the earth?

12 And David ^r commanded his young men, and they slew them, and cut off their hands and their feet, and hanged them up over the pool in Hebron. But they took the head of Ish-bosheth, and buried it in the ^s sepulchre of Abner in Hebron.

Probably the same as Gath; as Ramathaim is the same as Rama.

Verse 4. He fell, and became lame.] Dislocated his ankle, knee, or thigh; which was never after reduced: and thus he became lame. Lovely Jonathan! unfortunate in thy life, and in thy progeny.

Verse 5. Lay on a bed at noon] It is a custom in all hot countries, to travel or work very early, and very late; and rest at noon-day, in which the heat chiefly prevails.

Verse 6. As though they would have fetched wheat] The king's stores were probably near his own dwelling; and these men were accustomed to go thither for provisions for themselves, their cattle, and their men. This supposition, which is natural, renders unnecessary all the emendations of Houbigant and others.

As these men were accustomed to bring wheat from these stores, from which it appears there was an easy passage to the king's chamber, especially if we consider this a summer-house, as it most probably was; no man would suspect their present errand, as they were in the habit of going frequently to that place.

Verse 8. They brought the head—unto David] They thought, as did the poor, lying Amalekite, to ingratiate themselves with David, by this abominable act.

Verse 9. Who hath redeemed my soul out of all adversity] This was, in David's case, a very proper view of the goodness and watchful providence of God toward him. His life was frequently in danger: murderers had often laid wait for it; but God, the living God, had always redeemed that life from all adversity; and called on him now to punish such evil-minded and blood-thirsty men.

Verse 10. A reward for his tidings] ἡ δὲ αὐτοῦ δόσις εὐαγγελίου, Septuagint. Here is a proof that εὐαγγέλιον, evangelium, or Gospel, signifies the reward which the bringer of good tidings is entitled to receive. See my preface to St. Matthew's Gospel.

Verse 11. How much more] Here are several things which aggravated the guilt of those wicked men. 1. Ish-bosheth was an innocent man, and therefore none could have any ground of quarrel against him. 2. He was in his own house, which was his sanctuary, and none but the worst of men would disturb him there. 3. He was upon his bed, resting in the heat of the day, and so free from suspicion that he was not even attended by his guards; nor had he his doors secured. To take away the life of such a man, in such circumstances, whom also they professed to hold as their sovereign, was the most abandoned treachery.

Verse 12. And they slew them] None ever more richly deserved death: and, by this act of justice, David showed to all Israel that he was a decided enemy to the destruction of Saul's family; and that none could lift up their hands against any of them without meeting with condign punishment. In all these cases I know not that it was possible for David to show more sincerity, or a stricter regard for justice.

CHAPTER V.

The elders of all the tribes of Israel came and anointed David king over all Israel, 1—5. He goes against the Jebusites, and takes the strong-hold of Zion, and afterward the city itself; which is called the city of David, 6—9. David's prosperity, and friendship with Hiram, king of Tyre, 10—12. He takes more concubines, and begets several sons and daughters, 13—16. The Philistines gather together against him in the valley of Rephaim; he defeats them; they abandon their idols, and David and his men burn them, 17—21. They assemble once more in the valley of Rephaim, and David smites them from Geba to Gezer, 22—25.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. Then came all the tribes of Israel] Ish-bosheth the king, and Abner the general, being dead, they had no hope of maintaining a separate kingdom, and therefore thought it better to submit to David's authority. And they founded their resolution on three good arguments:—1. David was their own countryman; we are thy bone, and thy flesh. 2. Even in Saul's time David had been their general; and had always led them to victory: Thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel. 3. God had appointed him to the kingdom, to govern and protect the people—The Lord said to thee, Thou shalt feed my people, and be a captain over Israel.

Verse 3. They anointed David king] This was the third time that David was anointed, having now taken possession of the whole kingdom.

Verse 6. The king and his men went to Jerusalem] This city was now in the hands of the Jebusites: but how they got possession of it is not known; probably they took it during the wars between Ish-bosheth and David. After Joshua's death, what is called the lower city was taken by the Israelites: and it is evident that the whole city was in their possession in the time of Saul; for David brought the head of Goliath thither, 1 Sam. xvii. 54. It appears to have been a very strong fortress; and, from what follows, deemed impregnable by the ^k to Jerusalem unto ^l the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land; which spake unto David, saying, Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither: ^m thinking, David cannot come in hither.

7 Nevertheless, David took the strong-hold of Zion: ⁿ the same is the city of David.

8 And David said on that day, Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's soul, he shall be chief and captain.

^p Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house.

9 So David dwelt in the fort, and called it ^q the city of David. And David built round about from Milo and inward.

10 And David ^r went on, and grew great, and the LORD God of hosts was with him.

Jebusites. It was right that the Israelites should repossess it: and David very properly began his reign over the whole country by the siege of this city.

Except thou take away the blind and the lame] Scarcely a passage in the Sacred Oracles has puzzled commentators more than this. For my own part I do not think that it is worth the labour spent upon it; nor shall I encumber these pages with the discordant opinions of learned men. From the general face of the text, it appears that the Jebusites, vainly confiding in the strength of their fortress, placed lame and blind men upon the walls, and thus endeavoured to turn into ridicule David's attempt to take the place. Thou shalt not come in hither, except thou take away the blind and the lame; nothing could be more cutting to a warrior.

Dr. Kennicott has taken great pains to correct this passage; as may be seen in his First Dissertation on the Hebrew Text, pag. 27 to 47. I shall insert our present version with his amended text, line for line; his translation being distinguished by italics: and, for farther information, refer to Dr. K.'s work.

Verse 11. Hiram king of Tyre] He was a very friendly man; and, no doubt, a believer in the true God. He was not only the friend of David, but also of his son Solomon; to whom, in building the temple, he afforded the most important assistance.

Verse 13. David took him more concubines] He had, in all conscience, enough before: he had, in the whole, eight wives, and ten concubines. That dispensation permitted polygamy; but from the beginning it was not so: and as, upon an average, there are about fourteen males born to thirteen females, polygamy is unnatural, and could never have entered into the original design of God.

Verse 14. These be the names] Eleven children are here enumerated in the Hebrew text;

17 ¶ ^a But when the Philistines heard that they had anointed David king over Israel, all the Philistines came up to seek David; and David heard of it, ^b and went down to the hold.

18 The Philistines also came and spread themselves in ^c the valley of Rephaim.

19 And David ^d inquired of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up to the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into mine hand? And the LORD said unto David, Go up; for I will doubtless deliver the Philistines into thine hand.

20 And David came to ^e Baal-perazim, and David smote them there, and said, The LORD hath broken forth upon mine enemies before me, as the breach of waters. Therefore he called the name of that place ^f Baal-perazim.

but the Septuagint has no less than twenty-four. I shall insert their names; and the reader, if he please, may collate them with the text—Sammus, Sobab, Nathan, Solomon, Ebear, Elisué, Naphek, Jephies, Elisama, Elidaé, Eliphelath, Samaé, Jessibath, Nathan, Galimaan, Jebraar, Theesus, Eliphath, Naged, Naphek, Jonathan, Leasamus, Baalemath, and Eliphaath. There is, no doubt, some corruption in these names: there are two of the name of Nathan, two of Eliphelath, and two of Naphek; and probably Sammus and Samaé are the same.

Verse 17. The Philistines came up to seek David] Ever since the defeat of the Israelites, and the fall of Saul and his sons, the Philistines seem to have been in undisturbed possession of the principal places in the land of Israel; now, finding that David was chosen king by the whole nation, they thought best to attack him before his army got too numerous, and the affairs of the kingdom properly settled.

Verse 19. David inquired of the Lord] He considered himself only the captain of the Lord's host; and, therefore, would not strike a stroke without the command of his superior.

Verse 20. The Lord hath broken forth] He very properly attributes the victory to Jehovah; without whose strength and counsel he could have done nothing.

Baal-perazim] The plain, or chief of breaches, because of the breach which God made in the Philistine army; and thus he commemorated the interference of the Lord.

g Deut. 7. 5, 25. 1 Chron. 14. 12.—h Or, took them away.
1 Chron. 14. 13.—k Verse 19.

Verse 23. Fetch a compass behind them] When they may be had, God will not work without using human means. By this he taught David caution, prudence, and dependence on the divine strength.

Verse 24. When thou hearest the sound of a going] If there had not been an evident supernatural interference, David might have thought that the sleight, or ruse de guerre, which he had used, was the cause of his victory—By the going in the tops of the mulberry trees, probably only a rustling among the leaves is intended. The Targum says, a noise; the Arabic has it, the noise of horses' hoofs.

Verse 25. And David did so] He punctually obeyed the directions of the Lord, and then every thing succeeded to his wish.

How is it that such supernatural directions and assistances are not communicated now? Because they are not asked for; and they are not asked for, because they are not expected; and they are not expected, because men have not faith: and they have not faith, because they are under a refined spirit of Atheism; and have no spiritual intercourse with their Maker. Who believes that God sees all things, and is every where? Who supposes that he concerns himself with the affairs of his creatures? Who acknowledges him in all his ways? Who puts not his own wisdom, prudence, and strength, in the place of God Almighty? Reader, hast thou faith in God? Then exercise it, cultivate it, and thou mayest remove mountains.

It is worthy of remark, that David was, by the appointment of God, to feed the people: as he had formerly the care of a flock of sheep, which he was to watch over, defend, lead in and out, and for which he was to find pasture; now he is to watch over, defend, lead in and out, feed, and protect the Israelites. He is to be the shepherd of the people; not the tyrant or oppressor.

In ancient times, among the Greeks, kings were denominated ποιμενες λαου, shepherds of the people; and all good kings were really such: but, in process of time, this pleasing title was changed for βασιλευς and τυραννος, sovereign and tyrant; in neither of which names does any thing of the original title exist. And, such are the different political constitutions of the kingdoms of the earth, that it is impossible that in any of them, the British excepted, the king can be the shepherd and father of his people. All the other regal constitutions under the sun permit the sovereign to be despotic; and, consequently, oppressive and tyrannical, if he please. The British alone gives no power of this kind to the prince: by the constitution he is a patriotic king; and, by the influence of those maxims of state which are continually presented to his view, and according to which all acts of government are formed, he becomes habitually the father of his people; and in this light alone do the British people behold the British king.

David, by his own authority, without any form of law, could slay the Amalekite who said he had killed Saul; and could cut off the heads of Rechab and Baanah, who murdered Ish-bosheth: but, in the government of Britain, the culprit is to be heard in his vindication, witnesses are to be examined, the facts viewed by an upright judge in the light of the law; and then the alleged criminality is left to the decision of twelve honest men, the equals of the accused, who are bound by a solemn oath to decide according to the evidence brought before them. The Israelitish constitution was radically good; but the British constitution is much better. In the former, while the king ruled according to the spirit of the constitution, he could do no wrong, because he was only the vicegerent of the Almighty; in the latter, the king can do no wrong, because he is bound, both by the spirit and letter of the law, to do nothing but what is according to the rules of eternal justice and equity, laid down in that law: nothing is left to mere regal power or authority; and nothing trusted to human fickleness or caprice. In all his acts he is directed by his nobles and commons; who, being the representatives of all classes of the people, are always supposed to speak their mind. Well may it be said, Blessed are the people who are in such a case!

CHAPTER VI.

David goes, with thirty thousand men, to bring the ark from Kirjath-jearim to Jerusalem, 1—5. The oxen stumbling, Uzzah, who drove the cart on which the ark was placed, put forth his hand to save it from falling; the Lord was displeased, and smote him so that he died, 6, 7. David, being alarmed, carries the ark to the house of Obed-edom, 8—10. Here it remained three months; and God prospered Obed-edom, in whose house it was deposited, 11. David, hearing of this, brings the ark, with sacrifices and solemn rejoicings, to Jerusalem, 12—15. Michal, seeing David dance before the ark, despises him, 16. He offers burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and deals among all the people, men and women, a cake of bread, a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine each, 17—19. Michal, coming to meet him, and seeing him dance extravagantly before the ark, reproaches him for his conduct: he vindicates himself, reproves her, and she dies childless, 20—23.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

Verse 1. Thirty thousand.] This is supposed to have been a new levy; and thus he augmented his army by 30,000 fresh troops. The Septuagint has 70,000.

Verse 2. From Baale of Judah] This is supposed to be the same city which, in Josh. xv. 60. is called Kirjath-baal, or Kirjath-jearim: see 1 Chron. xiii. 6.; or Baalah, Josh. xv. 9.

Whose name is called by the name of the LORD] That is, the ark is called the ark of the Lord of hosts. But this is not a literal version: the word שֵׁם shem, NAME, occurs twice together; probably one of them should be read שָׁם sham, THERE. There the name of the Lord of hosts was invoked, &c.

Verse 3. A new cart] Every thing used in the worship of God was hallowed, or set apart for that purpose: a new cart was used through respect, as that had never been applied to any profane or common purpose. But this was not sufficient, for the ark should have been carried on the shoulders of the priests; and the neglect of this ceremony was the cause of the death of Uzzah.

Verse 5. On all manner of instruments made of fir-wood] This place should be corrected from the parallel place, 1 Chron. xiii. 8.—“All Israel played before God, with all their might, and with singing; and with harps, and with psalteries, &c.” Instead of כִּלְיֵי עֵץ becol etsey, “with all woods,” or “trees;” the parallel place is כִּלְיֵי עֵץ becol az, “with all their strength;” this makes a good sense, the first makes none. The Septuagint, in this place, has the same reading; ἐν ὀρχῇ, with might.

Verse 6. Uzzah put forth his hand] In Numb. iv. 15—20. the Levites are forbidden to touch the ark, on pain of death: this penalty was inflicted upon Uzzah, for the first time.

Verse 7. Smote him there for his error] Uzzah sinned through ignorance and precipitancy: he had not time to reflect; the oxen suddenly stumbled; and, fearing lest the ark should fall, he suddenly stretched out his hand to prevent it. Had he touched the ark with impunity, the populace might have lost their respect for it, and its sacred service; the example of Uzzah must have filled them with fear and sacred reverence: and, as to Uzzah, no man can doubt of his eternal safety. He committed a sin unto death; but, doubtless, the mercy of God was extended to his soul.

Verse 10. But David carried it aside] The house of Obed-edom appears to have been very near the city: they were about to enter it, but were prevented by this accident, and lodged the ark with the nearest friend.

Verse 11. The LORD blessed Obed-edom] And why? Because he had the ark of the Lord in his house. Whoever entertains God’s messengers, or consecrates his house to the service of God, will infallibly receive God’s blessing.

Verse 12. So David—brought up the ark] The Vulgate adds to this verse: And David had house of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, because of the ark of God. ¹⁷ So David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness.

13 And it was so, that when ^x they that bare the ark of the LORD had gone six paces, he sacrificed ^y oxen and fatlings.

14 And David ^z danced before the LORD with all his might; and David was girded ^a with a linen ephod.

15 ^b So David and all the house of Israel brought up the ark of the LORD with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet.

16 And ^c as the ark of the LORD came into the city of David, Michal, Saul's daughter, looked through a window, and saw King David leaping and dancing before the LORD; and she despised him in her heart.

17 ^d And they brought in the ark of the LORD, and set it in ^e his place, in the midst of the tabernacle that David had ^f pitched for it: and David ^g offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the LORD.

seven choirs, and a calf, for a sacrifice. The Septuagint make a greater addition: "And he had seven choirs carrying the ark, a sacrifice, a calf, and lambs. And David played on harmonious organs before the Lord; and David was clothed with a costly tunic; and David, and all the house of Israel, brought the ark of the Lord with rejoicing, and the sound of a trumpet." Nothing of this is found in any MS.; nor in the Chaldee, the Syriac, nor the Arabic; nor in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xv. 25.

Verse 16. She despised him in her heart. She did not blame him outwardly; she thought he had disgraced himself, but she kept her mind to herself.

Verse 18. He blessed the people in the name of the LORD. David acted here as priest, for it was the general prerogative of the priests to bless the people: but it appears, by both David and Solomon, that it was the prerogative of the kings also.

Verse 19. A cake of bread. Such as those which are baked without leaven, and are made very thin.

A good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine. The words of flesh, and of wine, we add; they peace-offerings; ^h he blessed the people in the name of the LORD of hosts.

19 ⁱ And he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Israel, as well to the women as men, to every one a cake of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine. So all the people departed every one to his house.

20 ^k Then David returned to bless his household. And Michal, the daughter of Saul, came out to meet David, and said, How glorious was the king of Israel to-day, who ^l uncovered himself to-day in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants, as one of the ^m vain fellows ⁿ shamelessly uncovereth himself!

21 And David said unto Michal, It was before the LORD, ^o which chose me before thy father, and before all his house, to appoint me ruler over the people of the LORD, over Israel: therefore will I play before the LORD.

22 And I will yet be more vile than thus, and will be base in mine own sight: and ^p of the maid-servants which thou hast spoken of, of them shall I be had in honour.

are not in the Hebrew. The Chaldee translates one part, and one portion; but all the other versions understand the Hebrew as we do.

Verse 20. To bless his household.] This was according to the custom of the patriarchs, who were priests in their own families. It is worthy of remark, that David is called patriarch by Stephen, Acts ii. 29.; though living upwards of four hundred years after the termination of the patriarchal age.

How glorious was the king of Israel.] This is a strong irony. From what Michal says, it is probable that David used some violent gesticulations, by means of which some parts of his body became uncovered. But it is very probable that we cannot guess all that was implied in this reproach.

Verse 21. It was before the LORD, which chose me.] David felt the reproach, and was strongly irritated; and seems to have spoken to Michal with sufficient asperity.

Verse 22. I will yet be more vile.] The plain meaning of these words appears to be this: I am not ashamed of humbling myself before that God who rejected thy father because of his obstinacy and pride, and chose me in his stead to rule his people: and even those maid-servants, when they come to know the motive of my conduct, shall acknowledge its propriety, and treat me with additional respect; and as for thee, thou shalt find that thy conduct is as little pleasing to God as it is to me.* Then it is said, Michal had no child till the day of her death: probably David never more took her to his bed; or God, in his providence, might have subjected her to barrenness, which in Palestine was considered both a misfortune and a reproach. Michal formed her judgment without reason; and meddled with that which she did not understand. We should be careful how we attribute actions, the reasons of which we cannot comprehend, to motives which may appear to us unjustifiable or absurd. Rash judgments are doubly pernicious; they hurt those who form them, and those of whom they are formed.

CHAPTER VII.

David consults the prophet Nathan about building a temple for the Lord, and is encouraged by him to do it, 1—3. That night Nathan receives a revelation from God, stating that Solomon, not David should build the temple, 4—16. Nathan delivers the divine message; and David magnifies God for his mercies, and makes prayer and supplication 17—29.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. When the king sat in his house] That is, when he became resident in the palace which Hiram, king of Tyre, had built for him.

And the LORD had given him rest] This was after he had defeated the Philistines, and cast them out of all the strong places in Israel which they had possessed after the overthrow of Saul; but before he had carried his arms beyond the land of Israel, against the Moabites, Syrians, and Idumeans. See chap. viii.

Verse 2. I dwell in a house of cedar] That is, a house whose principal beams, ceiling, and wainscot, were cedar.

Dwelleth within curtains] Having no other residence but the tabernacle, which was a place covered with the skins of beasts, Exod. xxvi.

Verse 3. Nathan said to the king] In this case he gave his judgment, as a pious and prudent man, not as a prophet; for the prophets were not always under a divine afflatus: it was only at select times they were thus honoured.

For the LORD is with thee] Thou hast his blessing in all that thou dost; and this pious design of thine will most certainly meet with his approbation.

Verse 5. Shalt thou build me a house?] That is, Thou shalt not: this is the force of the interrogative in such a case.

Verse 7. With any of the TRIBES] “Spake I a word to any of the JUDGES,” is the reading in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xvii. 6.; and this is probably the true reading. Indeed, there is but one letter of difference between them; and letters which might easily be mistaken for each other: שבט shibtey, tribes, is almost the same in appearance with שופט shophtey, judges; the ב beth, and the פ phe, being the same letter, the apex under the upper stroke of the פ phe excepted. If this were but a little effaced in a MS. it would be mistaken for the other, and then we should have tribes instead of judges. This reading seems confirmed by ver. 11.

Verse 10. I will appoint a place] I have appointed a place; and have planted them. See the observations at the end.

Verse 11. The LORD—will make thee a house.] Thou hast in thy heart to make me a house; I have it in my heart to make thee a house: thy family shall be built up, and shall prosper in the throne of Israel; and thy spiritual posterity shall remain for ever. God is the author of all our holy purposes, as well as of our good works: He first excites them; and, if we be workers together with him, he will crown and reward them as though they were our own, though he is their sole author.

Verse 13. He shall build] That is, Solomon shall build my temple, not thou; because thou hast shed blood abundantly, and hast made great wars. See 1 Chron. xxii. 8.; and see the observations at the end.

The throne of his kingdom for ever.] This is a reference to the government of the spiritual kingdom; the kingdom of the Messiah, agreeable to the predictions of the prophet long after, and by which this passage is illustrated: "Of the increase of his government and peace; there shall be no end; upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom to order it and establish it with judgment and justice, from henceforth, even for ever." Isa. ix. 7.

Verse 14. If he (Solomon) commit iniquity] Depart from the holy commandment delivered to him; I will chasten him with the rod of men: he shall have affliction, but his government shall not be utterly subverted. But this has a higher meaning. See the observations at the end.

Verse 15. But my mercy shall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul] His cording to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

18 ¶ Then went King David in, and sat before the LORD, and he said, ⁱWho am I, O LORD God? and what is my house, that thou hast brought me hitherto?

19 And this was yet a small thing in thy sight, O LORD God, ^kbut thou hast spoken also of thy servant's house for a great while to come. ^lAnd is this the ^mmanner of man, O LORD God?

house shall be a lasting house, and he shall die in the throne of Israel, his children succeeding him: and the spiritual seed, Christ, possessing and ruling in that throne to the end of time.

The family of Saul became totally extinct; the family of David remained till the incarnation. Joseph and Mary were both of that family; Jesus was the only heir to the kingdom of Israel: he did not choose to sit on the secular throne, he ascended the spiritual throne; and now he is exalted to the right hand of God, a PRINCE and a Saviour, to give repentance and remission of sins. See the observations at the end of the chapter.

Many have applied these verses and their parallels to support the doctrine of unconditional final perseverance: but with it the text has nothing to do; and were we to press it, because of the antitype, Solomon, the doctrine would most evidently be ruined; because there is neither proof nor evidence of Solomon's salvation.

Verse 19. And is this the manner of man] Literally: And this, O Lord God is the law of Adam. Does he refer to the promise made to Adam, The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent? From my line shall the Messiah spring, and be the spiritual and triumphant king, for ever and ever? See the additions at the end.

Verse 20. What can David say more?] How can I express my endless obligations to thee.

Verse 25. And do as thou hast said.] David well knew that all the promises made to himself and family were conditional; and therefore he prays that they may be fulfilled. His posterity did not walk with God; and, therefore, they were driven from the throne. It was taken from them by the neighbouring nations; and it is now in the hands of the Mohammedans: all the promises have failed to David and his natural posterity; and to Christ and his spiritual seed alone are they fulfilled. Had David's posterity been faithful, they would, according to these promises of God, have been sitting on the Israelitish throne at this day.

It is worthy of remark, how seldom God employs a soldier in any spiritual work; just for the same reason as that given to David: and yet there have been several eminently pious men in the army, who have laboured for the conversion of sinners. I knew a remarkable instance of this: I was acquainted with Mr. John Haime, a well-known preacher among the people called Methodists. He was a soldier in the queen's eighth regiment of dragoons, in Flanders, in the years 1739—46. He had his horse shot under him at the battle of Fontenoy, May 11, 1745; and was in the hottest fire of the enemy for above seven hours: he preached among his fellow-soldiers frequently, and under the immediate patronage of his royal highness the duke of Cumberland, commander-in-chief; and was the means of reforming and converting many hundreds of the soldiers. He was a man of amazing courage and resolution, and of inflexible loyalty. One having expressed a wonder "how he could reconcile killing men with preaching the Gospel of the grace and peace of Christ?" He answered—I never killed a man.—"How can you tell that? Were you not in several battles?"—Yes; but I am confident I never killed nor wounded a man.—"How was this? Did you not do your duty?"—Yes, with all my might; but, when in battle, either my horse jumped aside, or was wounded, or was killed; or my carbine missed fire, and the God over Israel: and let the house of thy servant David be established before thee.

27 For thou, O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, hast revealed to thy servant, saying, I will build thee a house: therefore hath thy servant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee.

28 And now, O LORD God, thou art that God, and thy words be true, and thou hast promised this goodness unto thy servant:

29 Therefore now let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may continue for ever before thee: for thou, O LORD God, hast spoken it: and with thy blessing let the house of thy servant be blessed for ever.

* John 17. 17.—† Heb. be thou pleased and bless.—† Chap. 22. 51.

I could never draw the blood of the enemy.—"And would you have done it if you could?"—Yes, I would have slain the whole French army, had it been in my power: I fought in a good cause, for a good king, and for my country: and, though I struck in order to cut, and hack, and hew, on every side, I could kill no man.—This is the substance of his answers to the above questions; and we see from it a remarkable interfering providence: God had appointed this man to build a spiritual house in the British army, in Flanders; and would not permit him to shed the blood of his fellow-creatures.

"This chapter is one of the most important in the Old Testament; and yet some of its most interesting verses are very improperly rendered in our translation: it therefore demands our most careful consideration. And as, in the course of these remarks, I propose to consider, and hope to explain, some of the prophecies descriptive of THE MESSIAH, which were fulfilled in JESUS CHRIST; among which prophecies, that contained in this chapter is worthy of particular attention, I shall introduce it, with a general state of this great argument.

"It having pleased God that, between the time of a Messiah being promised, and the time of his coming, there should be delivered by the prophets a variety of marks, by which the Messiah was to be known, and distinguished from every other man, it was impossible for any one to prove himself the Messiah, whose character did not answer to these marks; and, of course, it was necessary, that all these criteria, thus divinely foretold, should be fulfilled in the character of Jesus Christ. That these prophetic descriptions of the Messiah were numerous, appears from Christ and his apostles, (Luke xxiv. 27, 44.; Acts xvii. 2, 3.; xxviii. 23, &c.) who referred the Jews to the Old Testament, as containing abundant evidence of his being THE MESSIAH, because he fulfilled all the prophecies descriptive of that singular character. The chief of these prophecies related to his being miraculously born of a virgin; the time and place of his birth; the tribe and family from which he was to descend; the miracles he was to perform; the manner of his preaching; his humility, and mean appearance; the perfect innocence of his life; the greatness of his sufferings; the treachery of his betrayer; the circumstances of his trial; the nature of his death and burial; and to his miraculous resurrection. Now, among all the circumstances which form this chain of prophecy, the first reference, made in the New Testament, relates to his descent: for the New Testament begins with asserting that JESUS CHRIST was the son of David, the son of Abraham. As to the descent of Christ from ABRAHAM; every one knows that Christ was born a Jew; and, consequently, descended from Jacob, the grandson of Abraham. And we all know, that the promise given to Abraham concerning the Messiah is recorded in the history of Abraham's life, in Gen. xxii. 18.: Christ being also to descend from DAVID, there can be no doubt that this promise, as made to David, was recorded likewise in the history of David. It is remarkable, that David's life is given more at large than that of any other person in the Old Testament;—and can it be supposed that the historian omitted to record that promise, which was more honourable to David than any other circumstance? The record of this promise, if written at all, must have been written in this chapter; in the message from God by Nathan to David, which is here inserted. Here (I am fully persuaded) the promise was, and still is, recorded: and the chief reason why our divines have so frequently missed it, or been so much perplexed about it, is owing to our very improper translation of the 10th and 14th verses.

“This wrong translation, in a part of Scripture so very interesting, has been artfully laid hold of, and expatiated upon splendidly, by the Deistical author of The Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion; who pretends to demonstrate, that the promise of a Messiah could not be here recorded. His reasons (hitherto I believe unanswered) are three:—1. Because, in ver. 10. the prophet speaks of the future prosperity of the Jews, as to be afterward fixed, and no more afflicted; which circumstances are totally repugnant to the fate of the Jews, as connected with the birth and death of Christ. 2. Because the Son, here promised, was (ver. 13.) to build a house; which house, it is pretended, must mean the temple of Solomon; and of course Solomon must be the son here promised: and, 3. Because, ver. 14. supposes, that this son might commit iniquity; which could not be supposed of The Messiah. The first of these objections is founded on our wrong translation of ver. 10. where the words should be expressed as relating to the time past or present. For the prophet is there declaring what great things God had already done for David and his people; that he had raised David from the sheepfold to the throne; and that he had planted the Israelites in a place of safety, at rest from all those enemies who had so often before afflicted them. That the verbs וַיִּשְׁמְרֵם vesamti, and וַיַּחַדְםָּ unatati may be rendered in the time past or present, is allowed by our own translators; who here (ver. 11.) render וַיִּבְרָא vebanichti and have caused thee to rest, and also render וַיַּחַדְםָּ and telleth: which construction, made necessary here by the context, might be confirmed by other proofs almost innumerable. The translation, therefore, should run thus: I took thee from the sheepcote; and have made thee a great name; and I HAVE APPOINTED a place for my people Israel; and HAVE PLANTED them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more. Neither do the children of wickedness afflict them any more; as beforetime, and as since the time that I commanded judges to be over Israel: and I HAVE CAUSED thee to rest from all thine enemies.

“Objection the second is founded on a mistake in the sense. David indeed had proposed to build a house to God, which God did not admit. Yet, approving the piety of David's intention, God was pleased to reward it by promising that HE would make a house for DAVID; which house, to be thus erected by God, was certainly not material, or made of stones; but a spiritual house, or family, to be raised up for the honour of God, and the salvation of mankind. And this house, which God would make, was to be built by David's seed; and this seed was to be raised up AFTER David slept with his fathers: which words clearly exclude Solomon, who was set up, and placed upon the throne, BEFORE David was dead. This building, promised by God, was to be erected by one of David's descendants, who was also to be an everlasting king: and indeed the house, and the kingdom, were both of them to be established for ever. Now that this house, or spiritual building, was to be set up, together with a kingdom, by the Messiah, is clear from Zechariah; who very emphatically says, (ch. vi. 12, 13.) Behold the man whose name is the Branch; HE SHALL BUILD THE TEMPLE OF THE Lord. Even HE SHALL BUILD THE TEMPLE OF THE Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne, &c. Observe, also, the language of the New Testament. In 1 Corinth. iii. 9—17. St. Paul says, Ye are God's BUILDING—Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?—the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. And the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews seems to have his eye upon this very promise in Samuel, concerning a son to David, and of the house which he should build: when he says, (iii. 6.) CHRIST, AS A SON, OVER HIS OWN HOUSE; WHOSE HOUSE ARE WE.

“As to the third and greatest difficulty, that also may be removed, by a more just translation of ver. 14.; for the Hebrew words do not properly signify what they are now made to speak. It is certain that the principal word בָּרַע behaato, is not the active infinitive of kal, which would be קָרַע; but קָרַע from קָרַע is in Niphal, אֶתְּרַע from רָעָה. It is also certain that a verb, which in the active voice signifies to commit iniquity, may in the passive signify to suffer for iniquity: and hence it is, that nouns from such verbs sometimes signify iniquity, sometimes punishment. See Lowth's Isa. page 187. with many other authorities, which shall be produced hereafter. The way being thus made clear, we are now prepared for abolishing our translation, if he commit iniquity; and also for adopting the true one—even in his suffering for iniquity. The Messiah, who is thus the person possibly here spoken of, will be made still more manifest from the whole verse thus translated. I will be his father, and he shall be my son: EVEN IN HIS SUFFERING FOR INIQUITY, I shall chasten him with the rod of men, (with the rod due to men,) and with the stripes (due to) the children of ADAM. And this construction is well supported by Isai. liii. 4; 5. He hath carried OUR sorrows, (i. e. the sorrows due to us, and which we must otherwise have suffered,) he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. See note page 479. in Hallet, on Heb. xi. 26. Thus, then, God declares himself the Father of the Son here meant; (See also Heb. i. 5.) and promises that, even amidst the sufferings of this Son, (as they would be for the sins of others, not for his own,) his mercy should still attend him; nor should his favour be ever removed from this king, as it had been from Saul. And thus (as it follows) thine house (O David,) and thy kingdom shall (in Messiah) be established for ever, before ME, (before GOD:) thy throne shall be established for ever. Thus the angel, delivering his message to the virgin-mother, Luke i. 32, 33, speaks, as if he was quoting from this very prophecy—The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father DAVID: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob FOR EVER: and of his kingdom there shall be no end. In ver. 16. לִּפְנֵי לִפְנֵי lipaneyca, is here rendered as לִּפְנֵי lipent, on the authority of three Hebrew MSS., with the Greek and Syriac versions; and, indeed, nothing could be established for ever, in the presence of David, but in the presence of God only.

“Having thus shown that the words fairly admit here the promise made to David, that from his seed should arise Messiah, the everlasting king; it may be necessary to add that, if the Messiah be the person here meant, as suffering innocently for the sins of others, Solomon cannot be; nor can this be a prophecy admitting such double sense, or be applied properly to two such opposite characters: Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of HIMSELF, or of SOME OTHER man? This was a question properly put by the Ethiopian treasurer, (Acts viii. 34,) who never dreamt that such a description as he was reading could relate to different persons: and Philip shows him that the person was Jesus only. So here it may be asked, Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of Solomon, or of Christ? It must be answered, of Christ: one reason is, because the description does not agree to Solomon; and therefore Solomon, being necessarily excluded in a single sense, must also be excluded in a double. Lastly, if it would be universally held absurd to consider the promise of Messiah made to ABRAHAM as relating to any other person besides Messiah; why is there not an equal absurdity in giving a double sense to the promise of Messiah thus made to DAVID?

“Next to our present very improper translation, the cause of the common confusion here has been—not distinguishing the promise here made, as to Messiah alone, from another made as to Solomon alone: the first brought by Nathan, the second by Gad; the first near the beginning of David's reign, the second near the end of it; the first, relating to Messiah's spiritual kingdom, everlasting without conditions; the second, relating to the rule of the temporal kingdom of Solomon, and his heirs, depending entirely on their obedience or rebellion. 1 Chron. xxii. 8—13. xxviii. 7. Let the first message be compared with this second, in 1 Chron. xxii. 8—13. which the Syriac version (at ver. 8.) tells us, was delivered by a prophet, and the Arabian says, by the prophet GAD. This second message was after David's many wars, when he had shed much blood; and it was this second message that, out of all David's sons, appointed Solomon to be his successor. At the time of the first message Solomon was not born; it being delivered soon after David became king at Jerusalem: but Solomon was born at the time of this second message. For though our translation very wrongly says, (1 Chron. xxii. 9.) a son SHALL BE born to thee—and his name shall be Solomon; yet the Hebrew text expressly speaks of him as then born—Behold, a son (וְיָלֵד natus est) IS BORN to thee: and, therefore, the words following must be rendered, Solomon is his name, and I will give peace in his days: he shall build a house for my name, &c.

“From David's address to GOD, after receiving the message by Nathan, it is plain that David understood the Son promised to be THE MESSIAH; in whom his house was to be established for ever. But the words, which seem most expressive of this, are in this verse now rendered very unintelligibly: And is this the manner of man? Whereas the words וְהָאָדָם הַזֶּה vezeoth toruth ha Adam, literally signify, and this is (or must be) the law of the man, or of the Adam, i. e. this promise must relate to the law, or ordinance, made by GOD to Adam, concerning the Seed of the woman; the man, or the second ADAM; as the Messiah is expressly called by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 45, 47. This meaning will be yet more evident from the parallel place, 1 Chron. xvii. 17. where the words of David are now miserably rendered thus: and thou hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree: whereas, the words וְהָאָדָם הַזֶּה הָאֵלֹהִים ureitani ketor ha Adam hammaalah, literally signify, and thou hast regarded me, according to the order of the ADAM THAT IS FUTURE, OR THE MAN THAT IS FROM ABOVE (for the word וְהָאָדָם hammaalah, very remarkably signifies hereafter as to time, and from above as to place:) and thus St. Paul, including both senses—THE SECOND MAN IS THE LORD FROM HEAVEN—and Adam is the figure of him that was to come, or the future, Rom. v. 14. See the preface of the late learned Mr. Peters, on Job; referred to, and confirmed as to this interesting point, in a note subjoined to my sermon on A VIRGIN SHALL CONCEIVE, &c. page 49—52. 8vo. 1765. A part of that note here follows:—‘The speech of David (2 Sam. vii. 18—29.) is such as one might naturally expect from a person overwhelmed with the greatness of the promised blessing: for it is abrupt, full of wonder, and fraught with repetitions. And now, what can David say unto thee? What, indeed! For thou, LORD GOD, knowest thy servant: thou knowest the hearts of all men, and seest how full my own heart is. For thy word's sake, for the sake of former prophecies; and according to thine own heart, from the mere motive of thy wisdom and goodness; hast thou done all these great things, to make thy servant know them. I now perceive the reason of those miraculous providences which have attended me from my youth up; taken from following the sheep, and conducted through all difficulties to be ruler of thy people: and shall I distrust the promise now made me? Thy words be true. If the preceding remarks on this whole passage be just, and well grounded; then may we see clearly the chief foundation of what St. Peter tells us (Acts ii. 30.) concerning DAVID: that, being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up CHRIST, to sit on his throne; he, seeing this before, spoke of the resurrection of Christ, &c."

NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. David took Metheg-ammah.] This is variously translated. The Vulgate has, tulit David frænum tributû: David removed the bondage of the tribute which the Israelites paid to the Philistines. Some think it means a fortress, city, or strong town; but no such place as Metheg-ammah is known. Probably the Vulgate is nearest the truth. The versions are all different. See the following comparison of the principal passages here collated with the parallel place in 1 Chron.

meaning much more respectable to that king. The first clause of the verse seems to determine the sense: he measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground; to put to death, and with one line to keep alive. Death seems here to be referred to the cities by way of metaphor; and, from this view of the subject, we may conclude, that two-thirds of the cities, that is, the strong places of Moab, were erased; and not having strong places to trust to, the text adds, so the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts, i. e. were obliged to pay tribute. The word line may mean the same here as our rod; i. e. the instrument by which land is measured. There are various opinions on this verse, with which I shall not trouble the reader. Much may be seen in Calmet and Dodd.

Verse 3. David smote—Hadadezer.] He is supposed to have been king of all Syria, except Phœnicia; and, wishing to extend his dominions to the Euphrates, invaded a part of David's dominions which lay contiguous to it: but being attacked by David, he was totally routed.

Verse 4. A thousand chariots.] It is strange that there were a thousand chariots, and only seven hundred horsemen taken, and twenty thousand foot. But as the discomfiture appears complete, we may suppose that the chariots being less manageable, might be more easily taken, while the horsemen might, in general, make their escape. The infantry also seem to have been surrounded, when twenty thousand of them were taken prisoners.

David houghed all the chariot-horses.] If he did so, it was both unreasonable and inhuman; for, as he had so complete a victory, there was no danger of these horses falling into the enemy's hands: and if he did not choose to keep them, which, indeed, the law would not permit, he should have killed them outright; and then the poor innocent creatures would for a hundred chariots: ⁵ And when the Syrians of Damascus came to succour Hadadezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

6 Then David put garrisons in Syria of Damascus: and the Syrians ^a became servants to David, and brought gifts. ^b And the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

7 And David took ^c the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadadezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

8 And from ^d Bethah, and from ^e Berothai, cities of Hadadezer, King David took exceeding much brass.

have been put out of pain. But does the text speak of houghing horses at all? It does not. Let us hear, וקצר דוד את כל הרכב, wayaaker David eth col harecab: And David disappointed all the chariots, except a hundred chariots which he reserved for himself. Now, this destruction of the chariots was a matter of sound policy, and strict piety. God had censured those who trusted in chariots; piety, therefore, forbade David the use of them: and lest they should fall into the enemy's hands, and be again used against him, policy induced him to destroy them. The Septuagint render the words nearly as I have done, καὶ παρέλυσεν Δαυὶδ πάντα τὰ ἄρματα.

He kept, however, one hundred; probably as a sort of baggage or forage wagons.

Verse 6. Brought gifts] Paid tribute.

Verse 7. David took the shields of gold] We know not what these were. Some translate arms, others quivers, others bracelets, others collars, and others shields. They were probably costly ornaments, by which the Syrian soldiers were decked and distinguished.

Verse 9. Toi king of Hamath] Hamath is supposed to be the famous city of Emessa, situated on the Orontes, in Syria. This was contiguous to Hadadezer; and led him to wage war with Toi, that he might get possession of gold that he had dedicated of all nations which he subdued: A. M. 2064. B. C. 1040. An. Exod. Isr. 451.

his territories. For a comparison of the tenth verse, see 1 Chron. xviii. 9.

Verse 13. David gat him a name] Became a very celebrated and eminent man. The Targum has it, David collected troops; namely, to recruit his army, when he returned from smiting the Syrians. His many battles had, no doubt, greatly thinned his army.

The valley of Salt] Supposed to be a large plain, abounding in this mineral, about a league from the city of Palmyra, or Tadmor in the wilderness.

Verse 14. He put garrisons in Edom] He repaired the strong cities which he had taken, and put garrisons in them, to keep the country in awe.

Verse 18. Benaiah] The chief of the second class of David's worthies. We shall meet with him again.

The Cherethites, and the Pelethites] The former supposed to be those who accompanied David when he fled from Saul; the latter those who came to him at Ziklag. But the Targum translates these two names thus: the archers, and the slingers; and this is by far the most likely. It is not at all probable that David was without a company both of archers and slingers. The bow is celebrated in the funeral lamentation over Saul and Jonathan; and the sling was renowned as the weapon of the Israelites: and how expert David was in the use of it, we learn from the death of Goliath. I take for granted that the Chaldee paraphrast is correct. No weapons, then known, were equally powerful with these: the spears, swords, and javelins of other nations were as stubble before them. The bow was the grand weapon of our English ancestors: and, even after the invention of firearms, they were with difficulty persuaded to prefer them.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IX.

Verse 1. Is there yet any that is left] David, recollecting the covenant made with his friend Jonathan, now inquires after his family. It is supposed that political considerations prevented him from doing this sooner. Reasons of state often destroy all the charities of life.

Verse 3. That I may show the kindness of God unto him] That is, the utmost, the highest degrees of kindness; as the hail of God is very great hail; the mountains of God exceeding high mountains: besides, this kindness was according to the covenant of God made between him and the family of Jonathan.

Verse 4. Lo-debar.] Supposed to have been situated beyond Jordan: but there is nothing certain known concerning it.

Verse 7. Will restore thee all the land] I believe this means the mere family estate of the house of Kish, which David, as king, might have retained; but which, most certainly, belonged, according to the Israelitish law, to the descendants of the family.

And thou shalt eat bread at my table] This was kindness; the giving up the land was jus-

7 ¶ And David said unto him, Fear not: ^afor I will surely show thee kindness for Jonathan thy father's sake, and will restore thee all the land of Saul thy father; and thou shalt eat bread at my table continually.

8 And he bowed himself, and said, What is thy servant, that thou shouldest look upon such ^ba dead dog as I am?

9 ¶ Then the king called to Ziba, Saul's servant, and said unto him, I have given unto thy master's son all that pertained to Saul, and to all his house.

10 Thou therefore, and thy sons, and thy servants, shall till the land for him, and thou shalt bring in the fruits, that tice; and it was the highest honour that any subject could enjoy, as we may see from the reference made to it by our Lord, Luke xxii. 10. That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom. For such a person David could do no more. His lameness rendered him unfit for any public employment.

Verse 9. I have given unto thy master's son] Unless Ziba had been servant of Jonathan, this seems to refer to Micah, son of Mephibosheth; and so some understand it: but it is more likely that Mephibosheth is meant, who is called son of Saul, instead of grandson. Yet it is evident enough that the produce of the land went to the support of Micah, see ver. 10; for the father was provided for at the table of David: but all the patrimony belonged to Mephibosheth.

Verse 10. Thou therefore, and thy sons—shall till the land] It seems that Ziba and his family had the care of the whole estate, and cultivated it at their own expense, yielding the half of the produce to the family of Mephibosheth. Ziba was properly the hind, whose duty and interest it was to take proper care of the ground; for the better it was cultivated, the more it produced; and his half would, consequently, be the greater.

Verse 11. So shall thy servant do.] The promises of Ziba were fair and specious; but he was a traitor in his heart, as we shall see in the rebellion of Absalom; and David's indulgence to this man, is a blot in his character; at this time, however, he suspected no evil; circumstances alone can develop the human character. The internal villain can be known only when circumstances occur which can call his propensities into action: till then he may be reputed an honest man.

Verse 13. Did eat continually at the king's table] He was fit for no public office, but was treated by the king with the utmost respect and affection.

^a 1 Chron. 19. 1, &c.—^b Heb. In thine eyes doth David?

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 2. I will show kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash] We do not know exactly the nature or extent of the obligation which David was under to the king of the Ammonites; but it is likely that the Nahash here mentioned was the same who had attacked Jabesh Gilead, and whom Saul defeated: as David had taken refuge with the Moabites, 1 Sam. xxii. 3. and this was contiguous to the king of the Ammonites, his hatred to Saul might induce him to show particular kindness to David.

Verse 3. Thinkest thou that David doth honour thy father] It has been a matter of just complaint through all the history of mankind, that there is little sincerity in courts: courtiers, especially, are suspicious of each other; and often mislead their sovereigns.

Verse 4. Shaved off the one-half of their thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? hath not David rather sent his servants unto thee, to search the city, and to spy it out, and to overthrow it?

4 Wherefore Hanun took David's servants, and shaved off the one-half of their beards, and cut off their garments in the middle, ^c even to their buttocks, and sent them away.

5 When they told it unto David, he sent to meet them, because the men were greatly ashamed: and the king said, Tarry at Jericho until your beards beards] The beard is held in high respect in the East: the possessor considers it his greatest ornament; often swears by it; and, in matters of great importance, pledges it. Nothing can be more secure than a pledge of this kind; its owner will redeem it at the hazard of his life. The beard was never cut off but in mourning, or as a sign of slavery. Cutting off half of the beard and the clothes, rendered the men ridiculous, and made them look like slaves: what was done to these men was an accumulation of insult.

Verse 5. Tarry at Jericho] This city had not been rebuilt since the time of Joshua: but there were, no doubt, many cottages still remaining, and larger dwellings also; but the walls had not been repaired. As it must have been comparatively a private place, it was proper for these men to tarry in, as they would not be exposed to public notice.

be grown, and then return. 6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they ^dstank before David, the children of Ammon sent and hired ^ethe Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba, twenty thousand footmen, and of King Maacah a thousand men, and of ^fIsh-tob twelve thousand men.

7 And when David heard of it, he sent Joab, and all the host of ^gthe mighty men.

8 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array at the entering in of the gate: and ^hthe Syrians of Zoba, and of Rehob, and Ish-tob, and Maacah, were by themselves in the field.

9 When Joab saw that the front of the battle was against him before and behind, he chose of all the choice men of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians:

10 And the rest of the people he delivered into the hand of Abishai his brother, that he might put them in array against the children of Ammon.

11 And he said, If the Syrians be too strong for me; then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will come and help thee.

Verse 6. The children of Ammon saw that they stank] That is, that their conduct rendered them abominable. This is the Hebrew mode of expressing such a feeling. See Gen. xxxiv. 30.

The Syrians of Beth-rehob] This place was situated at the extremity of the valley between Libanus and Anti-libanus. The Syrians of Zoba were subject to Hadarezer. Maacah was in the vicinity of mount Hermon, beyond Jordan, in the Trachonitis.

Ish-tob] This was probably the same with Tob, to which Jephthah fled from the cruelty of his brethren. It was situated in the land of Gilead.

Verse 7. All the host of the mighty] All his worthies, and the flower of his army.

Verse 8. At the entering in of the gate] This was the city of Medeba, as we learn from 1 Chron. xix. 7.

Verse 9. Before and behind] It is probable that one of the armies was in the field, and the other in the city, when Joab arrived. When he fronted this army, the other appears to have issued from the city, and to have taken him in the rear: he was, therefore, obliged to divide 13 And Joab drew nigh, and the people that were with him, unto the battle against the Syrians: and they fled before him.

14 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, then fled they also before Abishai, and entered into the city. So Joab returned from the children of Ammon, and came to Jerusalem.

15 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were smitten before Israel, they gathered themselves together.

Verse 12. Be of good courage] This is a very fine military address; and is equal to any thing in ancient or modern times. Ye fight pro aris et focis; for every good, sacred and civil; for God, for your families, and for your country.

Verse 14. The Syrians were fled] They betook themselves to their own confines, while the Ammonites escaped into their own city.

place, 1 Chron. xix. 18. it is said, David slew of the Syrians SEVEN THOUSAND men, which fought in chariots.

And forty thousand HORSEMEN] It is difficult to ascertain the right number in this and similar places. It is very probable that, in former times, the Jews expressed, as they often do now, their numbers not by words at full length, but by numeral letters: and, as many of the letters bear a great similarity to each other, mistakes might easily creep in, when the numeral letters came to be expressed by words at full length. This alone will account for the many mistakes which we find in the numbers in these books; and renders a mistake here very probable. The letter zain, with a dot above, stands for seven thousand; and the letter nun, for seven hundred: the great similarity of these letters might easily cause the one to be mistaken for the other, and so produce an error in this place.

Verse 19. Made peace with Israel] They made this peace separately; and were obliged to pay tribute to the Israelites. Some copies of the Vulgate add here, after the word Israel, Expaverunt et fugerunt quinquaginta et octo milia coram Israel; and they were panic-struck, and fled fifty-eight thousand of them before Israel. This reading is nowhere else to be found. "Thus," observes Dr. Delaney,

"the arms of David were blessed; and God accomplished the promises which he had made to Abraham, (Gen. xv. 18.) and renewed to Joshua, i. 2, 4. And thus, in the space of nineteen or twenty years, David had the good fortune to finish gloriously eight wars; all righteously undertaken, and all honourably terminated, viz. 1. The civil war with Ish-bosheth—2. The war against the Jebusites—3. The war against the Philistines and their allies—4. The war against the Philistines alone—5. The war against the Moabites—6. The war against Hadadezer—7. The war against the Idumeans—8. The war against the Ammonites and Syrians. This last victory was soon followed by the complete conquest of the kingdom of the Ammonites, abandoned by their allies. What glory to the monarch of Israel, had not the splendour of this illustrious epoch been obscured by a complication of crimes, of which one could never have even suspected him capable!"

We have now done with the first part of this Book, in which we find David great, glorious, and pious: we come to the second part, in which we shall have the pain to observe him fallen from God, and his horn defiled in the dust, by crimes of the most flagitious nature. Let him that most assuredly standeth, take heed lest he fall.

CHAPTER XI.

David sends Joab against the Ammonites, who besieges the city of Rabbah, 1. He sees Bath-sheba, the wife of Uriah, bathing; is enamoured of her; sends for, and takes her to his bed, 2—4. She conceives, and informs David, 5. David sends to Joab, and orders him to send to him Uriah, 6. He arrives; and David, having inquired the state of the army, dismissed him, desiring him to go to his own house, 7, 8. Uriah sleeps at the door of the king's house, 9. The next day, the king urges him to go to his house; but he refuses to go, and gives the most pious and loyal reasons for his refusal, 10, 11. David, after two days, sends him back to the army, with a letter to Joab, desiring him to place Uriah in the front of the battle, that he might be slain, 12—15. He does so; and Uriah falls, 16. Joab communicates this news in an artful message to David, 18—25. David sends for Bath-sheba, and takes her to wife; and she bears him a son, 26, 27.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. When kings go forth] This was about a year after the war with the Syrians, spoken of before; and about the spring of the year, as the most proper season for military operations. Calmet thinks they made two campaigns, one in autumn and the other in spring; the winter being, in many respects, inconvenient; and the summer too hot.

Verse 2. In an evening-tide—David arose] He had been reposing on the roof of his house,

2 ¶ And it came to pass in an evening-tide, that David arose from off his bed, and walked upon the roof of the king's house: and from the roof he saw a woman washing herself; and the woman was very beautiful to look upon.

3 And David sent and inquired after to enjoy the breeze, as the noon-day was too hot for the performance of business. This is a constant custom on the flat-roofed houses in the East.

He saw a woman washing herself] How could any woman of delicacy expose herself where she could be so fully and openly viewed! Did she not know that she was at least in view of the king's terrace? Was there no design in all this? Et fugit ad salices, et se cupit ante videri.

the woman. And one said, Is not this ^e Bath-sheba, the daughter of ^f Eliam, the wife ^g of Uriah the Hittite?

4 And David sent messengers, and took her; and she came in unto him, and ^h he lay with her; ⁱ for she was ^k purified from her uncleanness: and she returned unto her house.

5 ¶ And the woman conceived, and sent and told David, and said, I am with child.

6 And David sent to Joab, saying, Send me Uriah the Hittite. And Joab sent Uriah to David.

7 And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him ^l how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered.

8 And David said to Uriah, Go down to thy house, and ^m wash thy feet. And Uriah departed out of the king's house, and there ⁿ followed him a mess of meat from the king.

9 But Uriah slept at the door of the king's house with all the servants of his lord, and went not down to his house.

Verse 4, shows us that this washing was at the termination of a particular period.

Verse 3. The daughter of Eliam] Called 1 Chron. iii. 5. Ammiel; a word of the same meaning, The people of my God, The God of my people. The name expressed the covenant—I will be your God: We will be thy people.

Verse 4. And she came in unto him] We hear nothing of her reluctance; and there is no evidence that she was taken per force.

Verse 5. And the woman conceived] A proof of the observation on verse 2; as that is the time in which women are most apt to conceive.

Verse 8. Go down to thy house and wash thy feet] Uriah had come off a journey, and needed this refreshment; but David's design was, that he should go and lie with his wife, that the child now conceived should pass for his, the honour of Bath-sheba be screened, and his own crime concealed. At this time he had no design of the murder of Uriah, nor of taking Bath-sheba to wife.

A mess of meat from the king.] All this was artfully conceived.

Verse 9. Slept at the door] That is, in one of the apartments, or niches, in the court of the king's house.

Verse 10. Camest thou not from thy journey] It is not thy duty to keep watch or guard; thou art come from a journey, and needest rest and refreshment.

Verse 11. The ark, and Israel—abide in tents] It appears, therefore, that they had taken the ark with them to battle.

This was the answer of a brave, generous,

10 And when they had told David, saying, Uriah went not down unto his house, David said unto Uriah, Camest thou not from thy journey? why then didst thou not go down unto thine house?

11 And Uriah said unto David, ^o The ark, and Israel, and Judah, abide in tents; and ^p my lord Joab, and the servants of my lord, are encamped in the open fields; shall I then go into mine house, to eat and to drink, and to lie with my wife? as thou livest, and as thy soul liveth, I will not do this thing.

12 And David said to Uriah, Tarry here to-day also, and to-morrow I will let thee depart. So Uriah abode in Jerusalem that day, and the morrow.

13 And when David had called him, he did eat and drink before him; and he made him ^q drunk: and at even he went out to lie on his bed ^r with the servants of his lord, but went not down to his house.

14 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that David ^s wrote a letter to Joab, and disinterested man. I will not indulge myself while all my fellow-soldiers are exposed to hardships; and even the ark of the Lord in danger.

Verse 13. He made him drunk] Supposing that, in this state, he would have been off his guard, and hastened down to his house.

Verse 14. David wrote a letter] This was the sum of treachery and villany. He made this most noble man the carrier of letters which prescribed the mode in which he was to be murdered. This case some have likened to that of Bellerophon, son of Glaucus, king of Ephrya; who, being in the court of Prætus, king of the Argives, his queen Antia, or as others Sthenobœa, fell violently in love with him: but he, refusing to gratify her criminal passion, was, in revenge, accused by her to Prætus her husband, as having attempted to corrupt her. Prætus, not willing to violate the laws of hospitality, by slaying him in his own house, wrote letters to Jobates, king of Lycia, the father of Sthenobœa; and sent them by the hand of Bellerophon, stating his crime, and desiring Jobates to put him to death. To meet the wishes of his son-in-law, and keep his own hands innocent of blood, he sent him with a small force against a very warlike people called the Solyms; but, contrary to all expectation, he not only escaped with his life, but gained a complete victory over them. He was afterward sent upon several equally dangerous and hopeless expeditions, but still came off with success; and, to reward him, Jobates gave him one of his daughters to wife, and a part of his and sent it by the hand of Uriah.

15 And he wrote in the letter, saying, Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the ^u hottest battle, and retire ye ^v from him, that he may ^w be smitten, and die.

16 And it came to pass, when Joab observed the city, that he assigned Uriah unto a place where he knew that valiant men were.

17 And the men of the city went out, and fought with Joab: and there fell some of the people of the servants of David; and Uriah the Hittite died also.

18 ¶ Then Joab sent and told David all the things concerning the war;

19 And charged the messenger, saying, When thou hast made an end of telling the matters of the war unto the king,

20 And if so be that the king's wrath arise, and he say unto thee, Wherefore approached ye so nigh unto the city when ye did fight? knew ye not that they would shoot from the wall?

Kingdom. Sthenobœa, hearing this, through rage and despair, killed herself.

I have given this history at large, because many have thought it not only to be parallel to that of Uriah, but to be a fabulous formation from the Scripture fact: for my own part, I scarcely see in them any correspondence, but in the simple circumstance that both carried those letters which contained their own condemnation: From the fable of Bellerophon, came the proverb, Bellerophontis litteras portare, "to carry one's own condemnation."

Verse 17. Uriah the Hittite died also.] He was led to the attack of a place defended by valiant men; and, in the heat of the assault, Joab and his men retired from this brave soldier, who cheerfully gave up his life for his king and his country!

Verse 20. If—the king's wrath arise] It is likely that Joab had, by some indiscretion, suffered loss about this time; and he contrived to get rid of the odium by connecting the transaction with the death of Uriah, which he knew would be so pleasing to the king.

Verse 25. The sword devoureth one as well as another] What abominable hypocrisy was here! He well knew that Uriah's death was no chance-medley; he was, by his own order, thrust on the edge of the sword.

Verse 26. She mourned for her husband.] The whole of her conduct indicates that she observed the form, without feeling the power, then say thou, Thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also.

22 ¶ So the messenger ^z went, and came and showed David all that Joab had sent him for.

23 And the messenger said unto David, Surely the men prevailed against us, and came out unto us into the field, and we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate.

24 And the shooters shot from off the wall upon thy servants; and some of the king's servants be dead; and thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also.

25 Then David said unto the messenger, Thus shalt thou say unto Joab, Let not this thing ^a displease thee, for the sword devoureth ^a one as well as another: make thy battle more strong against the city, and overthrow it; and encourage thou him.

26 ¶ And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her husband was dead, she mourned for her husband.

27 And when the mourning was past, David sent and fetched her to his house, and she ^b became his wife, and bare him a son. But the thing that David had done ^c displeased the LORD.

of sorrow. She lost a captain, and got a king for her spouse: this must have been deep affliction indeed; and, therefore—

Lacrymas non sponte cadentes Effudit; gemitusque expressit pectore lato.

"She shed reluctant tears; and forced out groans from a joyful heart!"

Verse 27. When the mourning was past] Probably it lasted only seven days.

She became his wife] This hurried marriage was, no doubt, intended on both sides, to cover the pregnancy.

But the thing that David had done displeased the LORD.] It was necessary to add this; lest the splendour of David's former virtues should induce any to suppose his crimes were passed over, or looked on with an indulgent eye, by the God of purity and justice. Sorely he sinned, and sorely did he suffer for it: he sowed one grain of sweet, and reaped a long harvest of calamity and wo.

On a review of the whole, I hesitate not to say that the preceding chapter is an illustrious proof of the truth of the Sacred Writings. Who, that intended to deceive by trumping up a religion which he designed to father on the purity of God, would have inserted such an account of one of its most zealous advocates, and once its brightest ornament? God alone, whose character is impartiality, has done it to show that his religion, librata ponderibus suis, will ever stand independently of the conduct of its professors.

Drs. Delaney, Chandler, and others, have taken great pains to excuse and varnish this conduct of David; and, while I admire their ingenuity, I abhor the tendency of their doctrine; being fully convinced that he who writes on this subject, should write like the inspired penman, who tells the TRUTH, the whole TRUTH, and nothing but the TRUTH.

David may be pitied, because he had fallen from great eminence—but who can help deploring the fate of the brave, the faithful, the incorruptible Uriah! Bath-sheba was probably first in the transgression, by a too public display of her charms; by which, accidentally, the heart of David was affected, wounded, and blinded. He committed one crime, which led him to use many shifts to conceal: these all failing, he is led from step to step to the highest degree of guilt. Not only does he feel that his and her honour, but even their lives, are at stake; for death, by the law of Moses, was the punishment of adultery. He thought, therefore, that either Uriah must die, or he and Bath-sheba perish for their iniquity: for that law had made no provision to save the life of even a king, who transgressed its precepts. He must not embroil his own hands in the blood of this brave man; but he employs him on a service from which his bravery would not permit him to shrink; and in which, from the nature of his circumstances, he must inevitably perish! The awful trial is made, and it succeeds! The criminal king, and his criminal paramour, are, for a moment, concealed; and one of the bravest of men falls an affectionate victim for the safety and support of him, by whom his spotless blood is shed! But what shall we say of Joab, the wicked executor of the base commands of his fallen master? He was a ruffian, not a soldier: base and barbarous beyond example, in his calling; a pander to the vices of his monarch, while he was aware that he was outraging every law of religion, piety, honour, and arms! It is difficult to state the characters, sum up, and apportion the quantity of vice chargeable on each.

Let David, once the pious, noble, generous, and benevolent hero, who, when almost perishing with thirst, would not taste the water which his brave men had acquired at the hazard of their lives; let this David, I say, be considered an awful example of apostasy from religion, justice, and virtue; Bath-sheba, of lightness and conjugal infidelity; Joab, of base, unmanly, and cold-blooded cruelty; Uriah, of untarnished heroism, inflexible fidelity, and unspotted virtue; and then justice will be done to each character. For my own part, I must say I pity David; I venerate Uriah; I detest Joab; and think meanly of Bath-sheba. Similar crimes have been repeatedly committed in similar circumstances. I shall take my leave of the whole with—

*Id commune malum; semel insanivimus omnes;
Aut sumus, aut fuimus, aut possumus, omne quod hic est.*

God of purity and mercy, save the reader from the (εὐεργιστοῦ ἀμαρτίας) well-circumstanced sin; and let him learn—

“Where many mightier have been slain;
By thee unsaved—he falls.”

CHAPTER XII.

The Lord sends Nathan the prophet to reprove David; which he does, by means of a curious parable, 1—4. David is led, unknowingly, to pronounce his own condemnation, 5, 6. Nathan charges the guilt home on his conscience; and predicts a long train of calamities which should fall on him and his family, 7—12. David confesses his sin; and Nathan gives him hope of God's mercy, and foretells the death of the child born in adultery, 13, 14. The child is taken ill; David fasts and prays for its restoration, 15—17. On the seventh day the child dies, and David is comforted, 18—24. Solomon is born of Bath-sheba, 25, 26. Joab besieges Rabbah of the Ammonites, takes the city of waters, and sends for David to take Rabbah, 27, 28. He comes, takes it, gets much spoil, and puts the inhabitants to hard labour, 29—31.

AND the LORD sent Nathan unto David. And he came unto him, and said unto him, There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor.

The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds;

But the poor man had nothing save one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought, and nourished up; and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it did eat of his own meat, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was unto him as a daughter.

4 And there came a traveller unto the rich man, and he spared to take of his own flock, and of his own herd, to dress for the wayfaring man that was come unto him; but took the poor man's lamb, and dressed it for the man that was come to him.

5 And David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said

20. 35—41. Isai. 5. 3.—c Hebr. morsel.

Verse 3. And lay in his bosom] This can only mean that this lamb was what we call a pet, or favourite, in the family, else the circumstance would be very unnatural, and most likely would have prevented David from making the application which he did; as otherwise, it would have appeared absurd. It is the only part of this parable which is at variance with nature and fact.

to Nathan, As the LORD liveth, the man that hath done this thing ^d shall surely die :

6 And he shall restore the lamb ^e four-fold, because he did this thing, and because he had no pity.

7 ¶ And Nathan said to David, Thou art the man. Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, I ^f anointed thee king over Israel, and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul ;

8 And I gave thee thy master's house, and thy master's wives into thy bosom, and gave thee the house of Israel and of Judah ; and if that had been too little, I would moreover have given unto thee such and such things.

a very bad man, and one who deserves to die. But the law did not sentence a sheep-stealer to death : let us hear it : If a man steal an ox or a sheep, he shall restore FIVE OXEN for an ox, and FOUR SHEEP for a sheep, Exod. xxii. 1. : and hence David immediately says, He shall restore the lamb fourfold.

Verse 7. Thou art the man.] What a terrible word ! and by it David appears to have been transfixed ; and brought into the dust before the messenger of God.

THOU ART this son of death ; and thou shalt restore this lamb fourfold. Is it indulging fancy too much to say David was called, in the course of a just providence, to pay this fourfold debt : to lose four sons by untimely deaths, viz. this son of Bath-shebah, on whom David had set his heart, was slain by the Lord : Amnon, murdered by his brother Absalom ; Absalom, slain in the oak by Joab ; and Adonijah, slain by the order of his brother Solomon, even at the altar of the Lord. The sword and calamity did not depart from his house, from the murder of wretched Amnon by his brother, to the slaughter of the sons of Zedekiah, before their father's eyes, by the king of Babylon. His daughter was dishonoured by her own brother ; and his wives contaminated, publicly, by his own son ! How dreadfully, then, was David punished for his sin ! Who would repeat his transgression to share in its penalty ! Can his conduct ever be an inducement to, or an encouragement in sin ? Surely, No. It must ever fill the reader and the hearer with horror : behold the goodness and severity of God ! Reader, lay all these solemn things to heart.

Verse 8. Thy master's wives into thy bosom] Perhaps this means no more than that he had given him absolute power over every thing possessed by Saul ; and as it was the custom for the new king to succeed even to the wives and concubines, the whole haram of the deceased king, so it was in this case ; and the possession of the wives was a sure proof that he had got all regal rights. But could David, as the son-in-law of Saul, take the wives of his father-in-law ? However, we find delicacy was seldom consulted in these cases ! and Absalom lay with his own father's wives, in the most public manner, to show that he had seized on the kingdom, because the wives of the preceding belonged to the succeeding king, and to none other.

Verse 9. Thou hast killed Uriah] THOU art the MURDERER, as having planned his death : the sword of the Ammonites was thy instrument only.

Verse 11. I will take thy wives] That is, in the course of my providence, I will permit all this to be done. Had David been faithful, God, by his providence, would have turned all this aside ; but now, by his sin, he has made that providence his enemy, which before was his friend.

Verse 13. The LORD—hath put away thy sin] Many have supposed that David's sin was now actually pardoned, but this is perfectly erroneous ; David, as an adulterer, was condemned to death by the law of God ; and he had, according to that law, passed sentence of death upon himself. God alone, whose law that was, could revoke that sentence, or dispense with its execution ; therefore, Nathan, who had charged the guilt home upon his conscience, is authorized to give him the assurance that he should not die a temporal death for it : the Lord hath put away thy sin ; thou shalt not die—this is all that is contained in the assurance given by Nathan ; thou shalt not die that temporal death ; thou shalt be preserved alive, that thou mayest have time to repent, turn to God, and find mercy. If the 51st Psalm, as is generally supposed, were written on this occasion, then it is evident (as the psalm must have been written after this interview) that David had not re-

Nathan said unto David, P The LORD also hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die.

14 Howbeit, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the LORD to blaspheme, the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die.

15 ¶ And Nathan departed unto his house. And the LORD struck the child that Uriah's wife bare unto David, and it was very sick.

16 David therefore besought God for the child; and David fasted, and went in, and lay all night upon the earth.

17 And the elders of his house arose, and went to him, to raise him up from the earth; but he would not, neither did he eat bread with them.

18 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that the child died. And the servants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead; for they said, Behold, while the child was yet alive, we spake unto him, and he would not hearken unto our voice: how will he ceived pardon for his sin from God, at the time he composed it; for, in it, he confesses the crime in order to find mercy.

There is something very remarkable in the words of Nathan, The LORD also hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die: וְנָתַן יְהוָה אֶת חַטֹּאתֶיךָ לְדָוִד לֵאמֹר לֹא מוֹת יָמוֹת לֹא מוֹת, gam Jehovah heëbir chattatecha, lo tamuth, Also Jehovah hath caused thy sin to pass over, or transferred thy sin; thou shalt not die. God has transferred the legal punishment of this sin to the child: HE shall die, THOU shalt not die; and this is the very point on which the prophet gives him the most direct information—The child that is born unto thee shall surely die; מוֹת מוֹת יָמוֹת, moth yamuth, dying he shall die; he shall be in a dying state seven days, and then he shall die. So God immediately struck the child, and it was very sick.

Verse 16. David—besought God for the child] How could he do so, after the solemn assurance that he had from God that the child should die? The justice of God absolutely required that the penalty of the law should be exacted; either the father or the son shall die. This could not be reversed.

Verse 22. Who can tell] David, and indeed all others, under the Mosaic dispensation, were so satisfied that all God's threatenings and promises were conditional, that even in the most positive assertions relative to judgments, &c. they sought for a change of purpose. And notwithstanding the positive declaration of Nathan, relative to the death of the child, David sought for his life, not knowing but that might depend on some unexpressed condition; such as earnest

19 But when David saw that his servants whispered, David perceived that the child was dead: therefore David said unto his servants, Is the child dead? And they said, He is dead.

20 Then David arose from the earth, and washed, and anointed himself, and changed his apparel, and came into the house of the LORD, and worshipped: then he came to his own house; and when he required, they set bread before him, and he did eat.

21 Then said his servants unto him, What thing is this that thou hast done? thou didst fast and weep for the child while it was alive; but when the child was dead, thou didst rise and eat bread.

22 And he said, While the child was yet alive, I fasted and wept: for I said, Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live?

23 But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? can I bring him back prayer, fasting, humiliation, &c.; and in these he continued while there was hope. When the child died, he ceased to grieve, as he now saw that this must be fruitless. This appears to be the sole reason of David's importunity.

Verse 23. I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me.] It is not clear whether David, by this, expressed his faith in the immortality of the soul: going to him may only mean, I also shall die, and be gathered to my fathers, as he is. But whether David expressed this or not, we know that the thing is true: and it is one of the most solid grounds of consolation to surviving friends, that they shall by and by be joined to them in a state of conscious existence. This doctrine has a very powerful tendency to alleviate the miseries of human life, and to reconcile us to the death of most beloved friends. And were we to admit the contrary, grief in many cases would wear out its subject, before it wore out itself. Even the heathens derived consolation from the reflection, that they should meet their friends in a state of conscious existence. And a saying in Cicero De Senectute, which he puts in the mouth of Cato of Utica, has been often quoted, and is universally admired:

O præclarum diem, cum ad illud divinum animorum concilium cætumque proficiscar, cumque ex hac turbâ et colluvione discedam! proficiscar enim non ad eos solum viros de quibus ante dixi; sed etiam ad Catonem meum, quo nemo vir melior natus est, nemo pietate præstantior: cujus à me corpus crematum est; quod contra decuit ab illo meum. again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me.

CATO MAJOR, De Senectute, in fin.

“O happy day! (says he) when I shall quit this impure and corrupt multitude, and join myself to that divine company and council of souls who have quitted the earth before me. There I shall find, not only those illustrious personages of whom I have spoken; but also my Cato, who, I can say, was one of the best men ever born, and whom none ever excelled in virtue and piety. I have placed his body on that funeral pile, whereon he ought to have laid mine. But his soul has not left me; and, without losing sight of me, he has only gone before into a country where he saw I should soon rejoin him. This, my lot, I seem to bear courageously: not indeed that I do bear it with resignation; but I shall comfort myself with the persuasion that the interval between his departure and mine will not be long.”

And we well know who has taught us not to sorrow as those without hope, for departed friends.

Verse 24. David comforted Bath-sheba] His extraordinary attachment to this beautiful woman was the cause of all his misfortunes.

He called his name Solomon] This name seems to have been given prophetically; for shelemah, signifies peaceable; and there was almost uninterrupted peace during his reign.

Verse 25. Called—Jedidiah] Literally, the beloved of the Lord, ידויה. This is the first instance I remember of a minister of God being employed to give a name to the child of one of his servants. But it is strange, that the name given by the father was that alone which prevailed.

Verse 26. And took the royal city.] How can this be, when Joab sent to David to come the city, and take it: lest I take the city, and it be called after my name.

29 And David gathered all the people together, and went to Rabbah, and fought against it, and took it.

30 And he took their king's crown from off his head, the weight whereof was a talent of gold with the precious stones; and it was set on David's head. And he brought forth the spoil of the city in great abundance.

31 And he brought forth the people that were therein, and put them under saws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them pass through the brick-kiln: and thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon. So David and all the people returned to Jerusalem.

e Deut. 3. 11. — f Heb. my name be called upon it. — g 1 Chron. 20. 5. — h Heb. very great.

to take the city; in consequence of which David did come and take that city? The explanation seems to be this:—Rabbah was composed of a city and citadel: the former, in which was the king's residence, Joab had taken, and supposed he could soon render himself master of the latter; and, therefore, sends to David to come and take it, lest, he taking the whole, the city should be called after his name.

Verse 27. And have taken the city of waters.] The city where the tank or reservoir was, that supplied the city and suburbs with water. Some think that the original labadti et ir hammayim, should be translated, I have intercepted, or cut off, the waters of the city: and Houbigant translates the place, et aquas ab urbe jam derivavi; “And I have already drawn off the waters from the city.” This perfectly agrees with the account in Josephus, who says, ταυ τε υδατων αυτους αποτεινομενος, having cut off their waters. Antiq. lib. vii. cap. 7. This was the reason why David should come speedily, as the citadel, deprived of water, could not hold out long.

Verse 30. The weight whereof was a talent of gold] If this talent was only seven pounds, as Whiston says, David might have carried it on his head with little difficulty: but this weight, according to common computation, would amount to more than one hundred pounds!

If, however, mishekelah, be taken for the value, not the weight, then all is plain; as the worth of the crown will be about 5075l. 15s. 7d. sterling. Now this seems to be the true sense; because of the added words, with the precious stones; i. e. the gold of the crown, and the jewels with which it was adorned, were equal in value to a talent of gold.

Verse 31. He brought forth the people] And put them under saws. From this representation, a great cry has been raised against “David's unparalleled, if not diabolic, cruelty.” I believe this interpretation was chiefly taken from the parallel place, 1 Chron. xx. 3. where it is said, he cut them with saws, and with axes, &c. Instead of וַיַּצִּיל vaiyasem, he saved, we have here (in Samuel) וַיַּצִּיל vaiyasem, he put them; and these two words differ from each other only in a part of a single letter, ו resh, for מ mem. And it is worthy of remark, that instead of וַיַּצִּיל vaiyasem, he saved, in 1 Chron. xx. 3. six or seven MSS., collated by Dr. Kennicott, have וַיַּצִּיל vaiyasem, he put them: nor is there found any various reading in all the MSS. yet collated for the text in this chapter, that favours the common reading in Chronicles. The meaning, therefore, is, he made the people slaves; and employed them in sawing; making iron harrows, or mining, for the word means both; and in hewing of wood, and making of brick. Sawing asunder, hacking, chopping, and hewing human beings, have no place in this text, no more than they had in David's conduct toward the Ammonites.

It is surprising, and a thing to be deplored, that, in this and similar cases, our translators had not been more careful to sift the sense of the original words, by which they would have avoided a profusion of exceptionable meanings with which they have clothed many passages of the Sacred Writings. Though I believe our translation to be by far the best in any language, ancient or modern, yet I am satisfied it stands much in need of revision. Most of the advantages which our unbelievers have appeared to have over certain passages of Scripture, have arisen from an inaccurate or false translation of the terms in the original; and an appeal to this has generally silenced the gainsayers. But in the time in which our translation was made, Biblical criticism was in its infancy, if indeed it did exist; and we may rather wonder that we find things so well, than be surprised that they are no better.

CHAPTER XIII.

Amnon falls in love with his half-sister Tamar, and feigns himself sick, and requests her to attend him, 1—6. David sends her to him, and he violates her, 7—14. He then hates, and expels her from his house, 15—17. She rends her garments, puts ashes on her head, and goes forth weeping, 18, 19. She is met by Absalom, who, understanding her case, determines the death of Amnon, 20—22. Two years after, he invited all his brothers to a sheep-shearing, when he orders his servants to murder Amnon, 23—29. Tidings came to David, that Absalom had slain all the king's sons, which fill him with the bitterest distress, 30, 31. The rest soon arrive, and he finds that Amnon only is killed, 32—36. Absalom flies to Talmi, king of Geshur, where he remains three years 37—38. David longs after Absalom, having got reconciled to the death of Amnon, 39.

AND it came to pass after this, ^a that Absalom the son of David had a fair sister, whose name was Tamar; and Amnon the son of David loved her.

2 And Amnon was so vexed, that he fell sick for his sister Tamar; for she was a virgin; and ^c Amnon thought it hard for him to do any thing to her.

3 But Amnon had a friend, whose name was Jonadab, ^d the son of Shimeah, David's brother: and Jonadab was a very subtle man.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

Verse 1. Whose name was Tamar] Tamar was the daughter of David and Maacah, daughter of the king of Geshur, and the younger sister of Absalom. Amnon was David's eldest son, by Abinoam. She was, therefore, sister to Amnon only by the father's side, i. e. half-sister; but whole sister to Absalom.

Verse 2. Amnon was so vexed—for she was a virgin] It has been well remarked, that “the passion of love is nowhere so wasting and vexatious, as where it is unlawful. A quick sense of guilt, especially where it is enormous, as in the present instance, strikes the soul with horror: and the impossibility of an innocent gratification loads that horror with desperation. A conflict too cruel and too dreadful for human bearing.” Delaney.

Verse 3. Jonadab was a very subtle man.] And most diabolic advice did he give to his cousin. We talk of the simplicity and excellence of primitive times! “Say not thou what

10 And Amnon said unto Tamar, Bring the meat into the chamber, that I may eat of thine hand. And Tamar took the cakes which she had made, and brought them into the chamber to Amnon her brother.

11 And when she had brought them unto him to eat, he ^k took hold of her, and said unto her, Come, lie with me, my sister.

12 And she answered him, Nay, my brother, do not ^l force me; for ^m no ⁿ such thing ought to be done in Israel: do not thou this ^o folly.

13 And I, whither shall I cause my shame to go? and as for thee, thou shalt be as one of the fools in Israel. Now therefore, I pray thee, speak unto the king; ^p for he will not withhold me from thee.

14 Howbeit he would not hearken unto her voice; but, being stronger than she, ^r forced her, and lay with her.

15 ¶ Then Amnon hated her ^s exceedingly; so that the hatred wherewith he hated her was greater than the love wherewith he had loved her. And Amnon said unto her, Arise, be gone.

16 And she said unto him, There is no cause: this evil in sending me away is greater than the other that thou didst unto me. But he would not hearken unto her.

17 Then he called his servant that ministered unto him, and said, Put now this woman out from me, and bolt the door after her.

is the cause that the former days were better than these." Take them altogether, we may thank God that they are past; and pray him that they may never return.

Verse 12. Nay, my brother] There is something exceedingly tender and persuasive in this speech of Tamar: but Amnon was a mere brute; and it was all lost on him.

Verse 13. Speak unto the king] So, it appears, that she thought that the king, her father, would give her to him as wife. This is another strong mark of indelicacy in those simple but barbarous times. There might have been some excuse for such connexions under the patriarchal age, but there was none now. But, perhaps, she said this only to divert him from his iniquitous purpose, that she might get out of his hands.

Verse 15. Hated her exceedingly] Amnon's

18 And she had ^a a garment of divers colours upon her; for with such robes were the king's daughters that were virgins apparelled. Then his servant brought her out, and bolted the door after her.

21 But when King David heard of all these things he was very wroth.

22 And Absalom spake unto his brother Amnon ^z neither good nor bad: for Absalom ^a hated Amnon, because he had forced his sister Tamar.

23 ¶ And it came to pass after two full years, that Absalom ^b had sheep-shearers in Baal-hazor, which is beside Ephraim: and Absalom invited all the king's sons.

24 And Absalom came to the king, and said, Behold now, thy servant hath sheep-shearers; let the king, I beseech thee, and his servants, go with thy servant.

conduct to his sister was not only brutal, but inexplicable. It would be easy to form conjectures concerning the cause, but we can arrive at no certainty.

Verse 18. A garment of divers colours] See the note on Gen. xxxvii. 3. where the same words occur.

Verse 21. But when King David heard] To this verse the Septuagint add the following words: καὶ οὐκ ἐνίκησε τὸ πνεῦμα Ἀμνὸν τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ, ὅτι ἠγάπα αὐτὸν, ὅτι πρωτοτοκὸς αὐτοῦ ἦν. "But he would not grieve the soul of Amnon his son, for he loved him, because he was his first-born." The same addition is found in the Vulgate, and in Josephus; and it is possible that this once made a part of the Hebrew text.

urged this with the more plausibility, because speaks coolly of a most bloody tragedy, which himself had contrived.

Verse 37. Absalom fled] As he had com-

Verse 39. David longed to go forth unto Absalom] We find that he had a very strong paternal affection for this young man; who appears to have had little to commend him, but the beauty of his person. David wished either to go to him, or to bring him back; for the hand of time had now wiped off his tears for the death of his son Amnon. Joab had marked this disposition, and took care to work on it, in order to procure the return of Absalom. It would have been well for all parties, had Absalom ended his days at Geshur. His return brought increasing wretchedness to his unfortunate father. And it may be generally observed, that those undue, unreasonable paternal attachments are thus rewarded.

CHAPTER XIV.

A woman of Tekoah, by the advice of Joab, comes to the king; and, by a fictitious story, persuades him to recall Absalom, 1-20. Joab is permitted to go to Geshur, and bring Absalom from thence, 21-23. Absalom comes to Jerusalem, to his own house, but is forbidden to see the king's face, 24. An account of Absalom's beauty, and the extraordinary weight of his hair, 25, 26. His children, 27. He strives to regain the king's favour, and employs Joab as an intercessor, 28-32. NOW Joab the son of Zeruiah perceived that the king's heart was ^a toward Absalom.

2 And Joab sent to ^b Tekoah, and fetched thence a wise woman, and said unto her, I pray thee, feign thyself to be a mourner, ^c and put on now mourning apparel, and anoint not thyself with oil, but be as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead;

3 And come to the king, and speak on this manner unto him. So Joab ^d put the words in her mouth.

4 ¶ And when the woman of Tekoah spake to the king, she ^e fell on her face to the ground, and did obeisance, and said, ' Help, ^g O king.

5 And the king said unto her, What aileth thee? And she answered, ^h I am indeed a widow woman, and mine husband is dead.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIV.

Verse 2. Joab sent to Tekoah] Tekoah, according to St. Jerom, was a little city in the tribe of Judah, about twelve miles from Jerusalem.

There are several circumstances relative to this woman, and her case, which deserve to be noticed.

1. She was a widow; and, therefore, her condition of life was the better calculated to excite compassion.

2. She lived at some distance from Jerusalem, which rendered the case difficult to be readily inquired into; and, consequently, there was the less danger of detection.

3. She was advanced in years, as Josephus says, that her application might have the more weight.

4. She put on mourning, to heighten the idea of distress.

5. She framed a case similar to that in which David stood, in order to convince him of the reasonableness of sparing Absalom.

6. She did not make the similitude too plain and visible, lest the king should see her intention, before she had obtained a grant of pardon. Thus, her circumstances, her mournful tale, her widow's weeds, her aged person, and her impressive manner, all combined to make one united impression on the king's heart. We need not wonder at her success. See Bishop Patrick.

Verse 5. I am indeed a widow woman] It is very possible that the principal facts mentioned here were real; and that Joab found out a 6 And thy handmaid had two sons, and they two strove together in the field, and there was ⁱ none to part them, but the one smote the other, and slew him.

8 And the king said unto the woman, Go to thine house, and I will give charge concerning thee.

9 And the woman of Tekoah said unto the king, My lord, O king, ^m the iniquity be on me, and on my father's house; ⁿ and the king and person whose circumstances bore a near resemblance to that which he wished to represent.

Verse 7. The whole family is risen] They took on them the part of the avenger of blood; the nearest akin to the murdered person having a right to slay the murderer.

They shall quench my coal which is left] A man and his descendants, or successors, are often termed in Scripture a lump, or light. So chap. xxi. 17.: so the men of David said, when they swore that he should no more go out with them to battle, That thou quench not the light of Israel. See also Psa. cxxxii. 17. And to raise up a lamp to a person, signifies his having a posterity, to continue his name and family upon the earth: thus, quench my coal that is left, means destroying all hope of posterity; and extinguishing the family from among the people. The heathens made use of the same similitude. The few persons who survived the deluge of Deucalion are termed σπάρτα, living coals; because, by them, the vital flame of the human race was to be rekindled on the earth.

Verse 8. I will give charge concerning thee] This would not do; it was too distant: and she could not, by it, bring her business to a conclusion; so she proceeds—

Verse 9. The iniquity be on me] She intimates that, if the king should suppose that the not bringing the offender to the assigned punishment might reflect on the administration of justice in the land, she was willing that all blame should attach to her and her family, and the king and his throne be guiltless.

10 And the king said, Whosoever saith aught unto thee, bring him to me, and he shall not touch thee any more.

11 Then said she, I pray thee, let the king remember the LORD thy God, that thou wouldest not suffer the revengers of blood to destroy any more, lest they destroy my son. And he said,
As the LORD liveth, there shall not one hair of thy son fall to the earth.

12 Then the woman said, Let thine handmaid, I pray thee, speak one word unto my lord the king. And he said, Say on.

13 And the woman said, Wherefore then hast thou thought such a thing against the people of God? for the king doth speak this thing as one which is faulty, in that the king doth not fetch home again his banished.

14 For we must needs die, and are as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again; neither doth God respect any person: yet doth

Verse 10. Whosoever saith aught unto thee] Neither did this bring the matter to such a bearing that she could come to her conclusion; which was to get the king pledged by a solemn promise that all proceedings relative to the case should be stopped.

Verse 11. Let the king remember the LORD thy God] Consider that when God is earnestly requested to show mercy, he does it in the promptest manner; he does not wait till the case is hopeless: the danger to which my son is exposed is imminent; if the king do not decide the business instantly, it may be too late.

And he said, As the LORD liveth] Thus he binds himself, by a most solemn promise and oath; and this is what the woman wished to extort.

Verse 13. Wherefore then hast thou thought such a thing] The woman having now got the king's promise confirmed by an oath, that her son should not suffer for the murder of his brother, comes immediately to her conclusion. Is not the king to blame? Does he now act a consistent part? He is willing to pardon the meanest of his subjects the murder of a brother at the instance of a poor widow; and he is not willing to pardon his son Absalom, whose restoration to favour is the desire of the whole nation. Is that clemency to be refused to the king's son, the hope of the nation and heir to the throne, which is showed to a private individual, whose death or life can only be of consequence to one family? Why, therefore, dost thou not bring back thy banished child?

Verse 14. For we must needs die] Whatever he devise means that his banished be not expelled from him.

15 Now therefore that I am come to speak of this thing unto my lord the king, it is because the people have made me afraid: and thy handmaid said, I will now speak unto the king; it may be that the king will perform the request of his handmaid.

16 For the king will hear, to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of the men that would destroy me and my son together out of the inheritance of God.

17 Then thine handmaid said, The word of my lord the king shall now be comfortable: for as an angel of God, so is my lord the king, to discern good and bad: therefore the LORD thy God will be with thee.

18 Then the king answered and said unto the woman, Hide not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I shall ask thee. And the woman said, Let my lord the king now speak.

19 And the king said, Is not the hand is done must be done quickly; all must die: God has not exempted any person from this common lot. Though Amnon be dead, yet the death of Absalom cannot bring him to life, nor repair this loss. Besides, for his crime, he justly deserved to die; and thou, in this case, didst not administer justice. Horrible as this fratricide is, it is a pardonable case: the crime of Amnon was the most flagitious; and the offence to Absalom, the ruin of his beloved sister, indescribably great. Seeing, then, that the thing is so, and that Amnon can be no more recalled to life than water spilt upon the ground can be gathered up again; and that God, whose vicegerent thou art, and whose example of clemency as well as justice thou art called to imitate, devises means that those who were banished from him by sin and transgression, may not be finally expelled from his mercy and his kingdom; restore thy son to favour, and pardon his crime, as thou hast promised to restore my son; and the Lord thy God will be with thee. This is the sum and sense of the woman's argument.

The argument contained in this 14th verse is very elegant, and powerfully persuasive: but one clause of it has been variously understood, Neither doth God respect any person: the Hebrew is, וְלֹא יֵשֶׁת אֱלֹהִים נָפֶשׁ velo yisset Elohim nephesh, "And God doth not take away the soul." The Septuagint has it, καὶ ληΐται ὁ Θεὸς τὴν ψυχὴν, and God will receive the soul. This intimates that, after human life is ended, the soul has a state of separate existence with God. This was certainly the opinion of these translators, and was the opinion of the ancient of Joab with thee in all this ? And the woman answered and said, As thy soul liveth, my lord the king; none can turn to the right hand or to the left from aught that my lord the king hath spoken: for thy servant Joab, he bade me, and ^a he put all these words in the mouth of thine handmaid :

20 To fetch about this form of speech hath thy servant Joab done this thing : and my lord is wise, ^b according to the wisdom of an angel of God, to know all things that are in the earth.

21 ¶ And the king said unto Joab, Behold now, I have done this thing : go, therefore, bring the young man Absalom again.

22 And Joab fell to the ground on his face, and bowed himself, and ^c thanked the king : and Joab said, To-day thy servant knoweth that I have found grace in thy sight, my lord, O king, in that the king hath fulfilled the request of ^d his servant.

23 So Joab arose, ^e and went to Geshur, and brought Absalom to Jerusalem.

24 And the king said, Let him turn to his own house, and let him ^f not see my face. So Absalom returned to his own house, and saw not the king's face.

25 ¶ ^g But in all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty : ^h from the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head there was no blemish in him.

26 And when he polled his head, (for it was at every year's end that he polled it : because the hair was heavy on him, therefore he polled it :) he weighed the hair of his head at two hundred shekels after the king's weight.

27 ¶ And ⁱ unto Absalom there were born three sons, and one daughter, whose name was Tamar : she was a woman of a fair countenance.

28 ¶ So Absalom dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, ^k and saw not the king's face.

29 Therefore Absalom sent for Joab, to have sent him to the king ; but he would not come to him : and when he sent again the second time, he would not come.

30 Therefore he said unto his servants, See, Joab's field is ^l near mine, and he hath barley there ; go and set it on fire. And Absalom's servants set the field on fire.

31 Then Joab arose, and ^m came to Absalom unto his house, and said unto him, Wherefore have thy servants set my field on fire ?

32 And Absalom answered Joab, Behold, I sent unto thee, saying, Come hither, that I may send thee to the king, to say, Wherefore am I come from Geshur ? it had been good for me to have been there still : now therefore let me see the king's face ; and if there be any iniquity in me, let him kill me.

33 So Joab came to the king, and told him : and when he had called for Absalom, he came to the king, and bowed himself on his face to the ground before the king ; and the king ⁿ kissed Absalom.

Jews, at least three hundred years before the incarnation ; about which time this translation was made. The Vulgate has, Nec vult Deus perire animam, "Nor does God will the destruction of the soul." God is not the author of death ; neither hath he pleasure in the destruction of the living ; imitate him ; pardon and recall thy son.

Verse 21. And the king said unto Joab] It appears that Joab was present at the time the woman was in conference with the king ; and, no doubt, others of David's courtiers or officers were there also.

Verse 24. Let him not see my face] He would not at once restore him to favour, though he had now remitted his crime ; so that he should not die for it. It was highly proper to to praise greatly.—^h Isai. 1. 6.—ⁱ See Chap. 18. 18.—^k Ver. 24.—^l Heb. near my place.—^m Gen. 33. 4. & 45. 15. Luke 15. 20.

Verse 25. None to be so much praised as Absalom] It was probably his personal beauty that caused the people to interest themselves so much in his behalf ; for the great mass of the public is ever caught and led by outward appearances.

There was no blemish in him] He was perfect and regular in all his features, and in all his proportions.

Verse 26. When he polled his head] Not at any particular period, but when the hair became too heavy for him. For this account of the extraordinary weight of Absalom's hair, see the observations at the end of this chapter.

Verse 27. Unto Absalom there were born]

These children did not survive him: see chap. xviii. 18.

Tamar] The Septuagint adds, And she became the wife of Roboam, the son of Solomon, and bare to him Abia: see Matt. i. 7. Josephus says the same. This addition is not found in the other versions.

Verse 30. Go and set it on fire] This was strange conduct; but it had the desired effect. He had not used his influence to get Absalom to court; now he uses it, and succeeds.

Additional observations on ver. 26.

"And at every year's end, he (Absalom) polled his head; and he weighed the hair at two hundred shekels."

The very learned Bochart has written a dissertation on this subject, (vide Bocharti Opera, vol. iii. col. 883. edit. Lugd. 1692,) in a letter to his friend M. Faukell. I shall give the substance in what follows.

There is nothing more likely than that corruptions in the Scripture numerals have taken place. Budeus de Asse, lib. ii. p. 49 and 51; also lib. iii. p. 67, &c. complains loudly of this.

This might easily have happened, as, in former times, the numbers in the Sacred Writings appear to have been expressed by single letters. The letter resh, stands for two hundred; and might, in this place, be easily mistaken for daleth, which signifies four; but this may be thought to be too little, as it would not amount to more than a quarter of a pound; yet, if the two hundred shekels be taken in, the amount will be utterly incredible; for Josephus says, Antiq. lib. vii. cap. 8. Σικλους διακοσιους υντοι δε μισι πεντε μνας—i. e. "two hundred shekels make five minas;" and in lib. xiv. cap. 12. he says, "Ἡ δὲ μνα παρ' ἡμῖν ἰσχυι λίτρας β' καὶ ἡμισυ—"And a mina with us, (i. e. the Jews,) weighs two pounds and a half." This calculation makes Absalom's hair weigh twelve pounds and a half! Credat Judeus Appella!

Indeed, the same person tells us, that the hair of Absalom was so thick, &c. ὅτι μοῖλαι αὐτὴν ἡμέραις ἀποκείρουν οὕτω, "that eight days were scarcely sufficient to cut it off in!" This is rabbinism with a witness.

Epiphanius, in his treatise De Ponderibus et Mensuris, casts much more light on this place, where he says, Σικλος ὁ λεγεται καὶ κοδραντης τεταρτον μὲν ἐστὶ τῆς οὐνμιας, ἡμισυ δὲ τοῦ στατηρος, δυο δραχμας ἔχων—i. e. "A shekel, which is called also the fourth part of an ounce, half a stater; which is about two drachms." This computation seems very just, as the half-shekel, Exod. xxx. 13. which the Lord commanded the children of Israel to give as an offering for their souls, is expressly called in Matt. xvii. 24. τα διδραχμα, "two drachma;" and our Lord wrought a miracle to pay this, which the Romans then exacted by way of tribute: and Peter took out of the fish's mouth a stater, which contained exactly two drachms, or one shekel, the tribute-money for our Lord and himself.

The king's shekel was about the fourth part of an ounce, according to what Epiphanius says above; and Hesychius says the same, Δυναται δὲ ὁ σικλος δυο δραχμας Ἀττικας—"A shekel is equal to, or worth, two Attic drachma." The whole amount, therefore, of the two hundred shekels is about fifty ounces, which make four pounds two ounces, Troy weight, or three pounds two ounces Avoirdupois. This need not, says my learned author, be accounted incredible, especially as abundance of oil and ointments were used by the ancients in dressing their heads; as is evident, not only from many places in the Greek and Roman writers, but also from several places in the Sacred Writings. See Psa. xxiii. 5. Eccles. ix. 8. Matt. vi. 17.

Josephus also informs us that the Jews not only used ointments, but that they put gold dust in their hair, that it might flame in the sun; and this they might do in considerable quantities, as gold was so plentiful among them. I must own I have known an instance that makes much for Bochart's argument; an officer, who had upwards of two pounds of powder and ointments put on his head daily, whose hair did not weigh a fourth part of that weight. And Absalom, being exceedingly vain, might be supposed to make a very extensive use of these things. There are some, however, who endeavour to solve the difficulty by understanding שָׁקָל shakal, to mean rather the value than the weight.

Bochart concludes this elaborate Dissertation, (in which he appears to have ransacked all the Hebrew, Greek, and Roman authors, for proofs of his opinion,) by exhorting his friend in these well-known lines of Horace—

— Si quid nōsti rectius istis, Candidus imperti; si non, his utere mecum.

To me, the above is quite unsatisfactory; and, with due deference to so great a character, I think I have found out something better.

I believe the text is not here in its original form; and that a mistake has crept into the numeral letters. I imagine that lamed, THIRTY, was first written; which, in process of time, became changed for resh, two HUNDRED; which might easily have happened from the similarity of the letters. But, if this be supposed to be too little, (which I think it is not,) being only seven ounces and a half in the course of a year; let it be observed that the sacred text does not limit it to that quantity of time, for מִיּוֹם לַיָּמִים מִקֵּץ מִקֵּץ mikets yamim layamim, signifies, literally, "From the end of days to days;" which Jonathan properly renders, מִזְמָן לְזֶמַן miz'man iddan leiddan, "at proper or convenient times," viz. when it grew too long or weighty, which it might be several times in the year. Besides, this was not all his hair; for his head was not shaved, but polled, i. e. the redundancy cut off.

But how was it probable that these two numerals should be interchanged? Thus: if the upper stroke of the lamed were but a little impaired, as it frequently is, both in MSS. and printed books, it might be very easily taken for resh; and the remains of the upper part of the lamed might be mistaken for the stroke over the resh which makes it the character of two hundred.

But how could מֵאתַיִם mathayim, two hundred in the text, be put in the place of שְׁלֹשִׁים sheloshim, thirty? Very easily, when the numbers became expressed by words at length instead of numeral letters.

The common reading of the text appears to me irreconcilable with truth; and I humbly hope that what I have offered above solves every difficulty, and fully accounts for all that the sacred historian speaks of this vain-comely lad.

Verse 27.—"Absalom had a daughter, whose name was Tamar."

CHAPTER XV.

Absalom conspires against his father; and uses various methods to seduce the people from their allegiance to their king, 1—6. Under pretence of paying a vow at Hebron, he obtains leave from David to go thither; and, by emissaries sent through the land, prepares the people for revolt, 7—11. He gains over Ahithophel, David's counsellor, 12. David is informed of the general defection of the people; on which he, and his lifeguards and friends, leave the city, and go toward the wilderness, 13—18. The steadfast friendship of Ittai, the Gittite, 19—22. David's affecting departure from the city, 23. He sends Zadok and Abiathar with the ark back to Jerusalem, 24—29. He goes up mount Olivet; prays that the counsel of Ahithophel may be turned into foolishness, 30, 31. He desires Hushai to return to Jerusalem, and to send him word of all that occurs, 32—37.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

Verse 1. Absalom prepared him chariots and horses] After all that has been said to prove that horses here mean horsemen, I think it most likely that the writer would have us to understand chariots drawn by horses; not mules, or such like cattle.

Fifty men to run before him.] Affecting, in every respect, the regal state by this establishment. Of this man Calmet collects the following character: "He was a bold, violent, revengeful, dauntless, enterprising, magnificent, eloquent, and popular prince; he was also rich, ambitious, and vain of his personal accomplishments: after the death of Amnon, and his reconciliation to his father, he saw no hindrance in his way to the throne. He despised Solomon, because of the meanness of his birth, and his tender years. He was himself of the blood royal, not only by his father David, but also by his mother Maacah, daughter to Talmi, king of Geshur; and, doubtless, in his own apprehension, of sufficient age, authority, and wisdom, to sustain the weight of government. There was properly now no competitor in his way: Amnon, David's first-born, was dead: of Chiliab, his second son by Abigail, we hear nothing; and Absalom was the third: see chap. iii. 2—5. He, therefore, seemed to stand nearest to the throne; but his sin was, that he sought it during his father's life, and endeavoured to dethrone him in order to sit in his stead.

Verse 6. So Absalom stole the hearts] His manner of doing this is circumstantially related above. He was thoroughly versed in the arts of the demagogue; and the common people, cause might come unto me, and I would do him justice!

5 And it was so, that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeisance, he put forth his hand, and took him, and kissed him.

6 And on this manner did Absalom to all Israel that came to the king for judgment: ^f so Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel.

7 ¶ And it came to pass ^g after forty years, that Absalom said unto the king, I pray thee, let me go and pay my vow, which I have vowed unto the LORD, in Hebron.

8 ^h For thy servant ⁱ vowed a vow ^k while I abode at Geshur in Syria, saying, If the LORD shall bring me again indeed to Jerusalem, then I will serve the LORD.

^e Judges 9. 29.—^f Rom. 16. 18.—^g 1 Sam. 16. 1.—^h 1 Sam. 16. 2.—ⁱ Gen. 28. 20, 21.—^k Ch. 13. 38.

the vile mass, heard him gladly. He used the patriot's arguments; and was every thing of the kind, as far as promise could go. He found fault with men in power; and he only wanted their place, like all other pretended patriots, that he might act as they did, or worse.

Verse 7. After forty years] There is no doubt that this reading is corrupt, though supported by the commonly printed Vulgate, the Septuagint, and the Chaldee. But the Syriac has arba shanin, four years; the Arabic the same arba shinin, four years; and Josephus has the same; so also the Sixtine edition of the Vulgate, and several MSS. of the same version. Theodoret also reads four, not forty; and most learned men are of opinion that arbayim, forty, is an error for arba, four; yet this reading is not supported by any Hebrew MS. yet discovered. But two of those collated by Dr. Kennicott, have yom, instead of shan; i. e. forty days, instead of forty years: and this is a reading more likely to be true than that in the commonly received text. We know that Absalom did stay three years with his grandfather at Geshur, chap. xiii. 38.; and this, probably, was a year after his return; the era, therefore, may be the time of his slaying his brother Amnon; and the four years include the time from his flight till the conspiracy mentioned here.

Verse 8. While I abode at Geshur in Syria] Geshur, the country of Talmi, was certainly not in Syria, but lay on the south of Canaan, in or near Edom, as is evident from Judges i. 10. 1 Sam. xxvii. 8. 2 Sam. xiii. 37. Hence it is probable that Aram, Syria, is a mis-

9 And the king said unto him, Go in peace. So he arose, and went to Hebron.

10 ¶ But Absalom sent spies throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, As soon as ye hear the sound of the trumpet, then ye shall say, Absalom reigneth in Hebron.

11 And with Absalom went two hundred men out of Jerusalem, that were¹ called; and they went^m in their simplicity, and they knew not anything.

12 And Absalom sent for Ahithophel the Gilonite,^a David's counsellor, from his city, even from^o Giloh, while he offered sacrifices. And the conspiracy was strong; for the people^p increased continually with Absalom.

13 ¶ And there came a messenger to David, saying,^r The hearts of the men of Israel are after Absalom.

14 And David said unto all his servants that were with him at Jerusalem, Arise, and let us^s flee; for we shall not^{else} escape from Absalom: make speed to depart, lest he overtake us suddenly, and bring evil upon us, and smite the city with the edge of the sword.

15 And the king's servants said unto the king, Behold, thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the king shall^u appoint.

16 And^v the king went forth, and all his household^w after him. And the king left^x ten women, which were concubines, to keep the house.

17 And the king went forth, and all the people after him, and tarried in a place that was far off.

18 And all his servants passed on beside him; ^y and all the Cherethites, and all the Pelethites, and all the Gittites, six hundred men which came take for Edom; daleth, and resh, being easily interchangeable. Edom is the reading both of the Syriac and Arabic.

I will serve the LORD.] Here he pretended to be a strict follower of Jehovah, even while he was in a heathen country; and now he desires liberty to go and perform a vow at Hebron, which he pretends to have made while he was resident at Geshur. And all this was the more perfectly to organize his system of rebellion against his venerable father.

Verse 10. Absalom sent spies] These persons were to go into every tribe; and the trumpet was to be blown as a signal for all to arise, and proclaim Absalom in every place. The trumpet was probably used as a kind of telegraph by the spies; trumpet exciting trumpet from place to place; so that, in a few minutes, all Israel would hear the proclamation.

Verse 11. Went two hundred men] These were probably soldiers, whom he supposed would be of considerable consequence to him. They had been seduced by his specious conduct; but knew nothing of his present design.

Verse 12. Sent for Ahithophel] When Absalom got him, he, in effect, got the prime minister of the kingdom to join him.

Verse 13. The hearts of the men of Israel are after Absalom.] It is very difficult to account for this general defection of the people. Several reasons are given:—1. David was old, or afflicted, and could not well attend to the administration of justice in the land. 2. It does appear that the king did not attend to the affairs of state; and that there were no properly appointed judges in the land, see ver. 3. 3. Joab's power was overgrown; he was wicked and insolent, oppressive to the people, and David was afraid to execute the laws against him. 4. There were still some partisans of the house of Saul, who thought the crown not fairly obtained by David. 5. David was under the displeasure of the Almighty, for his adultery with Bath-sheba, and his murder of Uriah; and God let his enemies loose against him. 6. There are always troublesome and disaffected men in every state, and under every government, who can never rest, and are ever hoping for something from a change. 7. Absalom appeared to be the real, and was the undisputed heir, to the throne: David could not, in the course of nature, live very long; and most people are more disposed to hail the beams of the rising, than exult in those of the setting sun. No doubt some of these causes operated; and perhaps most of them exerted less or more influence in this most scandalous business.

Verse 14. David said—Arise—let us flee] This, I believe, was the first time ever David turned his back to his enemies. And why did he now fly? Jerusalem, far from not being in a state to sustain a siege, was so strong that even the blind and the lame were supposed to be sufficient defence for the walls, see chap. v. 6. And he had still with him his faithful Cherethites and Pelethites; besides six hundred faithful Gittites, who were perfectly willing to follow his fortunes. There does not appear any reason why such a person, in such circumstances, should not act on the defensive; at least till he should be fully satisfied of the real complexion of affairs. But he appears to take all as coming from the hand of God; therefore he humbles himself, weeps, goes barefoot, and covers his head! He does not even hasten his departure; for the habit of mourners is not the habit of those who are flying before the face of their enemies. He sees the storm, and he yields to what he conceives to be the tempest of the Almighty.

Verse 17. And tarried in a place] He probably waited till he saw all his friends safely out of the city.

after him from Gath, passed on before the king.

19 ¶ Then said the king to ² Ittai the Gittite, Wherefore goest thou also with us? return to thy place, and abide with the king; for thou art a stranger, and also an exile.

20 Whereas thou camest but yesterday, should I this day ^a make thee go up and down with us? seeing I go ^b whither I may, return thou, and take back thy brethren: mercy and truth be with thee.

21 And Ittai answered the king, and said, ^c As the LORD liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be.

22 And David said to Ittai, Go and pass over. And Ittai the Gittite passed over, and all his men, and all the little ones that were with him.

23 And all the country wept with a loud voice, and all the people passed over: the king also himself passed over the brook ^d Kidron, and all the people passed over, toward the way of the ^e wilderness.

24 ¶ And lo, Zadok also, and all the Levites were with him, ^f bearing the Verse 19. Thou art a stranger, and also an exile.] Some suppose that Ittai was the son of Achish, king of Gath, who was very much attached to David, and banished from his father's court on that account. He, and his six hundred men, are generally supposed to have been proselytes to the Jewish religion.

Verse 20. Mercy and truth be with thee.] May God ever show thee mercy, as thou showest it to me; and his truth ever preserve thee from error and delusion.

Verse 23. The brook Kidron] This was an considerable brook; and only furnished with water in winter, and in the rains. See John xviii. 1.

Verse 24. Bearing the ark] The priests knew that God had given the kingdom to David; they had no evidence that he had deposed him: they, therefore, chose to accompany him, and take the ark, the object of their charge, with them.

Verse 25. Carry back the ark] David shows here great confidence in God, and great humility. The ark was too precious to be exposed to the dangers of his migrations; he knew that God would restore him, if he delighted in him; and he was not willing to carry off from the ark of the covenant of God: and they set down the ark of God; and Abiathar went up, until all the people had done passing out of the city.

25 And the king said unto Zadok, Carry back the ark of God into the city: if I shall find favour in the eyes of the LORD, he ² will bring me again, and show me both it and his habitation:

26 But if he thus say, I have no ^b delight in thee; behold, here am I, ¹ let him do unto me as seemeth good unto him.

27 The king said also unto Zadok the priest, Art not thou a ^k seer? return into the city in peace, and ¹ your two sons with you, Ahimaaz thy son, and Jonathan the son of Abiathar.

28 See, ^m I will tarry in the plain of the wilderness, until there come word from you to certify me.

29 Zadok therefore and Abiathar carried the ark of God again to Jerusalem: and they tarried there.

30 ¶ And David went up by the ascent of mount Olivet, ⁿ and wept as he went up, and ^o had his head covered, and he went ^p barefoot: and all the people that was with him ^r covered every man his head, and they went up, ^s weeping as they went up.

city of God that, without which the public worship could not be carried on. He felt, therefore, more for this public worship, and the honour of God, than he did for his own personal safety.

Verse 27. Art not thou a seer? return into the city in peace] That is, As thou art the only organ of the public worship, that worship cannot be carried on without thee; and, as thou art the priest of God, thou hast no cause to fear for thy personal safety: the nation has not abandoned their God, though they have abandoned their king. It appears also, that he wished these priests, by means of their sons, Ahimaaz the son of Zadok, and Jonathan the son of Abiathar, to send him frequent intelligence of the motions and operations of the enemy.

Verse 30. Had his head covered] This was not only the attitude of a mourner, but even of a culprit; they usually had their heads covered when condemned; see the case of Haman. When the king had pronounced his condemnation, they immediately covered his face, and led him out to punishment. Esth. vii. 8. See also Quintus Curtius, De Philota, cap. 6. Lictor; caput obnubito.

Verse 31. Turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness.] Ahithophel was a wise man, and well versed in state affairs; and God alone could confound his devices.

Verse 32. Where he worshipped God] Though in danger of his life, he stops on the top of mount Olivet for prayer! How true is the adage, Prayers and provender never hinder any man's journey. Reader, dost thou do likewise?

Hushai the Archite] He was the particular friend of David; and was now greatly affected by his calamity.

Verse 33. Then thou shalt be a burden unto me] It appears that Hushai was not a warrior, but was a wise, prudent, and discreet man, who could well serve David by gaining him intelligence of the success of Absalom's conspiracy: and he directs him to form a strict confederacy with the priests, Zadok and Abiathar; and to make use of their sons as couriers between Jerusalem and David's place of retreat.

Verse 27. Absalom came into Jerusalem.] It is very probable that he and his partisans were not far from the city when David left it; and servant hitherto, so will I now also be thy servant: then mayest thou for me defeat the counsel of Ahithophel.

35 And hast thou not there with thee Zadok and Abiathar the priests? therefore it shall be, that what thing soever thou shalt hear out of the king's house, ^athou shalt tell it to Zadok and Abiathar the priests.

READER, behold in the case of David a sad vicissitude of human affairs; and a fearful proof of their instability. Behold a king, the greatest that ever lived; a profound politician, an able general, a brave soldier, a poet of the most sublime genius and character, a prophet of the Most High God, and the deliverer of his country, driven from his dominions by his own son, abandoned by his fickle people, and, for a time, even by his God! See in his desolate state that there is none so exalted that God cannot abase; and none so abased that God cannot exalt. He was forsaken for a time, and his enemies triumphed: God returned, and his enemies were confounded. His crime, it is true, was great; and God had declared by Nathan what has now come to pass. God is just, and in numberless instances sees right to show his displeasure, even at those sins which his mercy has forgiven. In all cases, it is a fearful and bitter thing to sin against the Lord.

Verse 1. Two hundred loaves of bread] The word loaf gives us a false idea of the ancient Jewish bread; it was thin cakes, not yeasted and raised like ours.

Bunches of raisins] See on 1 Sam. xxv. 18. Summer-fruits] These were probably pompions, cucumbers, or watermelons. The two latter are extensively used in those countries to refresh travellers in the burning heat of the summer. Mr. Harmer supposes they are called summer-fruits on this very account.

A bottle of wine.] A goat's skin full of wine: this I have already shown was the general bottle in the Eastern countries, see on 1 Sam. xxv. 18.

2 And the king said unto Ziba, What meanest thou by these? And Ziba said, The asses be for the king's household to ride on; and the bread and summer-fruit for the young men to eat; and the wine, ^c that such as be faint in the wilderness may drink.

3 And the king said, And where is thy master's son? ^d And Ziba said unto the king, Behold, he abideth at Jerusalem: for he said, To-day shall the house of Israel restore me the kingdom of my father.

4 ^e Then said the king to Ziba, Behold, thine are all that pertained unto Mephibosheth. And Ziba said, ^f I humbly beseech thee that I may find grace in thy sight, my lord, O king.

5 ¶ And when King David came to Bahurim, behold, there came out a man of the family of the house of Saul, whose name was ^g Shimei, the son of Gera: ^h he came forth, and cursed still as he came.

6 And he cast stones at David, and at all the servants of King David:

Verse 2. The asses be for the king's household] This is the Eastern method of speaking when any thing is presented to a great man. "This and this is for the slaves of the servants of your majesty;" when at the same time the presents are intended for the sovereign himself, and are so understood. It is a high Eastern compliment. These presents are not worthy of your acceptance; they are only fit for the slaves of your slaves.

Verse 3. To-day shall the house of Israel] What a base wretch was Ziba! and how unfounded was this accusation against the peaceable, loyal, and innocent Mephibosheth!

Verse 4. Thine are all] This conduct of David was very rash; he spoiled an honourable man to reward a villain, not giving himself time to look into the circumstances of the case. But David was in heavy afflictions; and these, sometimes, make even a wise man mad. Nothing should be done rashly: he who is in the habit of obeying the first impulse of his passions or feelings, will seldom do a right action; and never keep a clear conscience.

Verse 5. David came to Bahurim] This place lay northward of Jerusalem, in the tribe of Benjamin. It is called Almon, Josh. xxi. 18; and Alemeth, 1 Chron. vi. 60. Bahurim signifies youths, and Alemuth youth; so the names are of the same import.

and all the people, and all the mighty men, were on his right hand and on his left.

7 And thus said Shimei, when he cursed, Come out, come out, thou ⁱ bloody man, and thou ^k man of Belial:

8 The LORD hath ^l returned upon thee all ^m the blood of the house of Saul, in whose stead thou hast reigned; and the LORD hath delivered the kingdom into the hand of Absalom thy son: and, ⁿ behold, thou art taken in thy mischief, because thou art a bloody man.

9 ¶ Then said Abishai the son of Zeruiah unto the king, Why should this ^o dead dog ^p curse my lord the king? let me go over, I pray thee, and take off his head.

10 And the king said, ^r What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah? so let him curse, because ^s the LORD hath said unto him, Curse David. ^t Who shall then say, Wherefore hast thou done so?

11 And David said to Abishai, and to all his servants, Behold, ^u my son, which ^v came forth of my bowels, seeketh my life: how much more now may this Benjamite do it? let him alone, and let him curse; for the LORD hath bidden him.

Cursed still as he came] Used imprecations and execrations.

Verse 10. Because the LORD hath said] The particle veki, should be translated for if, not because. For if the LORD hath said unto him, Curse David, who shall then say, Wherefore hast thou done so?

Verse 11. Let him curse; for the LORD hath bidden him.] No soul of man can suppose that ever God bade one man to curse another; much less that he commanded such a wretch as Shimei to curse such a man as David: but this is a peculiarity of the Hebrew language, which does not always distinguish between permission and commandment. Often the Scripture attributes to God what he only permits to be done; or what, in the course of his providence, he does not hinder. David, however, considers all this as being permitted of God, for his chastisement and humiliation. I cannot withhold from my readers a very elegant poetic paraphrase of this passage, from the pen of the Rev. Charles Wesley, one of the first of Christian poets:—

"Pure from the blood of Saul in vain,
He dares not to the charge reply:
Uriah's doth the charge maintain,
Uriah's doth against him cry!
Let Shimei curse: the rod he bears
For sins which mercy had forgiven;
And in the wrongs of man reverts
The awful righteousness of heaven."

12 It may be that the LORD will look on mine ^waffliction, ^z and that the LORD will ^yrequite me good for his cursing this day.

13 And as David and his men went by the way, Shimei went along on the hill's side over against him, and cursed as he went, and threw stones at him, and ^zcast dust.

14 And the king, and all the people that were with him, came weary, and refreshed themselves there.

15 ¶ And ^a Absalom, and all the people, the men of Israel, came to Jerusalem, and Ahithophel with him.

16 And it came to pass, when Hushai the Archite, ^b David's friend, was come unto Absalom, that Hushai said unto Absalom, ^c God save the king, God save the king.

17 And Absalom said to Hushai, Is this thy kindness to thy friend? ^a why wentest thou not with thy friend?

18 And Hushai said unto Absalom, Nay; but whom the LORD, and this people, and all the men of Israel, 19 And again, ^e who should I serve? should I not serve I. Olymp. 247. in the presence of his son? as I have served in thy father's presence, so will I be in thy presence.

20 ¶ Then said Absalom to Ahithophel, Give counsel among you what we shall do.

21 And Ahithophel said unto Absalom, Go in unto thy father's ^f concubines, which he hath left to keep the house; and all Israel shall hear that thou ^gart abhorred of thy father: then shall ^h the hands of all that are with thee be strong.

22 So they spread Absalom a tent upon the top of the house; and Absalom went in unto his father's concubines ⁱ in the sight of all Israel.

Verse 15. The men of Israel] These words are wanting in the Chaldee, Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic; and in two of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.

Verse 18. Whom the LORD and this people—choose] Here is an equivocal: Hushai meant in his heart that God and all the people of Israel had chosen David; but he spake so as to make Absalom believe that he spoke of him: for whatever of insincerity may appear in this, Hushai is alone answerable. What he says afterward may be understood in the same way.

Verse 21. Go in unto thy father's concubines] It may be remembered that David left ten of them behind, to take care of the house, see ch. xv. 16. Ahithophel advised this infernal measure, in order to prevent the possibility of a reconciliation between David and his son: thus was the prophecy of Nathan fulfilled, ch. xiii. 11. And this was probably transacted in the very same place that David's eye took the adulterous view of Bath-sheba: see chap. xi. 2.

The wives of the conquered king were always the property of the conqueror; and, in possessing these, he appeared to possess the right to the kingdom. Herodotus informs us that Smerdis, having seized on the Persian throne after the death of Cambyzes, espoused all the wives of his predecessor, lib. iii. c. 68. But for a son to take his father's wives, was the sum of abomination, and was death by the law of God, Lev. xx. 11. This was a sin rarely found, even among the Gentiles.

Every part of the conduct of Absalom shows him to have been a most profligate young man: he was proud, vindictive, adulterous, incestuous, a parricide, and, in fine, reprobate to every good word and work. We still, however, recollect that David had grievously sinned; and we should also recollect that he suffered grievously for it; and that his humiliation, repentance, and amendment, were most decisive and exemplary. Reader! God is as just as he is merciful.

MOREOVER, Ahithophel said unto Absalom, Let me now choose out twelve thousand men, and I will arise and pursue after David this night :

2 And I will come upon him while he is ^a weary and weak-handed, and will make him afraid : and all the people that are with him shall flee : and I will ^b smite the king only :

3 And I will bring back all the people unto thee : the man whom thou seekest is as if all returned : so all the people shall be in peace.

4 And the saying ^c pleased Absalom well, and all the elders of Israel.

5 Then said Absalom, Call now Hushai the Archite also, and let us hear likewise ^d what he saith.

6 And when Hushai was come to Absalom, Absalom spake unto him, saying, Ahithophel hath spoken after this manner : shall we do after his ^e saying ? if not, speak thou.

7 And Hushai said unto Absalom, The counsel that Ahithophel hath ^f given is not good at this time.

8 For, said Hushai, thou knowest thy father and his men, that they be mighty men, and they be ^g chafed in their minds, as ^h a bear robbed of her whelps in the field : and thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people.

9 Behold, he is hid now in some pit, or in some other place : and it will come to pass, when some of them be ⁱ overthrown at the first, that whosoever heareth it will say, There is a slaughter among the people that follow Absalom.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVII.

Verse 1. Let me now choose out twelve thousand men] Had this counsel been followed, David and his little troop would soon have been destroyed : nothing but the miraculous interposition of God could have saved them. Twelve thousand chosen troops coming against him, in his totally unprepared state, would have soon settled the business of the kingdom. Ahithophel well saw that, this advice neglected, all was lost.

Verse 3. The man whom thou seekest is as if all returned] Only secure David, and all Israel will be on thy side. He is the soul of the whole ; destroy him, and all the rest will submit.

10 And he also that is valiant, whose heart is as the heart of a lion, shall utterly ^k melt : for all Israel knoweth that thy father is a mighty man, and they which be with him are valiant men.

11 Therefore I counsel that all Israel be generally gathered unto thee, ^l from Dan even to Beer-sheba, ^m as the sand that is by the sea for multitude ; and ⁿ that thou go to battle in thine own person.

12 So shall we come upon him in some place where he shall be found, and we will light upon him as the dew falleth on the ground : and of him and of all the men that are with him there shall not be left so much as one.

13 Moreover, if he be gotten into a city, then shall all Israel bring ropes to that city, and we will draw it into the river, until there be not one small stone found there.

14 And Absalom and all the men of Israel said, The counsel of Hushai the Archite is better than the counsel of Ahithophel. For ^o the LORD had ^p appointed to defeat the good counsel of Ahithophel, to the intent that the LORD might bring evil upon Absalom.

15 ¶ Then said Hushai unto Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, Thus and thus did Ahithophel counsel Absalom and the elders of Israel ; and thus and thus have I counselled.

16 Now therefore send quickly, and tell David, saying, Lodge not this night ^q in the plains of the wilderness, but speedily pass over ; lest the king be swallowed up, and all the people that are with him.

Verse 8. As a bear robbed of her whelps] All wild beasts are very furious when robbed of their young : but we have some remarkable instances of the maternal affection of the bear in such circumstances ; see one at the end of the chapter.

Verse 13. Shall all Israel bring ropes to that city] The original word חבלים chabolim, which signifies ropes, and from which we have our word cable, may have some peculiarity of meaning here ; for it is not likely that any city could be pulled down with ropes. The Chaldees, which should be best judge in this case, translates the original word by משרין masheryan, towers ; this gives an easy sense.

17 ^c Now Jonathan and Ahimaaz ^u stayed by ^v En-rogel; for they might not be seen to come into the city : and a wench went and told them ; and they went and told King David.

18 Nevertheless, a lad saw them, and told Absalom : but they went both of them away quickly, and came to a man's house ^w in Bahurim, which had a well in his court ; whither they went down.

19 And ^x the woman took and spread a covering over the well's mouth, and spread ground corn thereon ; and the thing was not known.

20 And when Absalom's servants came to the woman to the house, they said, Where is Ahimaaz and Jonathan ? And ^y the woman said unto them, They be gone over the brook of water. And when they had sought and could not find them, they returned to Jerusalem.

21 And it came to pass, after they were departed, that they came up out of the well, and went and told King David, and said unto David, ^z Arise, and pass quickly over the water : for thus hath Ahithophel counselled against you.

22 Then David arose, and all the people that were with him, and they

Verse 17. En-rogel] The fullers' well ; the place where they were accustomed to tread the clothes with their feet ; hence the name עין רוגל, a well, and רגל, the foot, because of the treading above-mentioned.

And a wench went and told them] The word wench occurs nowhere else in the Holy Scriptures ; and, indeed, has no business here, as the Hebrew word שפחה shiphchah, should have been translated girl, maid, maid-servant. The word either comes from the Anglo-Saxon penche, a maid, or the Belgic wunch, desire, a thing wished for : multum enim ut plurimum Puellæ, a Juvenibus desiderantur, seu appetuntur. So Minsheu. Junius seems more willing to derive it from wince, to frisk, to be skittish, &c. ; for reasons sufficiently obvious, and which he gives at length. After all, it may as likely come from the Gothic wens, or weins, a word frequently used in the Gospels of the Codex Argenteus for wife. Coverdale's Bible, 1585, has damsell. Beck's Bible, 1549, has wenche. The same in Cardmarden's Bible, 1566 ; but it is maid in Barker's Bible, 1615. Wench is more of a Scotticism than maid or damsel ; and King James probably restored it, as he is said to have done lad, in Gen. xxi. 12. and elsewhere. 23 ¶ And when Ahithophel saw that his counsel was not ^a followed, he saddled his ass, and arose, and gat him home to his house, to ^b his city, and ^c put his household in order, and ^d hanged himself, and died, and was buried in the sepulchre of his father.

every other place where the word occurs, our translators render it handmaid, bondmaid, maiden, woman-servant, maid-servant, and servant. Such is the latitude with which they translate the same Hebrew term, in almost innumerable instances !

Verse 23. Put his household in order] This self-murder could not be called lunacy, as every step to it was deliberate. He foresaw Absalom's ruin ; and he did not choose to witness it, and share in the disgrace. He was a very bad man, and died an unprepared and accursed death.

Verse 25. Amasa captain of the host] From the account in this verse, it appears that Joab and Amasa were sisters' children, and both nephews to David.

Verse 28. Brought beds] These, no doubt, consisted in skins of beasts, mats, carpets, and such like things.

^t Deut. 32. 14.

[Wheat and barley, &c.] There is no direct mention of flesh meat here: little was eaten in that country; and it would not keep. Whether the sheep mentioned were brought for their flesh, or their milk, I cannot tell.

According to Mr. Jones, "the Moors of West Barbary use the flour of parched barley, which is the chief provision they make for their journeys; and often use it at home; and this they carry in a leathern satchel." These are ordinarily made of goat skins. One of them now lies before me: it has been drawn off the animal before it was cut up; the places where the fore-legs, the tail, and the anus were, are elegantly closed, and have leathern thongs attached to them, by which it can be slung over the back of man, ass, or camel. The place of the neck is left open, with a running string to draw it up, purse-like, when necessary. The skin itself is tanned; and the upper side is curiously embroidered, with red, black, blue, yellow, and flesh-coloured leather, in very curious and elegant forms and devices. Bags of this kind are used for carrying wine, water, milk, butter, grain, flour, clothes, and different articles of merchandise. This is, as I have before stated, the Scripture bottle. Mr. Jones farther says, "Travellers use zumeet, tumeet, and limerece. Zumeet, is flour, mixed with honey, butter, and spice; tumeet, is flour, done up with organ oil: and limerece, is flour, mixed with water, for drink. This, says he, quenches thirst much better than water alone; satisfies a hungry appetite; cools and refreshes tired and weary spirits; overcoming those ill effects which a hot sun and fatiguing journey might well occasion."

This flour might be made of grain or pulse of any kind; and probably may be that which we here term parched corn, and parched pulse; and, in the forms above-mentioned, was well calculated, according to Mr. Jones' account, for the people, hungry, weary, and thirsty, in the wilderness. This was a timely supply for David and his men; and, no doubt, contributed much to the victory mentioned in the following chapter.

A REMARKABLE account of maternal affection in a she-bear. "In the year 1772, the Seahorse frigate and Carcass bomb, under the command of the Hon. Captain C. J. Phipps, afterward Lord Mulgrave, were sent on a voyage of discovery to the North seas. In this expedition the late celebrated Admiral Lord Nelson served as midshipman. While the Carcass lay locked in the ice, early one morning, ple that were with him, to eat: for they said, The people is hungry, and weary, and thirsty ^u in the wilderness.

the man at the mast-head gave notice, that three bears were making their way very fast over the frozen sea, and were directing their course toward the ship. They had, no doubt, been invited by the scent of some blubber of a seahorse the crew had killed a few days before, which had been set on fire, and was burning on the ice at the time of their approach. They proved to be a she-bear and her two cubs; but the cubs were nearly as large as the dam. They ran eagerly to the fire, and drew out from the flames part of the flesh of the seahorse that remained unconsumed, and ate voraciously. The crew from the ship threw great lumps of flesh of the seahorse, which they had still left upon the ice, which the old bear fetched away singly, laid every lump before her cubs as she brought it, and, dividing it, gave each a share, reserving but a small portion to herself. As she was fetching away the last piece, they levelled their muskets at the cubs, and shot them both dead; and in her retreat, they wounded the dam, but not mortally. It would have drawn tears of pity from any but unfeeling minds, to have marked the affectionate concern expressed by this poor beast in the dying moments of her expiring young. Though she was sorely wounded, and could but just crawl to the place where they lay, she carried the lump of flesh she had fetched away, as she had done the others before, tore it in pieces, and laid it down before them; and when she saw that they refused to eat, she laid her paws first upon one, and then upon the other, and endeavoured to raise them up: all this while it was piteous to hear her moan. When she found she could not move them, she went off; and, being at some distance, looked back and moaned: this not availing to entice them away, she returned; and, smelling round them, began to lick their wounds. She went off a second time, as before; and having crawled a few paces, looked again behind her, and for some time stood moaning. But still her cubs not rising to follow her, she returned to them again, and with signs of inexpressible fondness went round one, and round the other, pawing them, and moaning. Finding, at last, that they were cold and lifeless, she raised her head toward the ship, and growled a curse upon the murderers, which they returned with a volley of musket-balls. She fell between her cubs, and died licking their wounds."

Had this animal got among the destroyers of her young, she would have soon shown what was implied in the chafed mind of a bear, robbed of her whelps.

CHAPTER XVIII.

David reviews and arranges the people, and gives the command to Joab, Abishai, and Itai, 1, 2. On his expressing a desire to accompany them to the battle, they will not permit him, 3. He reviews them as they go out of the city, and gives commandment to the captains to save Absalom, 4, 5. They join battle with Absalom and his army, who are discomfited with the loss of twenty thousand men, 6-8. Absalom, fleeing away, is caught by the head in an oak; Joab finds, and transfixes him with three darts, 9-15. The servants of David are recalled, and Absalom buried, 16-18. Ahimaaz and Cushi bring the tidings to David, who is greatly distressed at hearing of the death of Absalom, and makes bitter lamentation for him, 19-37.

AND David ^a numbered the people that were with him, and set captains of thousands and captains of hundreds over them.

2 And David sent forth a third part of the people under the hand of Joab, ^b and a third part under the hand of Abishai the son of Zeruiah, Joab's brother, ^c and a third part under the hand of Ittai the Gittite. And the king said unto the people, I will surely go forth with you myself also.

3 ^d But the people answered, Thou shalt not go forth: for if we flee away, they will not ^e care for us; neither if half of us die, will they care for us; but now thou art ^f worth ten thousand of us: therefore now it is better that thou ^g succour us out of the city.

4 And the king said unto them, What seemeth you best I will do. And the king stood by the gate-side, and all the people came out by hundreds, and by thousands.

5 And the king commanded Joab, and Abishai, and Ittai, saying, Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even with Absalom. ^h And all the people heard when the king gave all the captains charge concerning Absalom.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVIII.

Verse 1. And set captains of thousands] By this time David's small company was greatly recruited; but what its number was we cannot tell. Josephus says, it amounted only to four thousand men. Others have supposed, that they amounted to ten thousand; for thus they understand a clause in ver. 3. which they think should be read, We are now ten thousand strong.

Verse 3. But now thou art worth ten thousand of us] The particle νυν ata, now, is doubtless a mistake for the pronoun αυ ατα, thou: and so it appears to have been read by the Septuagint, the Vulgate, and the Chaldee; and by two of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.

Verse 5. Deal gently with the young man] David was the father of this worthless young man; and is it to be wondered at that he feels as a father? Who, in his circumstances, that had such feelings as every man should have, would have felt or acted otherwise.

Verse 7. Twenty thousand men] Whether these were slain on the field of battle, or whether they were reckoned with those slain in the wood of Ephraim, we know not.

Verse 8. The wood devoured more people] It is generally supposed, that when the army was broken, they betook themselves to the wood, field against Israel: and the battle was in the ⁱ wood of Ephraim;

7 Where the people of Israel were slain before the servants of David, and there was there a great slaughter that day of twenty thousand men.

8 For the battle was there scattered over the face of all the country: and the wood ^k devoured more people that day than the sword devoured.

9 ¶ And Absalom met the servants of David. And Absalom rode upon a mule, and the mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his head caught hold of the oak, and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth: and the mule that was under him went away.

10 And a certain man saw it, and told Joab, and said, Behold, I saw Absalom hanged in an oak.

11 And Joab said unto the man that told him, And, behold, thou sawest him, and why didst thou not smite him there to the ground? and I would have given thee ten shekels of silver, and a girdle.

12 And the man said unto Joab, Though I should ^l receive a thousand shekels of silver in mine hand, yet would I not put forth mine hand against the fell into pits, swamps, &c. and being entangled, were hewn down, by David's men; but the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, state, that they were devoured by wild beasts in the wood.

Verse 9. And his head caught hold of the oak] It has been supposed that Absalom was caught by the hair; but no such thing is intimated in the text. Probably his neck was caught in the fork of a strong bough, and that he was nearly dead when Joab found him: for it is said, ver. 14. he was yet alive; an expression which intimates he was nearly dead.

Verse 10. I saw Absalom hanged in an oak] He must have bung there a considerable time. This man saw him hanging; how long he had been hanging before he saw him, we cannot tell. He came and informed Joab; this must have taken up a considerable time; Joab went and pierced him through with three darts; this must have taken up still more time. It is therefore natural to conclude, that his life must have been nearly gone, after having been so long suspended; and probably was past recovery, even if Joab had taken him down.

Verse 11. And a girdle]. The military belt was the chief ornament of a soldier; and was highly prized in all ancient nations: it was also a rich present from one chieftain to another. Jonathan gave his to David, as the highest king's son : ^m for in our hearing the king charged thee, and Abishai, and Itai, saying, ⁿ Beware that none touch the young man Absalom.

13 Otherwise I should have wrought falsehood against mine own life : for there is no matter hid from the king, and thou thyself wouldest have set thyself against me.

14 Then said Joab, I may not tarry thus ^o with thee. And he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive in the ^p midst of the oak.

15 And ten young men that bare Joab's armour, compassed about, and smote Absalom, and slew him.

16 And Joab blew the trumpet, and the people returned from pursuing after Israel : for Joab held back the people.

17 And they took Absalom, and cast him into a great pit in the wood, and ^r laid a very great heap of stones upon him : and all Israel fled every one to his tent.

18 Now Absalom in his lifetime had taken and reared up for himself a pillar, which is in ^s the king's dale : for he said, ^t I have no son to keep my name in remembrance : and he called the pillar after his own name : and it is called unto this day Absalom's Place.

19 ¶ Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok, Let me now run, and bear the king tidings, how that the LORD hath ^u avenged him of his enemies.

20 And Joab said unto him, Thou shalt not ^v bear tidings this day, but thou shalt bear tidings another day : but this day thou shalt bear no tidings, because the king's son is dead.

21 Then said Joab to Cushi, Go tell the king what thou hast seen. And Cushi bowed himself unto Joab, and ran.

22 Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok yet again to Joab, But ^w howsoever, let me, I pray thee, also run after Cushi. And Joab said, Wherefore wilt thou run, my son, seeing that thou hast no tidings ^x ready ?

23 But howsoever, said he, let me run. And he said unto him, Run. Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and overran Cushi.

pledge of his esteem and perpetual friendship, 1 Sam. xviii. 4. And Ajax gave his to Hector, as a token of the highest respect. Hom. II. vii. ver. 305.

Verse 13. Thou thyself wouldest have set thyself against me.] This is a strong appeal to Joab's loyalty, and respect for the orders of David ; but he was proof against every fine feeling, and against every generous sentiment.

Verse 14. I may not tarry thus with thee] He had nothing to say in vindication of the purpose he had formed.

Thrust them through the heart of Absalom] He was determined to make sure work ; and, therefore, he pierced his heart.

Joab should have obeyed the king's commandment ; and yet, the safety of the state required the sacrifice of Absalom. But, independently of this, his life was quadruply forfeited to the law : 1. In having murdered his brother Amnon. 2. In having excited an insurrection in the state. 3. In having taken up arms against his own father, Deut. xxi. 18, 21. 4. In having lain with his father's concubines, Lev. xviii. 29. Long ago he should have died by the hand of justice ; and now all his crimes are visited on him, in his last act of rebellion. Yet, in the present circumstances, Joab's act was base and disloyal ; and a cowardly murder.

Verse 15. Ten young men—smote Absalom, and slew him.] That is, they all pierced the body ; but there could be no life in it after three darts had been thrust through the heart : but they added as much as would have killed him had he been alive.

Verse 16. Joab blew the trumpet] He knew that the rebellion was now extinguished by the death of Absalom ; and was not willing that any farther slaughter should be made of the deluded people.

Verse 17. And laid a very great heap of stones] This was the method of burying heroes, and even traitors ; the heap of stones being designed to perpetuate the memory of the event, whether good or bad. The ancient cairns, or heaps of stones, in different parts of the world, are of this kind. The various tumuli or barrows, in England, are the same as the cairns in different parts of Ireland and Scotland. In the former, stones were not plenty ; hence they heaped up great mounds of earth.

Verse 18. Reared up for himself a pillar] There was a marble pillar in the time of Josephus, called Absalom's pillar : and there is one shown to the present day, under this name ; but it is comparatively a modern structure.

26 And the watchman saw another man running: and the watchman called unto the porter, and said, Behold another man running alone. And the king said, He also bringeth tidings.

he could not tell the king whether Absalom were dead. To this Joab seems to refer, ver. 22. Thou hast no tidings ready.

Verse 24. David sat between the two gates] He was probably in the seat of justice. Before the gate of the city, it is supposed, there was an enclosure, which had its gate also: David sat in the space between these two doors. Over the larger gate there appears to have been a turret, on which a sentinel, or watchman, stood continually; and gave information of what he saw in the country.

Verse 25. If he be alone, there is tidings] That is, good tidings. For, if the battle had been lost, men would have been running in different directions through the country.

Verse 29. I saw a great tumult] It is very probable that Ahimaaz did not know of the death of Absalom: he had seen the rout of his army, but did not know of his death. Others think he knew all, and told this untruth that he might not be the messenger of bad news to David.

Verse 30. Stand here] He intended to confront the two messengers, and compare their accounts.

Verse 32. Is the young man Absalom safe?] This was the utmost of his solicitude: and it well merited the reproof which Joab gave him, ch. xix. 5.

30 And the king said unto him, Turn aside, and stand here. And he turned aside, and stood still.

31 And, behold, Cushie, came; and Cushie said, ^e Tidings, my lord the king: for the LORD hath avenged thee this day of all them that rose up against thee.

32 And the king said unto Cushie, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Cushie answered, The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is.

33 And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept: and as he went, thus he said, ^f O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!

by the most able critics that this lamentation is exceedingly pathetic. In what order the words were pronounced, for much depends on this, we cannot say. Perhaps it was the following:—

בני אבשלום בני
Beni Abshalom, beni!
My son Absalom! O my son!

בני אבשלום
Beni Abshalom!
O my son Absalom!

כי יתן מותי אני תחתיו
Mi yitten muthi ani tachteicha.
O that I had died in thy stead!

אבשלום בני בני
Abshalom, beni! beni!
O Absalom, my son, my son!

Is there no hope for the soul of this profligate young man? He died in his iniquity: but is it not possible that he implored the mercy of his Maker while he hung in the tree? And is it not possible that the mercy of God was extended to him? And was not that suspension a respite, to the end that he might have time to deprecate the wrath of divine justice?

This is at least a charitable conjecture, and humanity will delight, in such a case, to lay hold even on possibilities. If there be any room for hope in such a death, who, that knows the worth of an immortal soul, would not wish to indulge in it?

CHAPTER XIX.

David continues his lamentation for his son, and the people are greatly discouraged, 1—4. Joab reproves and threatens him with the general defection of the people, 5—7. David lays aside his mourning, and shows himself to the people, who are thereby encouraged, 8. The tribes take counsel to bring the king back to Jerusalem, 9—12. He makes Amasa captain of the host, in place of Joab, 13. The king, returning, is met by Judah, at Gilead, 14, 15. Shimei comes to meet David, and entreates for his life, which David grants, 16—23. Mephibosheth also meets him, and shows how he had been slandered by Ziba, 24—30. David is met by Barzillai, and between them there is an affecting interview, 31—40. Contention between the men of Judah and the men of Israel, about bringing back the king, 41—43.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIX.

Verse 2. The victory—was turned into mourning] Instead of rejoicing that a most unnatural and ruinous rebellion had been quashed; the people mourned over their own success, because they saw their king so immoderately afflicted for the loss of his worthless son.

Verse 4. The king covered his face] This was the custom of mourners.

O my son Absalom!] Calmet has properly remarked, that the frequent repetition of the name of the defunct, is common in the language of lamentation. Thus VIRGIL, Ecl. v. ver. 51.

—Daphnim que tuum tollemus ad astra;
Daphnim ad astra feremus: amavit nos quoque Daphnis.
With yours, my song I cheerfully shall join,
To raise your Daphnis to the powers divine.
Daphnis I'll raise unto the powers above,
For dear to me was Daphnis' well-tried love.

See the notes on the preceding chapter.

Verse 5. Thou hast shamed this day] Joab's for I swear by the LORD, if thou go not forth, there will not tarry one with thee this night: and that will be worse unto thee than all the evil that befell thee from thy youth until now.

8 Then the king arose, and sat in the gate. And they told unto all the people, saying, Behold, the king doth sit in the gate. And all the people came before the king: for Israel had fled every man to his tent.

9 ¶ And all the people were at strife throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, The king saved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand of the Philistines; and now he is ^h fled out of the land for Absalom.

10 And Absalom, whom we anointed over us, is dead in battle. Now therefore why ⁱ speak ye not a word of bringing the king back?

11 ¶ And King David sent to Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, saying, Speak unto the elders of Judah, saying, Why are ye the last to bring the king back to his house? seeing the speech of all Israel is come to the king, even to his house.

12 Ye are my brethren, ye are ^k my bones and my flesh: wherefore then speech to David on his immoderate grief for the death of his rebellious son, is not only remarkable for the insolence of office, but also for good sense and firmness. Every man, who candidly considers the state of the case, must allow that David acted imprudently, at least; and that Joab's firm reproof was necessary, to arouse him to a sense of his duty to his people. But still, in his manner, Joab had far exceeded the bounds of that reverence which a servant owes to his master, or a subject to his prince. Joab was a good soldier; but, in every respect, a bad man, and a dangerous subject.

Verse 8. The king—sat in the gate] The place where justice was administered to the people.

Verse 11. Speak unto the elders of Judah] David was afraid to fall out with this tribe: they were in possession of Jerusalem, and this was a city of great importance to him. They had joined Absalom in his rebellion; and, doubtless, were now ashamed of their conduct.

are ye the last to bring back the king ?

13 ¹ And say ye to Amasa, Art thou not of my bone, and of my flesh ? ^m God do so to me, and more also, if thou be not captain of the host before me continually in the room of Joab.

14 And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah, ⁿ even as the heart of one man ; so that they sent this word unto the king, Return thou, and all thy servants.

15 So the king returned, and came to Jordan. And Judah came to ^o Gilgal, to go to meet the king, to conduct the king over Jordan.

16 [†] And ^p Shimei the son of Gera, a Benjaminite, which was of Bahurim, hasted, and came down with the men of Judah to meet King David.

17 And there were a thousand men of Benjamin with him, and ^r Ziba the servant of the house of Saul, and his fifteen sons and his twenty servants with him ; and they went over Jordan before the king.

18 And there went over a ferry-boat to carry over the king's household, and to do ^s what he thought good. And Shimei the son of Gera fell down before the king, as he was come over Jordan ;

19 And said unto the king, ^t Let not my lord impute iniquity unto me, neither do thou remember ^u that which thy servant did perversely the day that my lord the king went out of Jerusalem,

David appears to take no notice of their infidelity ; but rather to place confidence in them, that their confidence in him might be naturally excited : and, to oblige them yet farther, purposes to make Amasa captain of the host in the place of Joab.

Verse 14. And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah] The measures that he pursued were the best calculated that could be, to accomplish this salutary end. Appear to distrust those whom you have some reason to suspect, and you increase their caution and distrust. Put as much confidence in them as you safely can ; and this will not fail to excite their confidence toward you.

Verse 16. Shimei the son of Gera] It appears that Shimei was a powerful chieftain in the land ; for he had here, in his retinue, no less than a thousand men.

Verse 18. There went over a ferry-boat] This that the king should take it to his heart.

20 For thy servant doth know that I have sinned : therefore, behold, I am come the first this day of all ^w the house of Joseph to go down to meet my lord the king.

21 But Abishai the son of Zeruiah answered and said, Shall not Shimei be put to death for this, because he ^x cursed the LORD's anointed ?

22 And David said, ^y What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be adversaries unto me ? ^z shall there any man be put to death this day in Israel ? for do not I know that I am this day king over Israel ?

23 Therefore ^a the king said unto Shimei, Thou shalt not die. And the king sware unto him.

24 [†] And ^b Mephibosheth the son of Saul came down to meet the king, and had neither dressed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, nor washed his clothes, from the day the king departed until the day he came again in peace.

25 And it came to pass, when he was come to Jerusalem to meet the king, that the king said unto him, ^c Wherefore wentest not thou with me, Mephibosheth ?

is the first mention of any thing of the kind. Some think a bridge or raft is what is here intended.

Verse 20. For thy servant doth know that I have sinned] This was all he could do : his subsequent conduct alone could prove his sincerity. On such an avowal as this, David could not but grant him his life.

Verse 24. Neither dressed his feet] He had given the fullest proof of his sincere attachment to David and his cause ; and, by what he had done, amply refuted the calumnies of his servant Ziba.

Verse 27. The king is as an angel of God] As if he had said, I state my case plainly, and without guile ; thou art too wise not to penetrate the motives from which both myself and servant have acted. I shall make no appeal ; with whatsoever thou determinest, I shall rest contented.

came down from Rogelim, and went over Jordan with the king, to conduct him over Jordan.

32 Now Barzillai was a very aged man, even fourscore years old: and ⁱ he had provided the king of sustenance while he lay at Mahanaim; for he was a very great man.

33 And the king said unto Barzillai,

Verse 29. I have said, Thou and Ziba divide the land.] At first, David gave the land of Saul to Mephibosheth; and Ziba, his sons, and his servants, were to work that land; and to Mephibosheth, as the lord, he was to give the half of the produce. Ziba met David in his distress with provisions, and calumniated Mephibosheth; David, too slightly trusting to his misrepresentation, and supposing that Mephibosheth was actually such a traitor as Ziba represented him, made him, on the spot, a grant of his master's land. Now he finds that he has acted too rashly; and therefore confirms the former grant: i. e. that Ziba should cultivate the ground, and still continue to give to Mephibosheth, as the lord, the half of the produce. This was merely placing things in statu quo, and utterly annulling the gift that he had made to Ziba. But why did he leave this treacherous man any thing? Answer—1. He was one of the domestics of Saul, and David wished to show kindness to that house. 2. He had supplied him with the necessities of life, when he was in the greatest distress; and he thinks proper to continue him in his old office, by way of remuneration. But it was certainly too great a compensation for his services, however then important, when all the circumstances are considered.

Verse 32. Barzillai was a very aged man] This venerable person had given full proof of his attachment to David, by the supplies he had given him when he lay at Mahanaim, 37 Let thy servant, I pray thee, turn back again, that I may die in mine own city, and be buried by the grave of my father and of my mother. But behold thy servant ^m Chimham; let him go over with my lord the king; and do to him what shall seem good unto thee.

where his case was all but desperate; the sincerity of his congratulations now, none can suspect. David's offer to him was at once noble and liberal: he wished to compensate such a man; and he wished to have at hand such a friend.

Verse 35. Can thy servant taste what I eat] Here is at once an affecting description of the infirmities of old age; and a correct account of the mode of living at an Eastern court, in ancient times.

Barzillai was fourscore years old; his ear was become dull of hearing, and his relish for his food was gone: he, therefore, appears to have been not only an old man, but an infirm old man. Besides delicate meats and drinks, we find that vocal music constituted a principal part of court entertainments: male and female singers made a necessary appendage to these banquets, as they do in most Eastern courts to the present day. As David was a most sublime poet, and emphatically styled the sweet singer of Israel, he, no doubt, had his court well supplied with vocal as well as instrumental performers; and, probably, with poets and poetesses; for it is not likely that he was the only poet of his time, though he undoubtedly was the most excellent.

Verse 37. Thy servant Chimham] It is generally understood that this was Barzillai's son; and this is probable from 1 Kings ii. 8. where, when David was dying, he said, Show kindness to the sons of Barzillai: and it is very do to him that which shall seem good unto thee: and whatsoever thou shalt require of me, that will I do for thee.

39 And all the people went over Jordan. And when the king was come over, the king °kissed Barzillai, and blessed him; and he returned unto his own place.

40 Then the king went on to Gilgal, and °Chimham went on with him: and all the people of Judah conducted the king, and also half the people of Israel.

43 And the men of Israel answered the men of Judah, and said, We have ten parts in the king, and we have also more right in David than ye: why then did ye °despise us, that our advice should not be first had in bringing back our king? And °the words of the men of Judah were fiercer than the words of the men of Israel.

probable that this Chimham was one of them. In Jer. xli. 17. mention is made of the habitation of Chimham, which was near to Beth-lehem; and it is reasonably conjectured that David had left that portion, which was probably a part of his paternal estate, to this son of Barzillai.

Verse 39. The king kissed Barzillai, and blessed him] The kiss was the token of friendship and farewell; the blessing was a prayer to God for his prosperity: probably a prophetic benediction.

Verse 42. Wherefore then be ye angry for this matter] We have not done this for our own advantage; we have gained nothing by it; we did it through loyal attachment to our king.

Verse 43. We have ten parts in the king, and—more right] We are ten tribes to one; or we are ten times so many as you; and, consequently, should have been consulted in this business.

The words of the men of Judah were fiercer than the words of the men of Israel.] They had more weight, for they had more reason on their side.

It is pleasant when every province, canton, district, and country, vie with each other in personal attachment to the prince, and loyal attachment to his government. From such contentions as these civil wars are never likely to arise. And how blessed it must be for the country where the king merits all this! where the prince is the pastor and father of his people, and in all things the minister of God to them for good.

It is criminal in the prince not to endeavour to deserve the confidence and love of his people; and it is highly criminal in the people not to repay such endeavours with the most loyal and affectionate attachment.

Where the government is not despotic, the king acts by the counsels of his ministers; and while he does so, he is not chargeable with miscarriages and misfortunes: they either came through bad counsels, or directly thwarting providences. On this ground is that political maxim in our laws formed, the king can do no wrong. Sometimes God will have things otherwise than the best counsels have determined; because he sees that the results will, on the whole, be better for the peace and prosperity of that state. "God is the only Ruler of princes." And as the peace of the world depends much on civil government, hence kings and civil governors are peculiar objects of the Almighty's care. Wo to him who labours to bring about a general disaffection; as such things almost invariably end in general disappointment and calamity. It is much easier to unsettle than to settle; to pull down than to build up.

AND there happened to be there a man of Be-lial, whose name was Sheba, the son of Bichri, a Benja-mite: and he blew a trumpet, and said, a We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse:
b every man to his tents, O Israel.

2 So every man of Israel went up from after David, and followed Sheba the son of Bichri: but the men of Judah clave unto their king, from Jordan even to Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And David came to his house at Jerusalem; and the king took the ten women, his c concubines, whom he had left to keep the house, and put them in d ward, and fed them, but went not in unto them. So they were e shut up unto the day of their death, f living in widowhood.

4 ¶ Then said the king to Amasa, g Assemble h me the men of Judah within three days, and be thou here present.

5 So Amasa went to assemble the men of Judah: but he tarried longer than the set time which he had appointed him.

6 And David said to Abishai, Now shall Sheba the son of Bichri do us more harm than did Absalom: take thou i thy lord's servants, and pursue after him, lest he get him fenced cities, and k escape us.

7 And there went out after him Joab's men, and the l Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and all the mighty men; and they went out of Jerusalem to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

8 When they were at the great stone which is in Gibeon, Amasa went before them. And Joab's garment that he had put on was girded unto him, and upon it a girdle with a sword fastened upon his loins in the sheath thereof; and as he went forth it fell out.

9 And Joab said to Amasa, Art thou in health, my brother? m And Joab took Amasa by the beard with the right hand to kiss him.

10 But Amasa took no heed to the sword that was in Joab's hand: so n he smote him therewith o in the fifth rib, and shed out his bowels to the ground, and p struck him not again; and he died. So Joab and Abishai his brother pursued after Sheba the son of Bichri.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Verse 1. Sheba, the son of Bichri] As this man was a Benjamite, he probably belonged to the family of Saul; and he seems to have had considerable influence in Israel to raise such an insurrection: but we know nothing farther of him than what is related in this place.

We have no part in David] We of Israel, we of the ten tribes, are under no obligation to the house of David. Leave him, and let every man fall into the ranks under his own leader.

Verse 3. The ten women] He could not well divorce them: he could not punish them, as they were not in transgression; and he could no more be familiar with them, because they had been defiled by his son. To have married them to other men might have been dangerous to the state, therefore he shut them up and fed them; made them quite comfortable; and they continued as widows to their death.

Verse 4. Then said the king to Amasa] Thus he invests him with the command of the army, and sends him to collect the men of Judah, and to come back to receive his orders in relation to Sheba, in three days. It appears that Amasa found more difficulty in collecting his countrymen than was at first supposed; and this, detaining him beyond the three days, David, fearing that Sheba's rebellion would get head, sent Abishai, who it appears was accompanied by Joab, to pursue after Sheba.

Amasa, it seems, got up with them at Gibeon, ver. 8. where he was treacherously murdered
by the execrable Joab.

Verse 8. Joab's garment] It appears that this was not a military garment; and that Joab had no arms but a short sword, which he had concealed in his girdle; and this sword, or knife, was so loose in its sheath that it could be easily drawn out. It is thought farther, that Joab, in passing to Amasa, stumbled, for so some of the versions, and able critics, understand the words it fell out; and that the sword fell down when he stumbled; that he took it up with his left hand, as if he had no bad intention; and then, taking Amasa by the beard with his right hand, pretending to kiss him, he, with his sword in his left hand, ripped up his bowels. This seems to be the meaning of this very obscure verse. It is worthy of remark that, in the Eastern country, it is the beard, not the man, which is usually kissed.

Verse 10. In the fifth rib] I believe chomesh, which we render here, and elsewhere, the fifth rib, means any part of the abdominal region. The Septuagint translate it in the groin; the Targum, the right side of the thigh; i. e. the phrase of the Targumist being interpreted, the privy parts. That it means

12 And Amasa wallowed in blood in the midst of the highway. And when the man saw that all the people stood still, he removed Amasa out of the highway into the field, and cast a cloth upon him, when he saw that every one that came by him stood still.

13 When he was removed out of the highway, all the people went on after Joab, to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

14 ¶ And he went through all the tribes of Israel unto Abel, and to Beth-maachah, and all the Berites: and they were gathered together, and went also after him.

15 And they came and besieged him in Abel of Beth-maachah, and they cast up a bank against the city, and it stood in the trench: and all the people that were with Joab battered the wall, to throw it down.

16 ¶ Then cried a wise woman out of the city; Hear, hear; say, I pray you, unto Joab, Come near hither, that I may speak with thee.

2 Kings 15. 29. 2 Chron. 16. 4.—2 Kings 19. 32.—Or, it stood against the outmost wall.—Heb. married to throw down.—Or, They plainly spake in the beginning, saying, some part of the abdominal region, is evident from what follows, And shed out his bowels to the ground. It appears from this that, in plain English, he ripped up his belly.

Verse 11. He that favoureth Joab] As if he had said, there is now no other commander besides Joab; and Joab is steadily attached to David: let those, therefore, who are loyal, follow Joab.

Verse 12. Amasa wallowed in blood] It is very likely that Amasa did not immediately die: I have known instances of persons living several hours after their bowels had been shed out.

Verse 14. Unto Abel] This is supposed to have been the capital of the district called Abilene, in St. Luke iii. 1.

Beth-maachah] Is supposed to have been in the northern part of the Holy Land, on the confines of Syria, and probably in the tribe of Naphtali.

Verse 15. They cast up a bank against the city] The word סֹלֶה sollah, which we render bank, means, most probably, a battering engine of some kind, or a tower overlooking the walls; on which archers and slingers could stand and annoy the inhabitants, while others of the besiegers could proceed to sap the walls. That it cannot be a bank that stood in the trench, is evident from the circumstance thus expressed.

17 And when he was come near unto her, the woman said, Art thou Joab? And he answered, I am he. Then she said unto him, Hear the words of thine handmaid. And he answered, I do hear.

18 Then she spake, saying, They were wont to speak in old time, saying, They shall surely ask counsel at Abel; and so they ended the matter.

19 I am one of them that are peaceable and faithful in Israel: thou seekest to destroy a city and a mother in Israel: why wilt thou swallow up the inheritance of the LORD?

20 And Joab answered and said, Far be it, far be it from me, that I should swallow up or destroy.

21 The matter is not so: but a man of mount Ephraim, Sheba the son of Bichri by name, hath lifted up his hand against the king, even against David: deliver him only, and I will depart from the city. And the woman said unto Joab, Behold, his head shall be thrown to thee over the wall.

22 Then the woman went unto all the people in her wisdom: and they cut off the head of Sheba the son of Bichri, and cast it out to Joab. And Surely they will ask of Abel, and so make an end: See Deut. 20. 11.—1 Sam. 26. 19. Ch. 21. 3.—Heb. by his name.—Eccles. 9. 14, 15.

Verse 16. A wise woman] She was probably governess.

Verse 18. They shall surely ask counsel at Abel] This is a proverb, but from what it originated we know not; nor can we exactly say what it means: much must be supplied to bring it to speak sense. Abel was probably famed for the wisdom of its inhabitants; and parties who had disputes, appealed to their judgment; which appears to have been in such high reputation as to be final by consent of all parties. To this the wise woman refers; and intimates to Joab that he should have proceeded in this way before he began to storm the city, and destroy the peaceable inhabitants.

Verse 19. I—peaceable and faithful in Israel] I am for peace, not contention of any kind; I am faithful. I adhere to David; and neither seek nor shall sanction any rebellion or anarchy in the land. Why then dost thou proceed in such a violent manner? Perhaps the woman speaks here in the name and on the behalf of the city: "I am a peaceable city, and am faithful to the king."

A mother in Israel] That is, a chief city of a district; for it is very likely that the woman speaks of the city, not of herself.

Verse 21. His head shall be thrown to thee] Thus it appears she had great sway in the coun-state rebel was then, what it is now in this kingdom, beheading.

Verse 23. Joab was over all the host] He had murdered Amasa, and seized on the supreme command: and such was his power at present, and the service which he had rendered to the state by quelling the rebellion of Sheba, that David was obliged to continue him; and dared not to call him to account for his murders, without endangering the safety of the state by a civil war.

nearly the same: Gad was David's seer, 2 Sam.

Verse 1. Then there was a famine] Of this famine we know nothing; it is not mentioned in any part of the history of David.

Because he slew the Gibeonites.] No such fact is mentioned in the life and transactions of Saul; nor is there any reference to it in any other part of Scripture.

3 Wherefore David said unto the Gibeonites, What shall I do for you? and wherewith shall I make the atonement; that ye may bless ^cthe inheritance of the LORD?

4 And the Gibeonites said unto him, ^dWe will have no silver nor gold of Saul, nor of his house; neither for us shalt thou kill any man in Israel. And he said, What ye shall say, that will I do for you.

* Or, It is not silver nor gold that we have to do with Saul or his house, neither pertains it to us to kill, &c.

Gibeonites were Hivites, not Amorites, as appears from Joshua vi. 19; but Amorites is a name often given to the Canaanites in general, Gen. xv. 16. Anos xi. 9. and elsewhere.

Verse 3. Wherewith shall I make the atonement] It is very strange that a choice of this kind should be left to such a people. Why not ask this of God himself?

Verse 6. Seven men of his sons] Meaning sons, grandsons, or other near branches of his family. It is supposed that the persons chosen were principal in assisting Saul to exterminate the Gibeonites. But where is the proof of this?

Verse 8. Five sons of Michal—whom she brought up] Michal, Saul's daughter, was never married to Adriel, but to David, and afterward to Phaltiel; though it is here said she bore יָלְדָה, yaledah, not brought up, as we falsely translate it: but we learn from 1 Sam. xviii. 19. that Merab, one of Saul's daughters, was married to Adriel.

Two of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. have Merab, not Michal; the Syriac and Arabic have Nadal; the Chaldee has properly Merab; but it renders the passage thus:—And the five sons of Merab, which Michal the daughter of Saul brought up, which she brought forth to Adriel the son of Barzillai. This cuts the knot.

Verse 9. In the beginning of barley-harvest.] This happened, in Judea, about the vernal equinox, or 21st of March.

Verse 10. Rizpah—took sackcloth] Who can read the account of Rizpah's maternal affection for her sons that were now hanged, without feeling his mind deeply impressed with sorrow?

Did God require this sacrifice of Saul's sons, probably all innocent of the alleged crime of their father? Was there no other method of averting the divine displeasure? Was the requisition of the Gibeonites to have Saul's sons sacrificed to God, to be considered as an oracle of God? Certainly not; God will not have man's blood for sacrifice, no more than he will have swine's blood. The famine might have been removed, and the land properly purged, by offering the sacrifices prescribed by the law; and by a general humiliation of the people.

Until water dropped upon them] Until the time of the autumnal rains; which, in that country, commence about October. Is it possible that this poor broken-hearted woman could have endured the fatigue (and probably in the open air) of watching these bodies for more than five months? Some think that the rain dropping on them out of heaven means the removal of the famine which was occasioned by drought, by now sending rain, which might have been shortly after these men were hanged: but this by no means agrees with the manner in which the account is introduced.—They were put to death in the days of harvest, in the first days, in the beginning of barley-harvest. And Rizpah—took sackcloth, and spread it for her on the rock, from the beginning of harvest, until water dropped upon them out of heaven. No casual, or immediately providential rain can be here intended; reference must be to the periodical rains above-mentioned.

Verse 12. Took the bones of Saul] The reader will recollect that the men of Jabesh-gilead burnt the bodies of Saul and his sons, and buried the remaining bones under a tree at Jabesh; see 1 Sam. xxxi. 12, 13. These David might have digged up again, in order to bury them in the family sepulchre

David waxed faint.] This circumstance is nowhere else mentioned.

Verse 16. Being girded with a new sword] As the word sword is not in the original, we may apply the term new to his armour in general: he had got new arms, a new coat of mail, or something that defended him well, and rendered him very formidable.

Verse 17. That thou quench not the light of Israel.] David is here considered as the lamp by which all Israel was guided; and, without whom, all the nation must be involved in darkness. The lamp is the emblem of direction and support. Light is used in this sense by Homer:—

Οὐδὲ τι Πατροκλῆ γενόμεν φάος, οὐδ' ἀπαροίσι Τοῖς ἀλλοῖς, εἰ δὲ πόλεος δαμνὲν Ἑκτορι δια.
Iliad, lib. xviii. ver. 102.

“I have neither been a LIGHT to Patroclus, nor to his companions, who have been slain by the noble Hector.”

Verse 18. A battle—at Gob] Instead of Gob, several editions, and about forty of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have Nob; but Gezer is the name in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xx. 4.

Verse 19. Elhanan the son of Jaare-oregim—slew—Goliath the Gittite] Here is a most manifest corruption of the text, or gross mistake of the transcriber; David, not Elhanan, slew Goliath. In 1 Chron. xx. 5. the parallel place, it stands thus—Elhanan, the son of Jair, slew Lahmi, the brother of Goliath the Gittite, whose 18 ^a And it came to pass after this, that there was again a battle with the Philistines at Gob: then ^b Sibbechai the Hushathite slew ^c Saph, which was of the sons of ^d the giant.

19 And there was again a battle in Gob with the Philistines, where Elhanan the son of ^e Jaare-oregim, a Beth-lehemite, slew ^f the brother of Goliath the Gittite, the staff of whose spear was like a weaver's beam.

20 And ^g there was yet a battle in Gath, where was a man of great stature, that had on every hand six fingers, and on every foot six toes, four and twenty in number; and he also was born to ^h the giant.

21 And when he ⁱ defied Israel, Jonathan the son of ^k Shimeah the brother of David slew him.

spear-staff was like a weaver's beam. This is plain: and our translators have borrowed some words from Chronicles to make both texts agree. The corruption may be easily accounted for, by considering that אֶרֶגִּים oregim, which signifies weavers, has slipped out of one line into the other; and that בֶּת לֶחֶמִי Beth ha lechmi, the Beth-lehemite, is corrupted from אֶת לַחֲמִי eth lachmi; then the reading will be the same as in Chronicles. Dr. Kennicott has made this appear very plain in his first Dissertation on the Hebrew Text, pag. 78, &c.

Verse 20. On every hand six fingers] This is not a solitary instance: Tavernier informs us, that the eldest son of the emperor of Java (who reigned in 1648) had six fingers on each hand, and six toes on each foot. And Maupertuis, in his seventeenth letter, says, that he met with two families near Berlin, where sex-digitism was equally transmitted on both sides of father and mother. I saw once a young girl in the county of Londonderry, in Ireland, who had six fingers on each hand, and six toes on each foot; but her stature had nothing gigantic in it. The daughters of Caius Horatius, of patrician dignity, were called sedigitæ, because they had six fingers on each hand. Volcatius, a poet, was called sedigitus, for the same reason. See Pliny's Hist. Nat. lib. xi. cap. 43.

THERE are evidently many places in this chapter in which the text has suffered much from the ignorance or carelessness of transcribers; and, indeed, I suspect the whole has suffered so materially as to distort, if not misrepresent, the principal facts. It seems as if a

Gibeonite has had something to do with the copies that are come down to us; or that the fourteen first verses have been inserted from a less authentic document than the rest of the book. I shall notice some of the most unaccountable, and apparently exceptionable, particulars:—

1. The famine, ver. 1. is not spoken of any where else; nor at all referred to in the books of Kings or Chronicles; and, being of three years' duration, it was too remarkable to be omitted in the history of David.

2. The circumstance of Saul's attempt to exterminate the Gibeonites, is nowhere else mentioned; and, had it taken place, it is not likely that it would have been passed over in the history of Saul's transgressions. Indeed, it would have been such a breach of the good faith by which the whole nation was bound to this people, that an attempt of the kind could scarcely have failed to raise an insurrection through all Israel.

3. The wish of David, that the Gibeonites, little better than a heathenish people, should bless the inheritance of the Lord, is unconstitutional and unlikely.

4. That God should leave the choice of the atonement to such a people, or indeed to any people, seems contrary to his established laws, and particular providence.

5. That he should require seven innocent men to be hung up in place of their offending father, in whose iniquity they most likely never had a share, seems inconsistent with his justice and mercy.

6. In ver. 8. there is mention made of five sons of Michal, which she bore (יָלְדָה yaledah) unto Adriel. Now, 1. Michal was never the wife of Adriel, but of David and Phaltiel. 2. She never appears to have had any children, see 2 Sam. vi. 23; this I have been obliged to correct in the text, by putting Merab in the place of Michal.

7. The seven sons of Saul, mentioned here, are represented as a sacrifice required by God, to make an atonement for the sin of Saul. Does God, in any case, require human blood for sacrifice? And is it not such a sacrifice that is represented here? Dr. Delaney, and others, imagine that these seven sons were principal agents in the execution of their father's purpose; but of this there is no proof. Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, certainly had no hand in this projected massacre; he was ever lame, and could not be so employed; and yet he would have been one of the seven, had it not been for the covenant made before with his father: But the king spared Mephibosheth the son of Jonathan—because of the Lord's oath that was between them, ver. 7.

8. The circumstance of Rizpah's watching the bodies of those victims, upon a rock, and probably in the open air, both day and night, from March to October, or even for a much less period, is, as it is here related, very extraordinary and improbable.

9. The hanging the bodies so long was against an express law of God, which ordained, that those who were hanged on a tree should be taken down before sunset, and buried the same day, lest the land should be defiled, Deut. xxi. 22, 23. Therefore—1. God did not command a breach of his own law. 2. David was too exact an observer of that law to require it. 3. The people could not have endured it; for, in that sultry season, the land would indeed have been defiled by the putrefaction of the dead bodies: and this would, in all likelihood, have added pestilence to famine.

10. The story of collecting and burying the bones of Saul and Jonathan, is not very likely; considering that the men of Jabesh-gilead had burned their bodies, and buried the remaining bones under a tree at Jabesh, 1 Sam. xxxi. 12. yet still it is possible.

11. Josephus takes as much of this story as he thinks proper; but says not one word about Rizpah, and her long watching over her slaughtered sons.

12. Even the facts in this chapter, which are mentioned in other places, see 1 Chron. xx. 4, &c. are greatly distorted and corrupted; for we have already seen that Elhanan is made here to kill Goliath the Gittite, whom it is well known David slew: and it is only by means of the parallel place above that we can restore this to historical truth.

That there have been attempts to remove some of these objections I know; and, I know also, that these attempts have been, in general, without success.

Till I get farther light on the subject, I am led to conclude that the whole chapter is not now what it would be coming from the pen of an inspired writer; and that this part of the Jewish records has suffered much from rabbinical glosses, alterations, and additions. The law, the prophets, and the hagiographa, including Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, &c. have been ever considered as possessing the highest title to divine inspiration; and, therefore, have been most carefully preserved and transcribed: but the historical books, especially Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles, have not ranked so high, have been less carefully preserved, and have been the subjects of frequent alteration and corruption. Yet still the great foundation of God standeth sure, and is sufficiently attested by his own broad seal of consistency, truth, and holiness.

3 The God of my rock;
in him will I trust: he is my shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high tower, and my refuge, my saviour; thou savest me from violence.

4 I will call on the LORD, who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies.

5 When the waves of death com-passed me, the floods of ungodly men made me afraid;

6 The sorrows of hell compassed me about; the snares of death prevented me.

7 In my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried to my God: and he did hear my voice out of his temple, and my cry did enter into his ears.

8 Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations of heaven moved and shook, because he was wroth.

9 There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

10 He bowed the heavens also, and came down; and darkness was under his feet.

11 And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly; and he was seen upon the wings of the wind.

12 And he made darkness pavilions round about him, dark waters, and thick clouds of the skies.

13 Through the brightness before him were coals of fire kindled.

14 The LORD thundered from heaven, and the Most High uttered his voice.

15 And he sent out arrows,

16 And the channels of the sea ap-the LORD, at the blast of the breath of 17 He sent from above, he took me;

he drew me out of many waters;

18 He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them that hated me:
for they were too strong for me.

19 They prevented me in the day of my calamity; but the LORD was my 20 He brought me forth also into a

I now subjoin Dr. Kennicott's remarks on this chapter:

"The very sublime poetry contained in this chapter is universally admired; and yet it cannot be perfectly understood, (till it is known,) who is the speaker; who the person, thus triumphant over mighty enemies; whose sufferings

41 Thou hast also given me the ^w necks of mine enemies, that I might destroy them that hate me.

42 They looked, but there was none answered them not.

43 Then did I beat them as small ^y as the dust of the earth, I did stamp them ^z as the mire of the street, and did spread them abroad.

44 ^a Thou also hast delivered me from the strivings of my people, thou hast kept me to be ^b head of the heathen:
^c a people which I knew not shall serve me.

45 ^d Strangers shall ^e submit ^f themselves unto me: as soon as they hear, they shall be obedient unto me.

46 Strangers shall fade away, and they shall be afraid ^g out of their close

49 And that bringeth me forth from thee, O LORD, among ^m the heathen, occasioned such a dreadful convulsion of nature; and who, upon his deliverance, inflicted such vengeance on his own people, and also became thus a king over the heathen. Should we be told that this person was David, it will be very difficult to show how this description can possibly agree with that character: but, if it did in fact agree, yet would it contradict St. Paul, who quotes part of it, as predicting the conversion of the Gentiles, under Christ the Messiah, Rom. xv. 9. Heb. ii. 13; and see Peirce's Commentary, page 50. Now, if the person represented as speaking through this divine ode, be David only, the Messiah is excluded: and, if it be the Messiah only, then David is excluded. In consequence of the difficulties resulting from each of these suppositions, the general idea has been that it relates both to David and to the Messiah, as a prophecy of a double sense: first, as spoken by David of himself; and yet to be understood, in a secondary sense, of the Messiah. But, it must be remarked here, that, if spoken only of David, it is not a prediction of any thing future, but a thanksgiving for favours past; and, therefore, is no prophecy at all. And farther, it could not be a prophecy descriptive of David unless the particulars agreed to David; which they evidently do not. If, then, David be here necessarily excluded from the single sense, he must be excluded also from the double sense; because nothing can be intended, by any sacred writer, to relate to two persons, unless it be true of both: but, it not being the case here as to David, we must conclude that this song relates only to the Messiah; and on this subject an excellent dissertation, by the late Mr. Peirce, is subjoined to his comment on the Epistle to the Hebrews. It may be necessary to add here two remarks; the 24th verse now ends with, I have kept myself from mine iniquity; which words, it is objected, are not proper, if applied to the Messiah. But this difficulty is removed, in part, by the context, which represents the speaker as perfectly innocent and righteous; and this exactly agrees with the proof arising from the Syriac and the Arabic versions, (and also the Chaldee paraphrase,) that this word was anciently אנין אב אינקוואטיוס; consequently, this is one of the many instances where the final mem is improperly omitted by the Jewish transcribers. See my General Dissertation, page 12. Lastly, the difficulty arising from the title, which ascribes the psalm to David, and which seems to make him the speaker in it, may be removed; either by supposing that the title here, (like those now prefixed to several psalms,) is of no sufficient authority; or rather, by considering this title as only meant to describe the time when David composed this prophetic hymn; that when delivered from all his other enemies, as well as from the hand of Saul, he then consecrated his leisure, by composing this sublime prophecy concerning MESSIAH, his Son; whom he represents here as speaking, (just as in Psa. xxii. xl. and other places,) and as describing—1. His triumph over death and hell—2. The manifestation of Omnipotence in his favour; earth and heaven trembling at God's awful presence—3. The speaker's innocence thus divinely attested—4. The vengeance he was to take on his own people, the Jews, in the destruction of Jerusalem—and, 5. The adoption of the heathen, over whom he was to be the head and ruler.

“Another instance of a title, denoting only the time of a prophecy, occurs in the very next chapter; where a prophecy concerning the Messiah is entitled, The last words of David: i. e. a hymn which he composed a little before his death, after all his other prophecies. And, perhaps, this ode in chap. xxii. which immediately precedes that in chap. xxiii. was composed but a little while before: namely, when all his wars were over. Let it be added, that Josephus, immediately before he speaks of David's mighty men, (which follow in this same chapter of Samuel,) considers the two hymns in chap. xxii. and xxiii. as both written after his wars were over—Jam Davides, bellis et periculis perfunctus, pacemque deinceps profundam agitant, odas in Deum hymnosque composuit, Tom. i. p. 401.”

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIII.

Verse 1. These be the last words of David. I suppose the last poetical composition is here intended. He might have spoken many words after these in prose, but none in verse. Other meanings are given; this I prefer.

The words of this song contain a glorious prediction of the Messiah's kingdom and conquests, in highly poetic language.

The sweet psalmist of Israel This character not only belonged to him as the finest poet in Israel, but as the finest and most divine poet of the whole Christian world. The sweet psalmist of Israel has been the sweet psalmist of every part of the habitable world, where religion and piety have been held in reverence.

⁴ Or, Josheb-bashebet the Tachmonite, head of the three.

Verse 4. He shall be as the light of the morning] This verse is very obscure, for it does not appear from it who the person is of whom the prophet speaks. As the Messiah seems to be the whole subject of these last words of David, he is probably the person here intended. One of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. supplies the word יהוה Yehovah; and he, therefore, translates, As the light of the morning ariseth Yehovah; see below. He shall be the Sun of Righteousness; bring salvation in his rays; and, shining, illuminating the children of men, with increasing splendour, as long as the sun and moon endure.

As the tender grass] The effects of this shining, and of the rays of his grace, shall be like the shining of the sun upon the young grass or corn, after a plentiful shower of rain.

Verse 5. Although my house be not so with God] Instead of כן ken, so, read כן kun, ESTABLISHED; and let the whole verse be considered as an interrogation, including a positive assertion; and the sense will be at once clear and consistent. "For, is not my house, (family,) established with God; because he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all, and preserved? For this, (he,) is all my salvation, and all my desire, although he make it, (or him,) not to spring up." All is sure relative to my spiritual successor: though he do not as yet appear, the covenant is firm; and it will spring forth in due time. See Kennicott's observations at the end of the chapter.

Verse 6. But the sons of Belial shall be all of them as thorns] There is no word in the text for sons, it is simply Belial, the good-for-nothing man; and may here refer—first, to Saul, and, secondly, to the enemies of our Lord.

As thorns thrust away] A metaphor from hedging; the workman thrusts the thorns aside either with his bill or hand, protected by his impenetrable mitten, or glove, till, getting a fair blow at the roots, he cuts them all down.

monite that sat in the seat; chief among the captains; the same was Adino the Eznite: ¹ he lifted up his spear against eight hundred, ² whom he slew at one time.

9 And after him was ³ Eleazar the son of Dodo the Ahohite, one of the three mighty men with David, when they defied the Philistines that were there gathered together to battle, and the men of Israel were gone away:

10 He arose, and smote the Philistines until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto the sword: and the LORD wrought a great victory that day; and the people returned after him only to spoil.

11 And after him was ⁴ Shammah the son of Agee the Hararite. ⁵ And the Philistines were gathered together ⁶ into ¹ See 1 Chron. 11. 11. & 27. 2.—² Heb. slain.—³ 1 Chron. 11. 12 & 27. 4.—⁴ 1 Chron. 11. 27.—⁵ See 1 Chron. 11. 13, 14.—⁶ Or, for foraging.

The man is fenced with iron, and the handle of his bill is like the staff of a spear. This is a perfectly natural and intelligible image.

Verse 8. These be the names of the mighty men] This chapter should be collated with the parallel place, 1 Chron. xi. and see Kennicott's first Dissertation on the printed Hebrew text, page 64—471.

The Tachmonite that sat in the seat] Literally, and properly, Jashobeam the Hachmonite. See 1 Chron. xi. 10.

The same was Adino the Eznite] This is a corruption for he lifted up his spear. See 1 Chron. xi. 10.

Eight hundred, whom he slew at one time.] THREE hundred is the reading in Chronicles, and seems to be the true one. The word חלל chahal, which we translate slain, should probably be translated soldiers, as in the Septuagint στρατιώτας he withstood three hundred soldiers at one time. See the note on David's lamentation over Saul and Jonathan, 2 Sam. i. and Kennicott's first Dissertation, p. 101. Dr. Kennicott observes, "This one verse contains three great corruptions in the Hebrew text—1. The proper name of the hero Jashobeam is turned into two common words, rendered, that sat in the seat. 2. The words he lifted up his spear, הוא ערר את חניתו hu orer et chanito, are turned into two proper names wholly inadmissible here:—הוא עררין האדנו hu Adino Haetsni, he was Adino the Eznite: it being nearly as absurd to say that Jashobeam the Hachmonite was the same with Adino the Eznite, as that David the Beth-lehemite was the same with Elijah the Tishbite. 3. The number eight hundred was probably at first three hundred; as in 1 Chron. xi. 11. See Kennicott, ubi supr.

Verse 9. When they defied the Philistines that were there gathered] This is supposed to refer to the war in which David slew Goliath.

Verse 11. A piece of ground full of lentiles; In 1 Chron. xi. 13. it is a parcel of ground full a troop, where was a piece of ground full of lentiles: and the people fled from the Philistines.

12 But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it, and slew the Philistines; and the LORD wrought a great victory.

13 And ^athree ^tof the thirty chief went down, and came to David in the harvest-time unto ^uthe cave of Adul-lam: and the troop of the Philistines pitched in ^vthe valley of Rephaim.

14 And David was then in ^wa hold, and the garrison of the Philistines was then in Beth-lehem.

15 And David longed, and said, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, which is by the gate!

16 And the three mighty men brake through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: nevertheless he would not drink thereof, but poured it out unto the LORD.

of barley. There is probably a mistake of אֲדָשִׁים adashim, lentiles, for שְׁעִירִים sheorim, barley; or vice versa. Some think there were both lentiles and barley in the field, and that a marauding party of the Philistines came to destroy, or carry them off; and these worthies defeated the whole, and saved the produce of the field. This is not unlikely.

Verse 13. The three of the thirty] The word שְׁלָשִׁים shalashim, which we translate thirty, probably signifies an office, or particular description of men. Of these shalashim we have here thirty-seven; and it can scarcely be said, with propriety, that we have thirty-seven out of thirty: and besides, in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xi. there are sixteen added! The captains over Pharaoh's chariots are termed שְׁלָשִׁים shalashim, Exod. xiv. 7.

The Philistines pitched in the valley of Rephaim.] This is the same war which is spoken of chap. v. 17, &c.

Verse 15. The water of the well of Beth-lehem.] This was David's city, and he knew the excellence of the water which was there; and being near the place, and parched with thirst, it was natural for him to wish for a draught of water out of that well. These three heroes having heard it, though they received no command from David, brake through a company of the Philistines, and brought away some of the water. When brought to David, he refused to drink it; for, as the men had got it at the hazard of their lives, he considered it as their blood, and gave thereby a noble instance of self-denial. There is no evidence that David went in jeopardy of their lives? therefore he would not drink it. These things did these three mighty men.

18 And ^vAbishai, the brother of Joab, the son of Zeruiah, was chief among three. And he lifted up his spear against three hundred, ^zand slew them, and had the name among three.

had requested them to bring it; they had gone for it of their own accord, and without the knowledge of David.

Verse 16. Poured it out unto the LORD.] To make libations, both of water and wine, was a frequent custom among the heathens. We have an almost similar account in Arrian's Life of Alexander:—"When his army was greatly oppressed with heat and thirst, a soldier brought him a cup of water: he ordered it to be carried back, saying, I cannot bear to drink alone, while so many are in want; and this cup is too small to be divided among the whole."

Tunc poculo pleno sicut oblatum est reddito: Non solus, inquit, bibere sustineo, nec tam exiguum dividere omnibus possum. ARRIAN, lib. vi.

The example was noble in both cases; but David added piety to bravery. He poured it out unto the LORD.

Verse 20. Two lion-like men of Moab] Some think that two real lions are meant; some, that they were two savage gigantic men; others, that two fortresses are meant. The words שְׁנֵי מְנַחֵם מְרָאֵל sheney ariel Moab, may signify, as the Targum has rendered it, שְׁנֵי מְנַחֵם מְרָאֵל ynetin rabreby Moab, "The two princes of Moab."

Verse 21. He slew an Egyptian] This man, in 1 Chron. xi. 23. is stated to have been five cubits high; about seven feet six inches.

He went down to him with a staff] I have known men who, with a staff only for their defence, could render the sword of the best practised soldier of no use to him. I have seen even a parallel instance of a man with his staff being attacked by a soldier with his hanger; he soon beat the weapon out of the soldier's hand, and could easily have slain him with his own sword.

We have a good elucidation of this in the duel between Dioxippus the Athenian, and Horratas a Macedonian, before Alexander.—“The Macedonian, proud of his military skill, treated the naked Athenian with contempt, and then challenged him to fight with him the ensuing day. The Macedonian came, armed cap-à-pie, to the place: on his left arm he had a brazen shield, and in the same hand the spear called sarissa; he had a javelin in his right hand, and a sword girded on his side: in short, he appeared armed as though he were going to contend with a host. Dioxippus came into the field with a chaplet on his head, a purple sash on his left arm, his body naked, smeared over with oil; and in his right hand a strong knotty club, (dextrâ validum nodosumque stipitem præferebat.) Horratas, supposing that he could easily kill his antagonist while at a distance, threw his javelin; which Dioxippus, suddenly stooping, dexterously avoided; and, before Horratas could transfer the spear from his left to his right hand, sprang forward, and with one blow of his club broke it in two. The Macedonian, being deprived of both his spears, began to draw his sword; but, before he could draw it, Dioxippus seized him, tripped up his heels, and threw him with great violence on the ground, (pedibus repente subductis arietavit in terram.) He then put his foot on his neck, drew out his sword, and, lifting up his club, was about to dash out the brains of the overthrown champion, had he not been prevented by the king.” Q. Curt. lib. ix. cap. 7.

How similar are the two cases: He went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hands, and slew him with his own spear. Benaiah appears to have been just such another clubsmán as Dioxippus.

Verse 23. David set him over his guard. The Vulgate renders this fecitque eum sibi David auricularium à secreto; David made him his privy counsellor: or, according to the Hebrew, he put him to his ears; i. e. confided his secrets to him. Some think he made him a spy over the rest. It is supposed that the meaning of the fable which attributes to Midas very long ears, is, that this king carried the system of espionage to a great length; that he had a multitude of spies in different places.

Verse 24. Asahel—was one of the thirty] Asahel was one of those officers, or troops, called the shalashim. This Asahel, brother of Joab, was the same that was killed by Abner, chap. xi. 23.

Verse 25. Shammah the Harodite] There are several varieties in the names of the following shalashim; which may be seen by comparing these verses with 1 Chron. xi. 27.

Verse 39. Uriah the Hittite: thirty and seven in all.] To these the author of 1 Chron. xi. 41. adds Zabad son of Ahlai.

Verse 42. Adina the son of Shiza the Reubenite, a captain of the Reubenites, and thirty with him.

Verse 43. Hanan the son of Maachah, and Joshaphat the Mithnite, Verse 44. Uzziah the Ashterathite, Shama and Jehiel the sons of Hothan the Aroerite, Verse 45. Jediael the son of Shimri, and Joha, his brother, the Tizite, Verse 46. Eliel the Mahavite, and Jeribai, and Joshaviah, the sons of Elnaam, and Ithmah the Moabite, Verse 47. Eliel, and Obed, and Jasiel the Mesobahite.

The 4th and 5th verses are very obscure; L. De Dieu gives them a good meaning, if not the true one:

“The perpetuity of his kingdom David amplifies by a comparison to three natural things, which are very grateful to men, but not constant and stable. For the sun rises, and goes down again; the morning may be clear, but clouds afterward arise; and the tender grass springs up, but afterward withers. Not so, said he, is my kingdom before God; it is flourishing like all these, but perpetual, for he has made an everlasting covenant with me, though some afflictions have befallen me; and he has not made all my salvation and desire to grow.”

De Dieu repeats (5 ke.) the note of similitude thrice; and the following is his version:

“The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake unto me, (or concerning me:) the just man ruleth among men; he ruleth in the fear of God. And, as the sun ariseth with a shining light; as the morning is without clouds, by reason of its splendour; as, from rain, the tender grass springeth out of the earth; truly so is not my house with God: because he hath made an everlasting covenant with me; disposed in all things, and well kept and preserved in that order. Although he doth not make all my deliverance and desire to grow—i. e. though some adversities happen to me and my family; yet, that always remains, which, in the covenant of God made with me, is in all things orderly, disposed, and preserved.”

See Bishop Patrick on the place.

ONCE more I must beg the reader to refer to the first dissertation of Dr. Kennicott, on the present state of the printed Hebrew text; in which there is not only great light cast on this subject, several corruptions in the Hebrew text being demonstrated, but also many valuable criticisms on different texts in the Sacred Writings. There are two Dissertations, 2 vols. 8vo.; and both very valuable.

CHAPTER XXIV.

David is tempted by Satan to number Israel and Judah, 1. Joab remonstrates against it, but the king determines that it shall be done; and Joab and the captains accomplish the work, and bring the sum total to the king; viz. eight hundred thousand warriors in Israel, and five hundred thousand in Judah, 2—9. David is convinced that he has done wrong; and the prophet Gad is sent to him, to give him his choice of three judgments; one of which God is determined to inflict upon the nation, 10—13. David humbles himself before God; and a pestilence is sent, which destroys seventy thousand men, 14, 15. The angel of the Lord, being about to destroy Jerusalem, David makes intercession, and the plague is stayed, 16, 17. Gad directs him to build an altar to the Lord, on the thrashing-floor of Araunah, where the plague was stayed, 18. He purchases this place for the purpose; and offers burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, 19—25.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIV.

Verse 1. He moved David against them] God could not be angry with David for numbering the people, if he moved him to do it: but, in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xxi. 1. it is expressly said, Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel. David, in all probability, slackening in his piety and confidence toward God, and meditating some extension of his dominions, without the divine counsel or command, was naturally curious to know whether the number of fighting men in his empire were sufficient for the work which he had projected. See more on ver. 10. He therefore orders Joab, and the captains, to take an exact account of all the effective men in Israel and Judah. God is justly displeased with this conduct, and determines that the props of his vain ambition shall be taken away; either by famine, war, or pestilence.

Verse 3. Joab said unto the king] This very bad man saw that the measure now recommended by the king was a wrong one, and might be ruinous to the people; and, therefore, he remonstrates against it in a very sensible speech: but the king was infatuated, and would hear no reason.

Verse 5. And pitched in Ar^oer] This was beyond Jordan, on the river Arnon, in the tribe of Gad: hence it appears, says Calmet, that they began their census with the most eastern parts of the country beyond Jordan.

Verse 6. Tahtim-hodshi] Where this place was, is not exactly known: some think that the words refer to a newly conquered country, as our margin, the netherland newly inhabited; and, if so, this was probably the country eastward of Gilead, which the Israelites, in the time of Saul, had conquered from the Hagarenes, and dwelt in it themselves. To Dan-jaan] Or, to Dan of the woods. This is the place so frequently mentioned, situated at the foot of mount Libanus, near to the source of the Jordan, the most northern city of all the possessions of the Israelites, in what was called the promised land; as Beer-sheba was the most southern; hence the common form of speech, From Dan to Beer-sheba, i. e. from north to south.

Verse 7. The strong-hold of Tyre] This must have been the old city of Tyre, which was built on the main land: the new city was built on a rock in the sea.

Verse 8. Nine months and twenty days.] This was a considerable time: but they had much work to do; nor did they complete the work, as appears from 1 Chron. xxi. 6. xxvii. 24. William the Conqueror made a survey of all England, particularizing "how many hides or carucates the land is taxed at; whose it was in the time of his predecessor Edward; who the present owner and sub-tenants; what, and how much arable land, meadow, pasture, and wood, there is; how much in demesne; i. e. held and cultivated by the land-owners; how much in tenancy, and what number of ploughs it will keep; what mills and fisheries; how many sockmen, freemen, co-liberti, cotarii, bordarii, radmanni, radchenisters, villains, maid-servants, and bondmen, there are; how many hogs the woods would support; how many churches, priests, or parsons; what customary rents, prestations, and services, are to be paid and rendered out of the lands; what has been added to the manor; what has been withheld from it, and by whom; what land is waste, and what the whole was let for in the time of King Edward; and what the net rent, and whether it was too dear rented, and whether it might be improved." This survey was begun in the year 1080, and was finished in the year 1086; six years having been employed in the work. This most important document is still preserved: it is in the Chapter House, Westminster; in two volumes; one folio, on three hundred and eighty-two leaves of vellum; the other in quarto, on four hundred and fifty leaves; and is in as good after that he had numbered the people. And David said unto the LORD, ^p I have sinned greatly in that I have done: and now I beseech thee, O LORD, take away the iniquity of thy servant; for I have ^r done very foolishly.

preservation as it was seven hundred years ago! This work was much more difficult than that which was performed by Joab and his fellows.

Verse 9. In Israel eight hundred thousand—in Judah five hundred thousand] In the parallel place, 1 Chron. xxi. 5. the sums are widely different: in Israel one million one hundred thousand; in Judah four hundred and seventy thousand. Neither of these sums is too great; but they cannot be both correct; and which is the true number is difficult to say. The former seems the most likely; but more corruptions have taken place in the numbers of the historical books of the Old Testament, than in any other part of the Sacred Records. To attempt to reconcile them is lost labour: better at once acknowledge, what cannot be successfully denied, that, although the original writers of the Old Testament wrote under the influence of the Divine Spirit, yet we are not told that the same influence descended on all copiers of their words, so as absolutely to prevent them from making mistakes. They might mistake: and they did mistake.

Verse 10. David said—I have sinned greatly] We know not exactly in what this sin consisted. I have already hinted, ver. 1. that probably David now began to covet an extension of empire, and purposed to unite some of the neighbouring states with his own; and having, through the suggestions of Satan, or some other adversary, for so the word implies, given way to this covetous disposition, he could not well look to God for help; and, therefore, wished to know whether the thousands of Israel and Judah might be deemed equal to the conquests which he meditated. When God is offended, and refuses assistance, vain is the help of man.

Verse 11. For when David was up] It is supposed that David's contrition arose from the reproof given by Gad; and that, in the order of time, the reproof came before the confession, stated in the 10th verse.

Verse 13. Shall seven years of famine] In 1 Chron. xxi. 12. the number is three, not seven; and here, the Septuagint has three, the same as in Chronicles: this is, no doubt, the true reading; the letter; zain, SEVEN, being mistaken for gimel, THREE. A mistake of this kind might be easily made, from the similarity of the letters.

Verse 14. I am in a great strait: let us fall now into the hand of the Lord] David acted nobly in this business: had he chosen war, his own personal safety was in no danger; because there was already an ordinance preventing him from going to battle. Had he chosen famine, his own wealth would have secured his and his own family's support: but he showed the greatness of his mind in choosing the pestilence, to the ravages of which himself and household were exposed equally with the meanest of his subjects.

Verse 15. From the morning—to the time appointed] That is, from the morning of the day after David had made his election, till the third day, according to the condition which God had proposed, and he had accepted: but it seems that the plague was terminated before the conclusion of the third day; for Jerusalem might have been destroyed, but it was not. Throughout the land, independently of the city, seventy thousand persons were slain! This was a terrible mortality in the space of less than three days.

Verse 16. The angel stretched out his hand upon Jerusalem] By what means this destruction took place we know not: it appears that an angel was employed in it; and that this minister of divine justice actually appeared as an object of sight; for it is said, ver. 17. When David saw the angel that smote the people, he said, &c.; and both Ornan and his four sons saw him and were affrighted, 1 Chron. xxi. 20.

The thrashing-place of Araunah] These, we have already seen, were made in the open air. In the parallel place, 1 Chron. xxi. 15, 20, &c. this person is called Ornan. The word that we render Araunah, is written in this very chapter אורנה Aurnah, ver. 16. ארניה Arniyah, ver. 18. ארונה Arunah or Arawnah, ver. 20. and the following; but in every place in 1 Chron. xxi. where it occurs, it is written ארנן Arnan. It is likely he had both names, Arunah and Arnan: but the varieties of spelling in 2 Sam. must arise from the blunders of transcribers.

Verse 17. But these sheep, what have they done?] It seems that, in the order of providence, there is no way of punishing kings in their regal capacity, but by afflictions on their land, in which the people must necessarily suffer. If the king, therefore, by his own personal offences, in which the people can have no part, bring down God's judgments upon his people; though they suffer innocently, grievous will be the account that their sovereigns must give to God. The people generally suffer for the mis-carriages of their governors: this has been observed in every age.

on which, according to the rabbins, Cain and Abel offered their sacrifices; where Abraham attempted to sacrifice Isaac; and where the temple of Solomon was afterward built.

Verse 22. Here be oxen for burnt-sacrifice.] He felt for the king, and showed his loyalty to him by this offer: he felt for the people, and was willing to make any sacrifice to get the plague stayed. He felt for his own personal safety; and, therefore, was willing to give up all to save his life. He felt for the honour of God; and, therefore, was glad that he had a sacrifice to offer, so that God might magnify both his justice and mercy.

Verse 23. As a king, give unto the king.] Literally, all these did king Araunah give unto the king. That there could not be a king of the Jebusites on mount Moriah, is sufficiently evident; and that there was no other king than David in the land, is equally so: the word המלך hamelec, "the king," given here to Araunah, is wanting in the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic; in three of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and in the parallel place in Chronicles; and, it is very probable, never made a part of the text. Perhaps it should be read, all these did Araunah give unto the king.

There is, however, a difficulty here. David had taken the fortress of the Jebusites many years before: yet it is evident that Araunah was proprietor of the soil at this time. It is not clear that he was a subject of David: but he paid him respect, as a neighbour and a king. This is merely possible.

Verse 24. Neither will I offer burnt-offerings.] It is a maxim from heaven, "Honour the Lord with thy substance." He who has a Nay; but I will surely buy it of thee at a price: neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the LORD my God of that which doth cost me nothing. So ^k David bought the thrashing-floor and the oxen for fifty shekels of silver.

25 And David built there an altar unto the LORD, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings. ^l So the LORD was entreated for the land, and ^m the plague was stayed from Israel.

religion that costs him nothing, has a religion that is worth nothing: nor will any man esteem the ordinances of God, if those ordinances cost him nothing. Had Araunah's noble offer been accepted, it would have been Araunah's sacrifice, not David's; nor would it have answered the end of turning away the displeasure of the Most High. It was David that sinned, not Araunah; therefore, David must offer sacrifice.

Verse 25. David—offered burnt-offerings.] And that these sacrifices were pleasing to the Lord, is evident from a circumstance marked in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xxi. 26. David called upon the Lord, and he answered him from heaven, by fire upon the altar of burnt-offering.

The plague was stayed.] Jerusalem did not share in the common calamity, seventy thousand being the whole that were slain throughout the land.

This book is unfinished, and requires 1 Chron. xxii. xxiii. xxiv. xxv. xxvi. xxvii. xxviii. and xxix. to complete it. A few things relative to this history may be found in the beginning of the following book: but the information in 1 Chron. is much more extensive and satisfactory.

PREFACE

TO THE

FIRST BOOK OF THE KINGS,

OTHERWISE CALLED

THE THIRD BOOK OF THE KINGS.

IN the most correct and ancient editions of the Hebrew Bible, the two Books of Kings make but one; with sometimes a little break, the First Book beginning with 1 Sam. xxii. 40. Some of the ancient fathers seem to have begun the First Book of Kings at the death of David, chap. ii. 12. The more modern copies of the Hebrew Bible have the same division with ours: but, in the time of the Masoretes, they certainly made but one book; as both, like the Books of Samuel, are included under one enumeration of sections, verses, &c. in the Masora.

The titles to these Books have been various; though it appears, from Origen, that they had their name from their first words, וּמִלְךְ דָּוִד Vammelech David, "and King David;" as Genesis had its name from בְּרֵשִׁית bereshith, "in the beginning." The Septuagint simply term it βασιλειων, of reigns, or kingdoms; of which it calls Samuel the first and second, and these two the third and fourth. The Vulgate has, Liber Regnum tertius; secundum Hebræos, Liber Malachim: "The Third Book of Kings: but, according to the Hebrews, the First Book of Malachim." The Syriac has, "Here follows the Book of the Kings who flourished among this ancient people; and in this are also exhibited the history of the Prophets who flourished in their times." The Arabic has the following title; "In the name of the most merciful and compassionate God; the Book of Solomon, the son of David the prophet, whose benedictions be upon us—Amen."

The author of these books is unknown: that they are a compilation out of public and private records, as the Books of Samuel are, there is little doubt; but by whom this compilation was made, nowhere appears. Some have attributed them to Isaiah and to Jeremiah, because there are several chapters in both these prophets which are similar to some found in the First and Second Books of Kings; compare 2 Kings xviii. xix. and xx. with Isa. xxxvi. xxxvii. xxxviii. and xxxix.; and 2 Kings xxiv. 18. and xxv. 1. &c. with Jer. lii. 1, &c. But rather than allow those prophets to be the authors or compilers of these books, some very learned men have judged that the chapters in question have been taken from the Books of Kings in after times, and inserted in those prophets. It is worthy of remark, that the 52d chapter, found in Jeremiah, is marked so as to intimate that it is not the composition of that prophet; for, at the end of chap. li. we find these words, Thus far are the words of Jeremiah; intimating that the following chapter is not his.

But the most common opinion is, that Ezra was the author, or rather the compiler, of the history found in these books. Allowing only the existence of ancient documents, from which it was compiled, it appears—

1. That it is the work of one person; as is sufficiently evident from the uniformity of the style, and the connexion of events.

2. That this person had ancient documents, from which he compiled, and which he often only abridged, is evident from his own words; The rest of the acts of such and such a prince, are they not written in the Chronicles of the kings of Judah, or of Israel; which occur frequently.

3. These books were written during, or after, the Babylonish captivity; as, at the end of the Second Book, that event is particularly described.

The author states also, 2 Kings xvii. 23. that Israel was, in his time, in captivity in Assyria; according to the declaration of God by his prophets.

4. That the writer was not contemporary with the facts which he relates, is evident from the reflections he makes on the facts which he found in the memoirs which he consulted. See 2 Kings xvii. from ver. 6. to ver. 24.

5. There is every reason to believe that the author was a priest, or a prophet: he studies less to describe acts of heroism, successful battles, conquests, political addresses, &c. than what regards the temple, religion, religious ceremonies, festivals, the worship of God, the piety of princes, the fidelity of the prophets, the punishment of crimes, the manifestation of God's anger against the wicked, and his kindness to the righteous. He appears every where strongly attached to the house of David: he treats of the kings of Israel only accidentally; his principal object seems to be the kingdom of Judah, and the matters which concern it.

Now, all this agrees well with the supposition that Ezra was the compiler of these books: he was not only a priest, a zealous servant of God, and a reformer of the corruptions which had crept into the divine worship; but is universally allowed by the Jews to have been the collector and compiler of the whole Sacred Code, and of the arrangement of the different books which constitute the Old Testament. If some things be found in these Books of Kings which do not agree to his time, they may easily be accounted for on his often taking the facts as he found them in the documents which he consults, without any kind of alteration; and this is so far a proof of his great sincerity, and scrupulous exactness.

The First Book of Kings contains the history of one hundred and nineteen years; from A. M. 2989, to A. M. 3108. It contains a great variety of interesting particulars, the chief of which are the following:—The death of David; the reign of Solomon; the building and dedication of the temple; the building of Solomon's palace; an account of his great wisdom; his magnificence, and his fall; the division of Israel and Judah under Rehoboam; the idolatry of the ten tribes, over whom Jeroboam became king. It states, how Judah, Benjamin, and Levi, attached themselves to the house of David; how Rehoboam was attacked by Shishac, king of Egypt, who pillaged the temple; how Baasha destroyed the house of Jeroboam, and seized on the government of Israel; how Jehu predicted the ruin of Baasha; how Ahab married the impious Jezebel, and persecuted the prophets of the Lord. It relates the acts of Elijah; the destruction of the prophets of Baal; the cruel death of Naboth; the death of Ahab; the good reign of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah; and the wicked reign of Ahaziah, king of Israel, &c. See Calmet's Preface to the First and Second Books of Kings.

CHAPTER I.

David, grown old, is, by the advice of his physicians, cherished by Abishag, the Shunammite, 1—4. Adonijah conspires with Joab and Abiathar, to seize on the government, 5—10. Nathan and Bath-sheba communicate these tidings to the aged king, 11—27. David immediately pronounces Solomon his successor; and causes Zadok and Nathan to proclaim and anoint him king, 28—40. Adonijah and his friends hear of it, are afraid, and flee away, Adonijah, laying hold on the horns of the altar, from which he refuses to go till Solomon shall promise him his life; this he does, and banishes him to his own house, 41—53.

NOW King David was old, and ^a stricken in years; and they covered him with clothes, but he gat no heat.

2 Wherefore his servants said unto him, ^b Let there be sought for my lord the king ^c a young virgin; and let her stand before the king, and let her ^d cherish him, and let her lie in thy bosom, that my lord the king may get heat.

3 So they sought for a fair damsel throughout all the coasts of Israel, and found Abishag, a ^e Shunammite, and brought her to the king.

4 And the damsel was very fair, and cherished the king, and ministered to him: but the king knew her not.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. Now King David was old] He was probably now about sixty-nine years of age. He was thirty years old when he began to reign, reigned forty, and died in the seventieth year of his age, 2 Sam. v. 4. and 1 Kings ii. 11. And the transactions mentioned here are supposed to have taken place about a year before his death.

But he gat no heat.] Sixty-nine was not an advanced age; but David had been exhausted with various fatigues, and especially by family afflictions, so that he was much older in constitution than he was in years. Besides, he seems to have laboured under some wasting maladies: to which there is frequent reference in the Psalms.

Verse 2. Let there be sought—a young virgin] This was the best remedy which, in his state, could be prescribed. His nearly exhausted frame would infallibly absorb from her young and healthy body an additional portion of animal heat; and, consequently, trim and revive the flame of animal life. This is properly, as I have

6 And his father had not displeased him ⁱ at any time in saying, Why hast thou done so? and he also was a very goodly man; ^k and his mother bare him after Absalom.

7 And ^l he conferred with Joab the son of Zeruiah, and with ^m Abiathar the priest: and ⁿ they, ^o following Adonijah, helped him.

8 But Zadok the priest, and Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, and Nathan the prophet, and ^p Shimei, and Rei, and elsewhere expressed it, Friar Bacon's secret for the Cure of Old Age.

Verse 4. The king knew her not.] The maxim of Bacon, in his enigmatical cure is, "Take all you can from the medicine, but give nothing to it: if you give any thing, it increases the disease, and hastens death." I have seen this abundantly verified; but it is a subject on which it would be improper to dilate, except in a medical work. An extract from Friar Bacon's Cure of Old Age may be found at the end of the chapter.

Verse 5. Adonijah the son of Haggith] Who this woman was we know not; Adonijah was evidently David's eldest son now living, and one of whom his father was particularly fond; see ver. 6.

Prepared him chariots and horsemen] He copied the conduct of his brother Absalom in every respect. See 2 Sam. xv. 1.

Verse 7. And he conferred with Joab] Joab well knew if he made the new king, he would necessarily be continued in the command of the army; and so govern him.

Verse 8. And Nathan] Some suppose that he was the preceptor of Solomon.

the mighty men which belonged to David, were not with Adonijah.

9 And Adonijah slew sheep, and oxen, and fat cattle, by the stone of Zohemoth, which is by En-rogel, and called all his brethren the king's sons, and all the men of Judah the king's servants:

10 But Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, and the mighty men, and Solomon his brother, he called not.

11 ¶ Wherefore Nathan spake unto Bath-sheba the mother of Solomon, saying, Hast thou not heard that Adonijah the son of Haggith doth reign, and David our lord knoweth it not?

12 Now therefore come, let me, I pray thee, give thee counsel, that thou mayest save thine own life, and the life of thy son Solomon.

13 Go and get thee in unto King David, and say unto him, Didst not thou, my lord, O king, swear unto thine handmaid, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne? why then doth Adonijah reign?

14 Behold, while thou yet talkest there with the king, I also will come in after thee, and confirm thy words.

15 ¶ And Bath-sheba went in unto the king into the chamber: and the king was very old; and Abishag the Shunammite ministered unto the king.

Verse 9. Slew sheep and oxen] Making a royal feast, in reference to his inauguration. As he had Abiathar the priest with him, no doubt these animals were offered sacrificially; and then the guests fed on the flesh of the victims.
He not only had a splendid feast, but a great sacrifice; and he gave by this a popular colour to his pretensions, by affecting to receive authority from God.

Verse 11. Hast thou not heard that Adonijah the son of Haggith doth reign] He was now considered as being legally appointed to the regal office; and, no doubt, was about to begin to perform its functions.

Verse 12. Save thine own life, and the life of thy son] Nathan took for granted that Adonijah would put both Bath-sheba and Solomon to death as state criminals, if he got established on the throne. O cursed lust of rule! a father will destroy his son, a son depose his father, and a brother murder a brother, in order to obtain a crown! At this time the monarchy of Israel was unsettled; no man knew who was to succeed to the crown; and the minds of the people

16 And Bath-sheba bowed, and did obeisance unto the king. And the king said,
What wouldest thou?

17 And she said unto him, My lord, thou swearest by the LORD thy God unto thine handmaid, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne.

18 And now, behold, Adonijah reigneth; and now, my lord the king, thou knowest it not:

19 And he hath slain oxen, and fat cattle, and sheep in abundance, and hath called all the sons of the king, and Abiathar the priest, and Joab the captain of the host: but Solomon thy servant hath he not called.

20 And thou, my lord, O king, the eyes of all Israel are upon thee, that thou shouldest tell them who shall sit on the throne of my lord the king after him.

21 Otherwise it shall come to pass, when my lord the king shall sleep with his fathers, that I and my son Solomon shall be counted offenders.

22 ¶ And lo, while she yet talked with the king, Nathan the prophet also came in.

23 And they told the king, saying, Behold Nathan the prophet. And when he was come in before the king, he bowed himself before the king with his face to the ground.

24 And Nathan said, My lord, O were as unsettled as the succession. I have examined both systems; and find that, with all its alleged disadvantages, hereditary monarchy has a high balance of evidence in its favour, beyond that which is elective; and is every way more safe for the state, and more secure for the subject.

Verse 13. Go and get thee in unto King David]
He knew that this woman had a sovereign influence over the king. If Bath-sheba was a source of pleasure to David, must she not also have been a source of pain to him? For, could he ever forget the guilty manner in which he acquired her?

Didst not thou—swear] It is very likely that David made such an oath; and that it was known only to Bath-sheba and Nathan. It is nowhere else mentioned.

Verse 20. That thou shouldest tell—who shall sit on the throne] This was a monarchy neither hereditary nor elective; the king simply named his successor. This obtained less or more, anciently, in most countries.

Verse 21. Shall be counted offenders.] When king, hast thou said, Adonijah shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne?

25 ^b For he is gone down this day, and hath slain oxen, and fat cattle, and sheep in abundance, and hath called all the king's sons, and the captains of the host; and Abiathar the priest; and, behold, they eat and drink before him, and say, ^c God ^d save King Adonijah.

26 But me, even me thy servant, and Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and thy servant Solomon, hath he not called.

27 Is this thing done by my lord the king, and thou hast not showed it unto thy servant, who should sit on the throne of my lord the king after him?

28 ¶ Then King David answered and said, Call me Bath-sheba. And she came ^e into the king's presence, and stood before the king.

Verse 28. Call me Bath-sheba.] She had gone out when Nathan came in; and he retired when she was readmitted. Each had a separate audience; but to Nathan, the king did not express any will.

Verse 33. Take with you the servants of your lord] By these we may understand the king's guards, the guards of the city, the Cherethites and Pelethites, who were under the command of Benaiah; and, in short, all the disposable force that was at hand.

Solomon—to ride upon mine own mule] No subject could use any thing that belonged to the prince, without forfeiting his life. As David ordered Solomon to ride on his own mule, this was full evidence that he had appointed him his successor.

Verse 34. Blow ye with the trumpet] After he has been anointed, make proclamation that he is king.

Verse 35. Sit upon my throne] The manner of conducting a business of this kind seems to have been this.—1. The king elect was placed on the mule of his predecessor, and caused to ride abroad to one of the public wells, or to a 31 Then Bath-sheba bowed with her face to the earth, and did reverence to the king, and said, ^h Let my lord King David live for ever.

32 ¶ And King David said, Call me Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada. And they came before the king.

33 The king also said unto them, ⁱ Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon my son to ride upon ^k mine own mule, and bring him down to ^l Gihon:

35 Then ye shall come up after him, that he may come and sit upon my throne; for he shall be king in my stead: and I have appointed him to be ruler over Israel and over Judah.

36 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada answered the king, and said, Amen: the LORD God of my lord the king say so too.

river where there was the greatest concourse of people, that they might see who he was that was appointed. Solomon was here taken to the river Gihon, in order to be anointed: the continual stream, or constantly running fountain, denoting the perpetuity of the kingdom.—2. The priest and the prophet anointed him in the name of the Lord; and thereby signified that he should be endued with all the kingly virtues; that he should reign by, under, and for the Lord.—3. The trumpet was then to be blown, and solemn proclamation made, that he was anointed king.—4. He was then brought and solemnly placed on the throne, to signify that he had now assumed the reins of government, and was about to administer justice and judgment to the people.

Verse 37. Make his throne greater than the throne of—David.] A wish of this kind a king will suffer in behalf of his son; but it is never, in ordinary cases, considered a compliment to say, “I hope this child will make a better man than his father;” because it seems to insinuate some reflection on the father's conduct or character.

38 So Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, went down, and caused Solomon to ride upon King David's mule, and brought him to Gihon.

he describes a father, worn out with toils and difficulties, committing the reins of government to the hands of his son:

*Adspice completur votum: jam natus adequat
Te meritis; et, quod magis est optabile, vincit.*

“Behold, thy desire is accomplished. Even now, thy son equals thee in worth; and, what is still more desirable, surpasses thee.”

Verse 39. Zadok—took a horn of oil] Pottery and glass were little in use in those times; and horns were frequently used to hold oil and wine. The oil used here was the holy anointing oil, which was laid up in the tabernacle; and which was used for the anointing both of priests and kings.

Verse 40. The people piped with pipes] They danced, sang, and played on what instrument of music they possessed.

The earth rent] We use a similar expression in precisely the same sense—They rent the air with their cries.

Verse 43. Jonathan answered] He was properly a messenger about the court; we have met with him and his brother Ahimaaz before, 2 Sam. xv. 36. He had now been an observer, if not a spy, on all that was doing; and relates the transactions to Adonijah, in the very order in which they took place.

Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and they have caused him to ride upon the king's mule:

45 And Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, have anointed him king in Gihon; and they are come up from thence rejoicing, so that the city rang again. This is the noise that ye have heard.

46 And also Solomon * sitteth on the throne of the kingdom.

47 And moreover, the king's servants came to bless our lord King David, saying, God make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne: and the king bowed himself upon the bed.

48 And also thus said the king, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, which hath given one to sit on my throne this day, mine eyes even seeing it.

49 And all the guests that were with Adonijah were afraid, and rose up, and went every man his way.

3. They have taken him to Gihon, and anointed him there.

4. They have brought him up to Jerusalem, and placed him on the throne of the kingdom.

Verse 47. Moreover the king's servants came] The king himself was, at this time, confined to his own house, and probably to his bed; and could not possibly see these ceremonies; therefore his confidential servants came and told him. We know not how Jonathan, in so short a time, possessed himself of so much information.

Verse 50. Adonijah feared] He knew he had usurped the kingdom, and had not his father's consent; and, as he finds now that Solomon is appointed by David, he knows well that the people will immediately respect that appointment; and that his case is hopeless: he therefore took sanctuary; and, fleeing to the tabernacle, laid hold on one of the horns of the altar, as if appealing to the protection of God against the violence of men. The altar was a privileged place; and it was deemed sacrilege to molest a man who had taken refuge there. See ch. ii. ver. 28.

Behold, Adonijah feareth King Solomon; for, lo, he hath caught hold on the horns of the altar, saying,

Verse 52. If he will show himself a worthy man] If, from henceforth, he behave well, show himself to be contented, and not endeavour to make partisans, or stir up insurrections among the people, he shall be safe: but if wickedness be found in him—if he act at all contrary to this, he shall die; his blood shall be upon him.

Verse 53. Go to thine house.] Intimating that he should have no place about the king's person, nor under the government. Adonijah must have seen that he stood continually on his good behaviour.

Friar Bacon's method of restoring and strengthening the natural heat.

"I have read many volumes of the wise: I find few things in physic, which restore the natural heat, weakened by dissolution of the innate moisture, or increase of a foreign one.

"But certain wise men have tacitly made mention of some medicine, which is likened to that which goes out of the mine of the noble animal. They affirm, that in it there is a force and virtue, which restores and increases the natural heat. As to its disposition, they say it is like youth itself, and contains an equal and temperate complexion.

"And the signs of a temperate complexion in men are, when their colour is made up of white and red; when the hair is yellow, inclining to redness, and curling.

"This medicine, indeed, is like to such a complexion; for it is of a temperate heat, its flame is temperate and sweet, and grateful to the smell. When it departs from this temperature, it departs so far from its virtue and goodness.

"This medicine therefore temperately heats, because it is temperately hot: it therefore heals, because it is whole. When it is sick, it makes a man sick; when it is distempered, it breeds distempers; and changes the body to its own disposition, because of the similitude it has with the body.

"For the infirmity of a brute animal rarely passes into a man, but into another animal of the same kind; but the infirmity of man passes into man; and so does health, because of likeness.

"This thing is seldom found; and although sometimes it be found, yet it cannot commodiously be had of all men.

"Now, when this thing is like to youth, that a hair of him fall to the earth: but if wickedness should be found in him, he shall die.

53. So King Solomon sent, and they brought him down from the altar. And he came and bowed himself to King Solomon: and Solomon said unto him, Go to thine house.

is, of temperate complexion, it has good operations; if its temperature be better, it produces better effects: sometimes it is even in the highest degree of its perfection, and then it operates best; and then there is that property whereof we have spoken before.

"This differs from other medicines and nutriments, which heat and moisten after a certain temperate manner, and are good for old men. For other medicines principally heat and moisten the body; and, secondarily, they strengthen the native heat, and after that refresh the body, by moistening and heating it. For it brings back this heat in old men, who have it but weakly and deficient, to a certain stronger and more vehement power.

"If a plaster be made hereof, and applied to the stomach, it will help very much; for it will refresh the stomach itself, and excite an appetite; it will very much recreate an old man, and change him to a kind of youth; and will make complexions, by what means soever depraved or corrupted, better. But, it is to be observed, that Venus doth weaken and diminish the power and virtue of this thing!

"And it is very likely that the son of the prince, in his second canon of the operations of simple medicines, spoke of this thing, where he saith, that there is a certain medicine, concealed by wise men, lest the incontinent should offend their Creator. There is such a heat in this thing, as is in young men of a sound complexion; and, if I durst declare the properties of this heat, this most hidden secret should presently be revealed. For this heat doth help the palsical; it restores and preserves the wasted strength of the native heat; and causeth it to flourish in all the members, and gently revives the aged.

"But the simple medicine which restores the native heat, when wasted and weakened, is that which is likened to the complexion of a healthy young man."

All this covered and enigmatical description is intended simply to point out that very medicine recommended by the Jewish physicians, to restore and invigorate the dying king.

I could show the bearing of every sentence, but I must leave something to the good sense of my readers. By attending to the words in italics, the sense will be the more easily discovered. See my note on Ruth iv. 16.

CHAPTER II.

David leaves his dying charge with Solomon, relative to his own personal conduct, 1—4. To Joab, 5, 6. To Barzillai, 7. To Shimei, 8, 9. He dies, and Solomon is established in the kingdom, 10—12. Adonijah requests to have Abishag to wife, and is put to death by Solomon, 13—25. Abiathar the priest is banished to his estate at Anathoth, 26, 27. Joab, fearing for his life, flees to the horns of the altar, and is slain there by Benaiah, 28—34. Benaiah is made captain of the host in his stead, 35. Shimei is ordered to confine himself to Jerusalem, and never leave it on pain of death, 36—38. After three years, he follows some of his runaway servants to Gath, and thereby forfeits his life, 39, 40. Solomon sends for, upbraids him, and commands him to be slain by Benaiah, 41—46.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 2. I go the way of all the earth] I am dying: All the inhabitants of the earth must come to the dust. In life, some follow one occupation, some another; but all must, sooner or later, come to the grave. Death is no respecter of persons; he visits the palace of the king as well as the cottage of the peasant.

Pallida mors æquo pulsat pede pauperum tabernas, Regumque turres. Hor. Odar. l. i. od. iv. ver. 13.
With equal pace, impartial fate
Knocks at the palace, as the cottage gate. Francis.

Sed omnes una manet nox
Et calcanda semel via leti. Ib. Od. xviii. ver. 15.
One dreary night for all mankind remains,
And once we all must tread the shadowy plains. Ibid.

There is no respect to age or youth, more than to station or external circumstance:

Mista senum ac juvenum densantur funera nullum Sæva caput Proserpina fugit. Ib. Od. xxviii. ver. 19.
Thus age and youth promiscuous crowd the tomb;
No mortal head can shun th' impending doom. Ibid.

And it is not merely man that is subjected to this necessity; all that have in them the breath of life must lose it; it is the way of all the earth, both men and inferior animals.

Terrestria quando
Mortales animas vivunt sortita, neque ulla est,
Aut magno, aut parvo leti fuga.
Vixit memor quàm sis avi brevis.

Hor. Sat. l. ii. s. 6. 93.

"All that tread the earth are subject to mortality; neither great nor small can avoid death. Live, therefore, conscious that your time is short."

It is painful to the pride of the great and mighty, that, however decorated their tombs may be, they must undergo the same dissolution and corruption with the vulgar dead: for the grave is the house appointed for the living: man is born to die.

Omnium idem exitus est, sed et idem domicilium.

"For all have the same end, and are huddled together in the same narrow house."

Here emperors, kings, statesmen, warriors, heroes, and butchers, of all kinds, with peasants and beggars, meet; however various their routes, they terminate in the same point. This, and all other kindred sentiments on the subject, are well expressed in that excellent little poem of 4 That the LORD may continue his word, which he spake concerning me, saying, 5 If thy children take heed to their way, to walk before me in truth, with all their heart, and with all their soul, there shall not fail thee (said he) a man on the throne of Israel.

5 Moreover, thou knowest also what Joab the son of Zeruiah did to me, and what he did to the two captains of the hosts of Israel, unto Abner the son of Ner, and unto Amasa the son of Jether, whom he slew, and shed the blood of war in peace, and put the

Mr. Blair, entitled THE GRAVE, which opens with the following lines:

While some affect the sun, and some the shade;
Some fleo the city, some the hermitage;
Their aims as various as the roads they take

These travellers meet.

Show thyself a man] Act like a rational being, and not like a brute; and remember, that he acts most like a man, who is most devoted to his God.

Verse 2. Keep the charge of the Lord] Keep what God has given thee to keep.

1. Walk in his ways: not in thine own, nor in the ways of a wicked, perishing world.

2. Keep his statutes. Consider all his appointments to be holy, just, and good; receive them as such; and conscientiously observe them.

3. Keep his commandments. Whatever he has bidden thee to do, perform: what he has forbidden thee to do, omit.

4. Keep his judgments] What he has determined to be right, is essentially and inherently right: what he has determined to be wrong or evil, is inherently and essentially so. A thing is not good, because God has commanded it: a thing is not evil because he has forbidden it. He has commanded the good, because it is in its own nature good and useful: he has forbidden the evil, because it is in its own nature bad and hurtful. Keep, therefore, his judgments.

5. Keep his testimonies] Bear witness to all, to which he has borne witness. His testimonies are true; there is no deceit or falsity in them. His testimonies refer also to future good things, and good times: they are the signifiers of coming blessedness. As such, respect them.

That thou mayest prosper] If thou hast God's approbation, thou wilt have God's blessing. If thy ways please him, he will not withhold from thee any manner of thing that is good.

Verse 4. That the Lord may continue his word] The prosperity which God has promised to grant to my family will depend on their faithfulness to the good they receive: if they live to God, they shall sit for ever on the throne of Israel. But, alas! they did not: and God's justice cut off the entail made by his mercy.

me] He did every thing bad and dishonourable in itself, in the murder of Abner and Amasa: and, indeed, in the death of the profligate Absalom.

Shed the blood of war—upon his girdle—and in his shoes] He stabbed them while he pretended to embrace them: so that their blood gushed out on his girdle, and fell into his shoes! This was a most abominable aggravation of his crimes.

Verse 6. Let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace.] It would have been an insult to justice, not to have taken the life of Joab. David was culpable in delaying it so long: but probably the circumstances of his government would not admit of his doing it sooner. According to the law of God, Joab, having murdered Abner and Amasa, should die. And had not David commanded Solomon to perform this act of justice, he could not have died in the approbation of his Maker.

Verse 7. But show kindness unto the sons of Barzillai] See the notes on 2 Sam. xix. 31, &c.

Verse 8. Thou hast with thee Shimei] See on 2 Sam. xvi. 5, &c. and the notes on ibid. xix. 18—23.

Verse 9. Hold him not guiltless] Do not consider him as an innocent man, though I have sworn to him that I would not put him to death by the sword; yet as thou art a wise man, and knowest how to treat such persons, treat him as he deserves; only as I have sworn to him, and he is an aged man, let him not die a violent death; bring not down his hoary head to the grave with blood. So Solomon understood David, and so I think David should be understood; for the negative particle al lo, in the former clause, hold him not guiltless, should be repeated in this latter clause, though not expressed; his hoary head bring thou not down; instances of which frequently occur in the Hebrew Bible. See Dr. Kennicott's note at the end of this chapter.

9 Now therefore ^y hold him not guiltless: for thou art a wise man, and knowest what thou oughtest to do unto him; but his hoar head ^z bring thou down to the grave with blood.

Verse 10. David slept with his fathers] His life was a life of remarkable providences, of much piety, and of great public usefulness. In general he lived well, and it is most evident that he died well; and, as a king, a general, a poet, a father, and a friend, he has had few equals, and no superior, from his own time to the present day. But I shall reserve a more particular consideration of his character till I come to the Book of Psalms, in which that character, with all its lights and shades, is exhibited by his own masterly hand. And it is from this composition alone that we can know David, and the maxims by which he was governed in public and private life.

Was buried in the city of David] And Josephus says, that Solomon deposited immense treasures with him in the grave, where they continued unmolested for thirteen hundred years; till Hyrcanus, the high priest, being besieged by Antiochus, he opened the sepulchre, and took thence three thousand talents, part of which he gave to Antiochus, to raise the siege. It is added that, many years afterward, Herod the Great ransacked this tomb, and got considerable riches. Little credit is due to this account; though we know that it was customary in ancient times, to deposite with the more illustrious dead, gold, silver, and precious stones. That the tomb of David existed in the days of the apostles, we learn from Acts ii. 29. where St. Peter, addressing the Jews, says, Men and brethren, let me speak freely to you of the patriarch David; that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. St. Jerom speaks of it as existing in his time: and modern travellers pretend that it is still in existence. But both monks and Mohammedans have long united to impose on Christian pilgrims; and there is scarcely any dependence to be placed on any of their relations; absurdity and self-contradiction are their principal characteristics.

19 Bath-sheba therefore went unto King Solomon, to speak unto him for Adonijah. And the king rose up to meet her, and ⁵ bowed himself unto her, and sat down on his throne, and caused a seat to be set for the king's mother; ⁶ and she sat on his right hand.

Verse 15. Thou knowest that the kingdom was mine] It certainly was his by the right of primogeniture; and it was his by the voice of the people, and the consent of the high priest. But there was a right paramount to all these, the right of God: it was his kingdom; the kings were his lieutenants, and he had a right to give the crown to whomsoever he pleased; and he was pleased to give it to Solomon.

Verse 17. That he give me Abishag—to wife.] He cheerfully gives up all right to the kingdom, and only desires to have this young woman; who, though she had been his father's wife or concubine, was still in a state of virginity. Some think that Joab and Abiathar had advised Adonijah to make this application; not doubting, if he got Abishag, that the popular tide would again turn in his favour, and that Solomon, whom they did not like, might soon be deposed: and that it was on this account that Solomon was so severe. But there is little evidence to support these conjectures. It does not appear that Adonijah, by desiring to have Abishag, had any thought of the kingdom, or of maintaining any right to it; though Solomon appears to have understood him in this sense. But, without farther evidence, this was a flimsy pretence to imbrue his hands in a brother's blood. He who attempts to varnish over this conduct of Solomon, by either state necessity, or a divine command, is an enemy, in my mind, to the cause of God and truth. See on ver. 25.

Verse 25. Solomon sent—Benaiah—and he fell upon him that he died.] Benaiah seems to have been the public state executioner; and yet he was generalissimo of all the forces! See him employed in a similar work, ver. 34, 46. I suppose him to have been such another general as Suwarrow, butcher-general of the Turks and Poles to the late Empress Catherine of Russia: like mistress, like man. But they have long since been called to an impartial tribunal.

That this was an act of cruelty toward Adonijah needs no proof. He is suspected, condemned, and slain, without a hearing! Calmet vindicates all this by various assumptions; and lays down a doctrine that is calculated for the meridian of Fez or Morocco: hear him—Un prince, dans ses jugemens, ne peut pas toujours suivre les regles de la plus parfaite morale: la politique, et le bien de l'état, obligent souvent à des choses opposées aux conseils de l'évangile. "A prince, in his judgments, cannot always follow the rules of the most perfect morality: policy, and the good of the state, often require things to be done which are contrary to the counsels of the Gospel." What a diabolic maxim is this! And is this indeed the way that French kings ruled, and ministers decreed judgment? Then we need not wonder at a revolution in that state; nor of the scourge that desolated the land. O England! magnify God for your constitution, your constitutional king, and the laws according to which he reigns.

Verse 27. So Solomon thrust out Abiathar] This was for having taken part before with Adonijah:
but by it a remarkable prophecy was fulfilled;
see 1 Sam. ii. 32-35. and the notes there. God had told Eli that the priesthood should depart from his house: Abiathar was the last of the descendants of Ithamar, of which family was Eli the high priest. Zadok, who was made priest in the stead of Abiathar, was of the family of Eliezer; and by this change the priesthood reverted to its ancient channel. Abiathar deserved this degradation: he supported Adonijah in his unnatural assumption of the royal dignity, even during the life of his father.

Verse 28. Tidings came to Joab] He heard that Adonijah had been slain, and Abiathar banished; and, probably, he had heard of David's dying charge to Solomon. Fearing, therefore, for his personal safety, he takes refuge at the tabernacle, as claiming divine protection, and desiring to have his case decided by God alone:
or perhaps a spark of remorse is now kindled;
and, knowing that he must die, he wishes to die in the house of God; as it were, under the sha-

Verse 30. Nay; but I will die here] The altars were so sacred among all people, that, in general, even the vilest wretch found safety, if he once reached the altar. This led to many abuses, and the perversion of public justice; and, at last, it became a maxim that the guilty should be punished should they even have taken refuge at the altars. God decreed that the presumptuous murderer, who had taken refuge at the altar, should be dragged thence, and put to death: see Exod. xxi. 14. The heathens had the same kind of ordinance: hence Euripides.

36 ¶ And the king sent and called for ^h Shimei, and said unto him, Build thee a house in Jerusalem, and dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither.

37 For it shall be, that on the day thou goest out, and passest over ^l the brook Kidron, thou shalt know for certain that thou shalt surely die: ^k thy blood shall be upon thine own head.

38 And Shimei said unto the king, The saying is good: as my lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do. And Shimei dwelt in Jerusalem many days.

39 And it came to pass at the end of three years, that two of the servants of Shimei ran away unto ^l Achish son of Maachah king of Gath. And they told Shimei, saying, Behold, thy servants be in Gath.

40 And Shimei arose, and saddled his ass, and went to Gath to Achish to seek his servants: and Shimei went, and brought his servants from Gath.

41 And it was told Solomon that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath, and was come again.

42 And the king sent and called for Shimei, and said unto him, Did I not make thee to swear by the LORD, and protested unto thee, saying, Know for a certain, on the day thou goest out, and walkest abroad any whither, that thou shalt surely die? and thou saidst unto me, The word that I have heard is good.

43 Why then hast thou not kept the oath of the LORD, and the commandment that I have charged thee with?

44 The king said moreover to Shimei, Thou knowest ^m all the wickedness which thine heart is privy to, that thou didst to David my father: therefore the LORD shall ⁿ return thy wickedness upon thine own head;

45 And King Solomon shall be blessed, and ^o the throne of David shall be established before the LORD for ever.

46 So the king commanded Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; which went out, and fell upon him, that he died. And the ^p kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon.

mer he murdered; of the blood of the latter he was not innocent.

Verse 36. Build thee a house] Thus he gave him the whole city for a prison; and this certainly could have reduced him to no hardships.

Verse 37. Thy blood shall be upon thine own head.] Thou knowest what to expect; if thou disobey my orders, thou shalt certainly be slain: and then thou shalt be considered as a self-murderer: thou alone shalt be answerable for thy own death. Solomon knew that Shimei was a seditious man; and he chose to keep him under his own eye; for such a man at large, in favourable circumstances, might do much evil. His bitter revilings of David were a sufficient proof.

Verse 40. And Shimei—went to Gath] It is astonishing that, with his eyes wide open, he would thus run into the jaws of death.

Verse 45. King Solomon shall be blessed] He seems to think that, while such bad men remained unpunished, the nation could not prosper; that it was an act of justice which God required him to perform, in order to the establishment and perpetuity of his throne.

Verse 46. And the kingdom was established] He had neither foes within nor without. He was either dreaded or loved universally. His own subjects were affectionately bound to him; and the surrounding nations did not think proper to make him their enemy.

As there are serious doubts relative to the dying charge of David, as it relates to Shimei, most believing that, in opposition to his own oath, David desired that Solomon should put him to death; I shall here insert Dr. Kennicott's criticism on this part of the text:
VOL. II. (19*)

"David is here represented in our English version, as finishing his life with giving a command to Solomon to kill Shimei; and to kill him on account of that very crime for which, as David here says, he had sworn to him by the Lord he would not put him to death. The behaviour thus imputed to the king and prophet, and which would be justly censurable, (if true,) should be examined very carefully as to the ground it stands upon: and, when the passage is duly considered, I presume it will appear highly probable than an injury has been here done to this illustrious character. The point to which I now beg the reader's attention is this: that it is not uncommon in the Hebrew language to omit the negative in a second part of the sentence, and to consider it as repeated, when it has been once expressed, and is followed by the connecting particle. And thus, on Isai. xiii. 22. the late learned annotator says: "*The negative is repeated or referred to, by the conjunction vau, as in many other places.*" See also Isai. xxiii. 4. The necessity of so very considerable an alteration, as inserting the particle not, may be here confirmed by some other instances. Thus Psa. i. 5. The ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor (the Hebrew is and, signifying and not) sinners in the congregation of the righteous. Psa. ix. 18. The needy shall not always be forgotten: (and then the negative, understood as repeated by the conjunction, now dropped,) the expectation of the poor shall (NOT) perish for ever. Psa. xxxviii. 1. O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath; NEITHER (AND, for and not) chasten me in thy hot displeasure. Psa. lxxv. 5. Lift not up your horn on high: (and then the negative, understood as repeated by the conjunction, now dropped) speak NOT with a stiff neck. Prov. xxiv. 12. (our version is this)—Doth not he, that pondereth the heart, consider it? and he that keepeth the soul, doth (NOT) he know it? and shall (NOT) he render to every man according to his works? And Prov. xxx. 3. I neither learned wisdom, NOR (AND, for and not) have the knowledge of the holy. If then there are, in fact, many such instances, the question is, Whether the negative here, expressed in the former part of David's command, may not be understood as to be repeated in the latter part: and, if this may be, a strong reason will be added why it should be so interpreted. The passage will run thus: "Behold, thou hast with thee Shimei, who cursed me—but I swore to him by the Lord, saying, I will not put thee to death by the sword. Now, therefore, hold him NOT guiltless, (for thou art a wise man, and knowest what thou oughtest to do unto him,) but bring NOT down his head to the grave with blood." Now, if the language itself will admit this construction, the sense thus given to the sentence derives a very strong support from the context. For how did Solomon understand this charge? Did he kill Shimei in consequence of it? Certainly he did not: for, after he had immediately commanded Joab to be slain, in obedience to his father, he sends for Shimei; and, knowing that Shimei ought to be well watched, confines him to a particular spot in Jerusalem for the remainder of his life. Chap. ii. 36—42. See also Job xxiii. 17. xxx. 20. xxxi. 20." This is the best mode of interpreting this text.

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh] This was, no doubt, a political measure, in order to strengthen his kingdom; and, on the same ground, he continued his alliance with the king of Tyre: and these were among the most powerful of his neighbours. But should political considerations prevail over express laws of God? God had strictly forbidden his people to form alliances with heathenish women, lest they should lead their hearts away from him into idolatry. Let us hear the law: Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son; for they will turn away thy son from following me, &c. Exod. xxxiv. 16. Deut. vii. 3, 4. Now Solomon acted in direct opposition to these laws; and, perhaps, in this alliance, were sown those seeds of apostasy from God and goodness, in which he so long lived, and in which he so awfully died.

Those who are, at all hazards, his determinate apologists, assume: 1. That Pharaoh's daughter must have been a proselyte to the Jewish religion, else Solomon would not have married her. 2. That God was not displeased with this match. 3. That the book of Canticles, which is supposed to have been his epithalamium, would not have found a place in the Sacred Canon, had the spouse^r whom it all along celebrates, been at that time an idolatress. 4. That it is certain we nowhere in Scripture find Solomon blamed for this match. See Dodd.

Now, to all this I answer—1. We have no evidence that the daughter of Pharaoh was a proselyte, no more than that her father was a true believer. It is no more likely that he sought a proselyte here than that he sought them among the Moabites, Hittites, &c.; from whom he took many wives. 2. If God's law be positively against such matches, he could not possibly be pleased with this breach of it in Solomon: but his law is positively against them, therefore he was not pleased. 3. That the book of Canticles, being found in the Sacred Canon is, according to some critics, neither a proof that the marriage pleased God, nor that the book was written by divine inspiration: much less that it celebrates the love between Christ and his church, or is at all profitable for doctrine, for reproof, or for edification in righteousness. 4. That Solomon is most expressly reprov'd in Scripture for this very match, is, to me, very evident, from the following passages: DID NOT SOLOMON, king of Israel, sin by these things? Yet among many nations was there no king like him who was beloved of his God, and God made him king over all Israel; nevertheless even him did outlandish women cause to sin. Neh. xiii. 26. Now, it is certain that Pharaoh's daughter was an outlandish woman; and, although it be not expressly said that Pharaoh's daughter is here intended, yet there is all reasonable evidence that she is included: and, indeed, the words seem to intimate that she is especially referred to. In ver. 3. it is said Solomon LOVED THE LORD, walking in the statutes of David: and Nehemiah says, Did not Solomon, king of Israel, sin by these things, who was beloved of his God? referring most probably to this early part of Solomon's history. But, supposing that this is not sufficient evidence that this match is spoken against in Scripture, let us turn to chap. xi. 1, 2, of this book, where the cause of Solomon's apostasy is assigned; and there we read, But King Solomon loved many STRANGE WOMEN, TOGETHER WITH THE DAUGHTER OF PHARAOH, women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites: of the nations which the Lord said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall not go in unto them; neither shall they come in unto you; for surely they will turn away your heart after their gods: SOLOMON CLAVE UNTO THESE IN LOVE. Here the marriage with Pharaoh's daughter is classed most positively with the most exceptionable of his matrimonial and concubinal alliances: as it, no doubt, had its predisposing share in an apostasy the most unprecedented and disgraceful.

Should I even be singular, I cannot help thinking that the reign of Solomon began rather inauspiciously; even a brother's blood must be shed to cause him to sit securely on his throne; and a most reprehensible alliance, the forerunner of many others of a similar nature, was formed for the same purpose. But we must be ever careful to distinguish between what God has commanded to be done, and what was done through the vile passions and foolish jealousies of men. Solomon had many advantages, and no man ever made a worse use of them.

Verse 2. The people sacrificed in high places] Could there be any sin in this; or was it unlawful till after the temple was built? for prophets, judges, the kings which preceded Solomon, and Solomon himself, sacrificed on high places; such as Gibeon, Gilgal, Shiloh, Hebron, Kirjath-jearim, &c. But, after the temple was erected, it was sinful to offer sacrifices in any other place; yet here it is introduced as being morally wrong: and it is introduced, ver. 3. as being an exceptionable trait in the character of Solomon. The explanation appears to be this: as the ark and tabernacle were still in being, it was not right to offer sacrifices but where they were; and wherever they were, whether on a high place or a plain, there sacrifices might be lawfully offered, previously to the building of the temple. And the tabernacle was now at Gibeon, 2 Chron. i. 3.

Verse 5. The LORD appeared to Solomon in a dream] This was the night after he had offered the sacrifices: see 2 Chron. i. 7: and, probably, after he had earnestly prayed for wisdom; see Wisdom, chap. vii. 7. Wherefore I prayed, and understanding was given me: I called upon God, and the spirit of wisdom came high place; a thousand burnt-offerings did Solomon offer upon that altar.

5 ¶ In Gibeon the LORD appeared to Solomon ^m in a dream by night: and God said, Ask what I shall give thee.

6 ⁿ And Solomon said, Thou hast showed unto thy servant David my father great ^o mercy, according as he ^p walked before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of

to me. If this were the case, the dream might have been the consequence of his earnest prayer for wisdom: the images of those things which occupy the mind during the day are most likely to recur during the night; and this, indeed, is the origin of the greater part of our dreams. But this appears to have been supernatural.

Gregory Nyssen, speaking of different kinds of dreams, observes, that our organs and brain are not unlike a musical instrument: while the strings of such instruments have their proper degree of tension, they give, when touched, a harmonious sound; but, as soon as they are relaxed, or screwed down, they give no sound at all. During our waking hours, our senses, touched by our reason, produce the most harmonious concert; but, as soon as we are asleep, the instrument is no longer capable of emitting any sound, unless it happen that the remembrance of what passed during the day returns and presents itself to the mind while we are asleep, and so forms a dream; just as the strings of an instrument continue to emit feeble sounds for some time after the musician has ceased to strike them. See GREG. NYSS. De opificio hominis, cap. xii. p. 77. Oper. vol. i. Edit. Morell. Par. 1638.

This may account, in some measure, for common dreams: but, even suppose we should not allow that Solomon had been, the day before, earnestly requesting the gift of wisdom from God, yet we might grant that such a dream as this might be produced by the immediate influence of God upon the soul. And if Solomon received his wisdom by immediate inspiration from heaven, this was the kind of dream that he had; a dream by which that wisdom was actually communicated. But probably we need not carry this matter so much into miracle: God might be the author of his extraordinary wisdom, as he was the author of his extraordinary riches. Some say, "He lay down as ignorant as other men; and yet arose in the morning wiser than all the children of men." I think this is as credible as that he lay down with a scanty revenue; and in the morning, when he arose, found his treasury full. In short, God's especial blessing brought him riches through the medium of his own care and industry: as the inspiration of the Almighty gave him understanding, while He gave his heart to seek and search out, by his wisdom, concerning all things under the sun, Eccles. i. 13. God gave him the seeds of an extraordinary heart with thee; and thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou hast given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day.

7 And now, O LORD my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David my father; and I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in.

8 And thy servant is in the midst of thy people which thou hast chosen, a great people, that cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude.

9 Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?

10 And the speech pleased the LORD, that Solomon had asked this thing.

11 And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life; neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies; but hast asked for thyself understanding, to discern judgment;

12 Behold, I have done according to thy words: lo, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart; so that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee.

13 And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches, and honour: so that there shall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days.

14 And if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as thy father David did walk, then I will lengthen thy days.

15 And Solomon awoke; and, behold, it was a dream. And he came to Jerusalem, and stood before the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and offered up burnt-offerings, and offered peace-offerings, and made a feast to all his servants.

16 ¶ Then came there two women, that were harlots, unto the King, and stood before him.

17 And the one woman said, O my lord, I and this woman dwell in one house; and I was delivered of a child with her in the house.

18 And it came to pass the third day after that I was delivered that this woman was delivered also: and we were together; there was no stranger with us than any man? Did he not even lose the knowledge of his Creator, and worship the abominations of the Moabites, Zidonians, &c. &c.? And was not such idolatry a proof of the grossest stupidity? How few proofs does his life give that the gracious purpose of God was fulfilled in him? He received much; but he would have received much more, had he been faithful to the grace given. None like thee, before thee] That is, no king, either in Israel or among the nations; as the following verse explains.

Verse 16. Then came there two women—harlots] The word harlot, which we here, and in some other places, improperly translate harlots, is, by the Chaldee, the best judge in this case, rendered pundekan, tavern-keepers. See on Josh. ii. 1. If these had been harlots, it is not likely they would have dared to appear before Solomon; and, if they had been common women, it is not likely they would have had children: nor is it likely that such persons would have been permitted under the reign of David. Though there is no mention of their husbands, it is probable they might have been, at this time, in other parts,

20 And she arose at midnight, and took my son from beside me, while thine handmaid slept, and laid it in her bosom, and laid her dead child in my bosom.

21 And when I rose in the morning to give my child suck, behold, it was dead: but when I had considered it in the morning, behold, it was not my son, which I did bear.

22 And the other woman said, Nay; but the living is my son, and the dead is thy son. And this said, No: but the dead is thy son, and the living is my son. Thus they spake before the king.

23 Then said the king, The one saith, This is my son that liveth, and thy son is the dead: and the other saith, Nay;

but thy son is the dead, and my son is the living.

24 And the king said, Bring me a sword. And they brought a sword before the king.

25 And the king said, Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other.

26 Then spake the woman whose the living child was unto the king, for ^o her bowels ^p yearned upon her son, and she said, O my lord, give her the living child, and in nowise slay it. But the other said, Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it.

27 Then the king answered and said, Give her the living child, and in nowise slay it: she is the mother thereof.

28 And all Israel heard of the judgment which the king had judged; and they feared the king: for they saw that the ^r wisdom of God was ^s in him, to do judgment.

following their necessary occupations; and the settling the present business could not have been delayed till their return: the appeal to justice must be made immediately.

Verse 25. Divide the living child in two] This was, apparently, a very strange decision; and such as nothing could vindicate, had it been carried into execution; but Solomon saw that the only way to find out the real mother was by the affection and tenderness which she would necessarily show to her offspring. He plainly saw that the real mother would rather relinquish her claim to her child than see it hewn to pieces before her eyes; while it was probable the pretender would see this with indifference. He therefore orders such a mode of trial as would put the maternal affection of the real mother to the utmost proof: the plan was tried, and it succeeded. This was a proof of his sound judgment, penetration, and acquaintance with human nature; but it is surely not produced as a proof of extraordinary and supernatural wisdom. We have several similar decisions even among heathens.

Suetonius, in his life of the emperor Claudius, cap. xv. whom he celebrates for his wonderful sagacity and penetration, on some particular occasions, tells us, that this emperor discovered a woman to be the mother of a certain young man, whom she refused to acknowledge as her son, by commanding her to marry him, the proofs being doubtful on both sides; for, rather than commit this incest, she confessed the truth. His words are—Fœminam, non agnoscentem filium suum, dubiâ utrinque argumentorum fide, ad confessionem compulsi, indicto matrimonio juvenis.

Ariopharnes, king of Thrace, being appointed to decide between three young men, who each professed to be the son of the deceased king of the Cimmerians, and claimed the crown in consequence; found out the real son, by commanding each to shoot an arrow into the body of the dead king: two of them did this without hesitation; the third refused, and was therefore judged by Ariopharnes to be the real son of the deceased. Grotius, on this place, quotes this relation from Diodorus Siculus: I quote this on his authority, but have not been able to find the place in Diodorus. This is a parallel case to that in the text; a covert appeal was made to the principle of affection; and the truth was discovered, as in the case of the mother of the living child.

Verse 28. They feared the king] This decision proved that they could not impose upon him; and they were afraid to do those things, which might bring them before his judgment-seat.

They saw that the wisdom of God was in him] They perceived that he was taught of God, judged impartially, and could not be deceived. What was done to the other woman we are not told; justice certainly required that she should be punished for her lies and fraud.

CHAPTER IV.

An account of Solomon's chief officers, 1—6. Names of the twelve officers that were over twelve districts, to provide victuals for the king's household monthly, 7—19. Judah and Israel are very populous; and Solomon reigns over many provinces, 20, 21. The daily provision for his family, 22, 23. The extent and peace of his dominions, 24, 25. His horses, chariots, and dromedaries; with the provision made for them, 26—28. His wisdom and understanding, 30—31. The number of his proverbs and songs; and his knowledge in natural history, 32, 33. People from all nations come to hear his wisdom, 34.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 2. These were the princes which he had; Azariah the son of Zadok, the priest, &c. His great, chief, or principal men. None of them were princes in the common acceptation of the word.

Verse 3. Elihoreph and Ahiah—scribes Secretaries to the king.

Jehoshaphat—recorder. Historiographer to the king; who chronicled the affairs of the kingdom. He was in this office under David, see 2 Sam. xx. 24.

Verse 5. Azariah—was over the officers He had the superintendence of the twelve officers mentioned below: see ver. 7.

Zabud—principal officer Perhaps what we call premier, or prime minister.

The king's friend His chief favourite; his confidant.

Verse 6. Ahishar was over the household The king's chamberlain.

Adoniram—was over the tribute. What we call chancellor of the exchequer. He received and brought into the treasury all the proceeds

12 Baana the son of Ahilud; to him pertained Taanach and Megiddo, and all Beth-shean, which is by Zartanah beneath Jezreel, from Beth-shean to Abel-meholah, even unto the place that is beyond Jokneam:

13 ^p The son of Geber, in Ramoth-gilead; to him pertained ^q the towns of Jair the son of Manasseh, which are in Gilead; to him also pertained ^r the region of Argob, which is in Bashan, threescore great cities with walls and brazen bars.

14 Ahinadab the son of Iddo had ^s Mahanaim:

15 Ahimaaz was in Naphtali; he also took Basmath the daughter of Solomon to wife:

16 Baanah the son of Hushai was in Asher and in Aloth:

17 Jehoshaphat the son of Paruah, in Issachar:

18 Shimei the son of Elah, in Benjamin:

19 Geber the son of Uri was in the country of Gilead, in ^v the country of Sihon king of the Amorites, and of Og king of Bashan; and he was the only officer which was in the land.

of taxes and tributes. He was in this office under David; see 2 Sam. xx. 24.

Verse 7. Twelve officers The business of these twelve officers was to provide daily, each for a month, those provisions which were consumed in the king's household: see verses 22 and 23. And the task for such a daily provision was not an easy one.

Verse 13. Threescore great cities with walls and brazen bars. These were fortified cities: their gates and bars covered with plates of brass. Such were the gates in Priam's palace—

Verse 21. Solomon reigned over all kingdoms] The meaning of this verse appears to be, that Solomon reigned over all the provinces from the river Euphrates, to the land of the Philistines, even to the frontiers of Egypt. The Euphrates was on the east of Solomon's dominions; the Philistines were westward, on the Mediterranean sea; and Egypt was on the south. Solomon had, therefore, as tributaries, the kingdoms of Syria, Damascus, Moab, and Ammon, which lay between the Euphrates and the Mediterranean. See Calmet. Thus he appears to have possessed all the land that God covenanted with Abraham to give to his posterity.

Verse 22. Solomon's provision for one day—

Of fine flour	30 measures, or cors.
Of meal	60 ditto
Stall-fed oxen	10
Ditto from the pasture	20
Sheep	100: with harts, roe-bucks, fallow-deer, and fat fowls.

The ^r cor, was the same as the homer, and contained nearly seventy-six gallons, wine measure, according to Bishop Cumberland.

Sheep] ^s tson, comprehending both sheep and goats.

Harts] ^t meayal, the deer.

Roe-bucks] ^u tsebi, the gazal, antelope, or wild goat.

Fallow-deer] ^v yachmur, the buffalo. See the notes Deut. xii. 15. and xiv. 5.

Fatted fowl] ^w barburim barburim ^x ab-sim, I suppose, means all the wild fowls in season during each month. Michaelis derives ^y barburim barburim, from ^z bara bara, which, in Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, signifies a field, a desert; all that is without the cities and habitations of men: hence ^{aa} chayoth chayoth bara, wild beasts, Dan. ii. 38. ^{bb} tor tor bar, wild bull; and, therefore, barburim may signify creatures living in the fields, woods, and deserts, which are taken by hunting; and opposed to those which are domesticated; and, consequently, may include beasts as well as fowls. Many have translated the word capons; but, query, was any such thing known among the ancient Jews? Solomon's table, therefore, was spread with all the necessaries and delicacies which the house or the field could afford.

But how immense must the number of men have been who were fed daily at the palace of the Israelitish king! Vilalpandus computes the number to be not less than forty-eight thousand six hundred; and Calvisius makes, by estimation from the consumption of food, fifty-four thousand! These must have included all his guards, each of whom received a ration from the king's stores.

Verse 25. Every man under his vine] They were no longer obliged to dwell in fortified cities for fear of their enemies; they spread themselves over all the country, which they every where cultivated; and had always the privilege of eating the fruits of their own labours. This is the meaning of the phrase.

Verse 26. Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses—and twelve thousand horsemen.] In 2 Chron. ix. 25. instead of forty thousand stalls, we read four thousand; and even this number might be quite sufficient to hold horses for twelve thousand horsemen; for stalls and stables may be here synonymous. In chap. x. 26. it is said he had one thousand four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen: and this is the reading in 2 Chron. i. 14. In 2 Chron. ix. 25. already quoted, instead of forty thousand stalls for horses, the Septuagint has τεσσαρες χιλιας ιππων, four thousand mares; and in this place the whole verse is omitted, both by the Syriac and Arabic. In the Targum of Rabbi Joseph on this book we have ^{cc} arbâ meah, four hundred, instead of the four thousand in Chronicles, and the forty thousand in the text. From this collation of parallel places, we may rest satisfied that there is a corruption in the numbers somewhere; and, as a sort of medium, we may take from the whole four thousand stalls, one thousand four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen.

Verse 28. And dromedaries] The word ^{dd} rakeesh, which we translate thus, is rendered beasts, or beasts of burden, by the Vulgate; mares, by the Syriac and Arabic; chariots, by the Septuagint; and race-horses, by the Chal-

dee. The original word seems to signify a very swift kind of horse; and race, or post-horse, is probably its true meaning. To communicate with so many distant provinces Solomon had need of many animals of this kind.

Verse 29. God gave Solomon wisdom, &c.
He gave him a capacious mind, and furnished him with extraordinary assistance to cultivate it.

Even as the sand that is on the sea-shore Lord Bacon observes on this:—"As the sand on the sea-shore encloses a great body of waters, so Solomon's mind contained an ocean of knowledge." This is a happy and correct illustration.

Verse 30. The children of the east country
That is, the Chaldeans, Persians, and Arabians; who, with the Egyptians, were famed for wisdom and knowledge through all the world.

Verse 31. He was wiser than all men He was wiser than any of those who were most celebrated in his time: among whom were the four after-mentioned, viz. Ethan, Heman, Chalcol, and Darda. Ethan was probably the same as is mentioned in some of the Psalms, particularly Psa. lxxxix. title; and among the singers, in 1 Chron. vi. 42. There is a Heman mentioned in the title to Psa. lxxxviii. In 1 Chron. ii. 6. we have all the four names; but they are probably not the same persons, for they are there said to be the sons of Zerah, but he flourished long before Solomon's time.

Some suppose that beney mahol should be rendered masters of dancing, or music; as mahol signifies not only a dance or choir, but also an instrument of music, of the pipe kind. Perhaps a reference is here made to Solomon's skill in music and poetry; as he is compared to persons who appear to have been eminent poets and musicians.

Verse 32. He spake three thousand proverbs
The Book of Proverbs, attributed to Solomon, contains only about nine hundred, or nine hundred and twenty-three distinct proverbs; and if we grant, with some, that the first nine chapters are not the work of Solomon, then all that can be attributed to him is only about six hundred and fifty.

Of all his one thousand and five songs, or poems, we have only one, the Book of Canticles,

Mahol: and his fame was in all nations round about.

32 v And he spake three thousand proverbs: and his songs were a thousand and five.

33 And he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes.

34 And there came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth, which had heard of his wisdom.

remaining; unless we include the cxxviith Psalm, which in the title is said to be by or for him, Except the Lord build the house, &c.; though it appears more properly to be a Psalm of direction, left him by his father David, relative to the building of the temple.

Verse 33. He spake of trees—beasts—fowls —creeping things, and of fishes. This is a complete system of natural history, as far as relates to the animal and vegetable kingdom;
and the first intimation we have of any thing of the kind: and Solomon was properly the first natural historian in the world.

O how must the heart of Tournefort, Ray, Linné, Buffon, Cuvier, Swammerdam, Bloesch, and other naturalists, be wrung to know, that these works of Solomon are all, and forever lost!
What lights should we have thrown on the animal and vegetable kingdoms, had these works been preserved! But the providence of God has not thought fit to preserve them; and succeeding naturalists are left to invent the system which he probably left perfect. If there be any remains of his wisdom, they must be sought among the Orientals, among whom his character is well known, and rates as high as it does with either Jews or Christians. I shall give some extracts from their works, relative to Solomon, when I come to consider his character at the end of chapter xi.

Verse 34. There came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon We learn from chap.
x. that the queen of Sheba was one of those visitants; and perhaps the most remarkable, as we have the particulars of her visit, but not of the others.

It is astonishing that of a person so renowned for wisdom, so little should be left to prove the truth of a fact of which all the civilized nations of the world have heard; and of which scarcely any man has ever doubted! The people that came from all kings of the earth were probably ambassadors, who came to form and maintain friendship between their sovereigns and the Israelitish king. We cannot understand the place as speaking of people who, either through an idle or laudable curiosity, came to see and converse with Solomon: to give free access to such people would ill comport with the maintenance of his dignity.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. Hiram king of Tyre] It must have been at the beginning of Solomon's reign that these ambassadors were sent; and some suppose that the Hiram mentioned here is different from him who was the friend of David; but there seems no very solid reason for this supposition. As Hiram had intimate alliance with David, and built his palace, 2 Sam. v. 11. he wished to maintain the same good understanding with his son, of whose wisdom he had, no doubt, heard the most advantageous accounts; and he loved the son, because he always loved the father. For Hiram was ever a lover of David.

Verse 2. Solomon sent to Hiram] Made an interchange of ambassadors and friendly greetings. Josephus tells us that the correspondence between Hiram and Solomon was preserved in the archives of the Tyrians, even in his time. But this, like many other assertions of the same author, is worthy of little credit.

Verse 4. There is neither adversary] אין שׂטן ein Satan, there is no Satan, no opposer, nor any kind of evil; all is peace and quiet, both without and within. God has given me this quiet that I may build his temple. Deus nobis hæc otia fecit.

Verse 5. A house unto the name of the Lord] The name of God is God himself. I purpose to build a house to that infinite and eternal being, called Jehovah.

Verse 6. Any that can skill to hew timber] An obsolete and barbarous expression for, any that know how to cut timber. They had neither sawyers, carpenters, joiners, nor builders among them, equal to the Sidonians. Sidon was a part of the territories of Hiram, and its invid my father, saying, Thy son, whom I will set upon thy throne in thy room, he shall build a house unto my name.

6 Now therefore command thou that they hew me ⁱ cedar trees out of Lebanon; and my servants shall be with thy servants: and unto thee will I give hire for thy servants according to all that thou shalt ^k appoint: for thou knowest that there is not any among us that can skill to hew timber like unto the Sidonians.

7 ¶ And it came to pass, when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, that he rejoiced greatly, and said, Blessed be the LORD this day, which hath given unto David a wise son over this great people.

8 And Hiram sent to Solomon, sayhabitants appear to have been the most expert workmen. It requires more skill to fell and prepare timber than is generally supposed. Vitruvius gives some rules relative to this, lib. ii. cap. 9. the sum of which is this:—1. Trees should be felled in autumn, or in the winter, and in the wane of the moon; for in this season the trees recover their vigour and solidity, which was dispersed among their leaves, and exhausted by their fruit, in spring and summer: they will then be free from a certain moisture, very apt to engender worms, and rot them; which in autumn and winter is consumed and dried up. 2. Trees should not be cut down at once; they should be cut carefully round, toward the pith, that the sap may drop down, and distil away; and thus left till thoroughly dry; and then cut down entirely. 3. When fully dried, a tree should not be exposed to the south sun, high winds, and rain; and should be smeared over with cow-dung to prevent its splitting. 4. It should never be drawn through the dew; but be removed in the afternoon. 5. It is not fit for floors, doors, or windows, till it has been felled three years. Perhaps these directions, attended to, would prevent the dry rot. And we see from them that there is considerable skill required to hew timber, and in this the Sidonians excelled. We do every thing in a hurry, and our building is good for nothing.

Verse 7. Blessed be the LORD this day] From this, and indeed from every part of Hiram's conduct, it is evident that he was a worshipper of the true God: unless, as was the case with many of the heathens, he supposed that every country had its own god, and every god his own country; and he thanked the God of Israel that he had given so wise a prince to govern ing, I have¹ considered the things which thou sentest to me for; and I will do all thy desire concerning timber of cedar, and concerning timber of fir.

9 My servants shall bring them down from Lebanon unto the sea: ^m and I will convey them by sea in floats unto the place that thou shalt ^a appoint me, and will cause them to be discharged there, and thou shalt receive them: and thou shalt accomplish my desire, ^o in giving food for my household.

10 ¶ So Hiram gave Solomon cedar trees, and fir trees, according to all his desire.

11 ^p And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand ^r measures of wheat for food to his household, and twenty measures of pure oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year.

12 And the LORD gave Solomon wisdom, ^s as he promised him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon; and they two made a league together.

those whom he considered his friends and allies: but the first opinion seems to be the most correct.

Verse 9. Shall bring them down from Lebanon unto the sea.] As the river Adonis was in the vicinity of the forest of Lebanon, and emptied itself into the Mediterranean sea, near Biblos, Hiram could transport the timbers all squared, and not only cut to scantling, but cut so as to occupy the place it was intended for in the building, without any farther need of axe or saw. It might readily be sent down the coast on rafts, and landed at Joppa, or Jamnia, just opposite to Jerusalem, at the distance of about twenty-five miles. See 2 Chron. ii. 16. The carriage could not be great, as the timber was all fitted for the building where it was hewn down. The materials had only to be put together when they arrived at Jerusalem. See ch. vi. 7.

Verse 11. And Solomon gave Hiram, &c.] The information in this verse, of the annual stipend paid to Hiram, is deficient; and must be supplied out of 2 Chron. ii. 10. Here twenty thousand measures of wheat, and twenty measures of pure oil, is all that is promised; there, twenty thousand measures of beaten wheat, twenty thousand measures of barley, twenty thousand baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil is the stipulation; unless we suppose the first to be for Hiram's own family, the latter for his workmen. Instead of twenty measures of oil, the Syriac, Arabic, and Septuagint, have twenty thousand measures, as in Chronicles. In 2 Chron. instead of cors of oil, it is baths. The bath was a measure much less than the cor.

Verse 13. The levy was thirty thousand men.] We find, from the following verse, that only ten thousand were employed at once, and those only for one month at a time: and having rested two months, they again resumed their labour. These were the persons over whom Adoniram was superintendent; and were all Israelites.

Verse 15. Threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens] These were all strangers or prose-lytes, dwelling among the Israelites; as we learn from the parallel place, 2 Chron. ii. 17, 18.

Verse 16. Besides—three thousand and three hundred, which ruled over the people] In the parallel place, 2 Chron. ii. 18. it is three thousand six hundred. The Septuagint has here the same number.

Verse 17. Great stones] Stones of very large dimensions.

Costly stones] Stones that cost much labour and time to cut them out of the rock.

Hewed stones] Every where squared and polished.

Verse 18. And the stone-squarers] Instead of stone-squarers, the margin very properly reads Giblites, הגבליים ha-giblim, and refers to Ezek. xxvii. 9. where we find the inhabitants of Gebal celebrated for their knowledge in ship-building. Some suppose that these Giblites were the inhabitants of Biblos, at the foot of mount Libanus, northward of Sidon, on the coast of the Mediterranean sea; famous for its wines; and now called Gaeta. Both Ptolemy and Stephanus Byzantinus speak of a town called Gebala, to the east of Tyre; but this was different from Gebal or Biblos. It seems more natural to understand this of a people, than of stone-squarers; though most of the versions have adopted this idea, which we follow in the text

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

Verse 1. In the four hundred and eightieth year] The Septuagint has the four hundred and fortieth year. It need scarcely be noticed, that among chronologists there is a great difference of opinion concerning this epocha. Glycas, has 330 years; Melchior Canus, 590 years; Josephus, 592 years; Sulpicius Severus, 588; Clemens Alexandrinus, 576; Cedrenus, 672; Codomanus, 598; Vossius and Capellus, 580; Serarius, 680; Nicholas Abraham, 527; Mæstlinus, 592; Petavius and Valtherus, 520. Here are more than a dozen of different opinions; and after all, that in the common Hebrew text is as likely to be the true one as any of the others.

The month Zif] This answers to a part of our April and May; and was the second month of the sacred year, but the eighth month of the civil year. Before the time of Solomon, the Jews do not appear to have had any names for their months, but mentioned them in the order of their consecutive occurrence, first month, second month, third month, &c. In this chapter, we find Zif and Bul; and in ch. viii. ver. 2. we find another, Ethanim; and these are supposed to be borrowed from the Chaldeans; and, consequently, this book was written after the Babylonish captivity. Before this time, we find only the word Abib mentioned as the name of a month, Exod. xiii. 4. Whether there were any others at that time, or whether Abib were really intended as the name of a month, we cannot absolutely say. The present names of the Hebrew months are:—Tisri, (answering to a part of September and October,) Marchesvan, Cisleu, Thebet, Shebet, Adar, Nisan, Ijar, Sivan, Thammuz, Ab, and Elul.

Verse 2. The length thereof was threescore cubits] A cubit, according to Bishop Cumberland, is 21 inches, and 888 decimals, or 1 foot, 9 inches, and 888 decimals.

	Yds.	Ft.	Inch.
According to this, the length, 60 cubits, was	36	1	5 28
The breadth, 20 cubits, was	12	0	5 76
The height, 30 cubits, was	18	0	8 64

This constituted what was called the temple, or house, the house of God, &c. But, besides this, there were courts and colonnades, where the people might assemble to perform their devotions, and assist at the sacrifices, without being exposed to the open air. The court surrounded the temple, or holy place, into which the priests alone entered. Sometimes the whole of the building is called the temple; at other times that, the measurement of which is given above. But as no proper account can be given of such a building in notes; and as there is a great variety of opinions concerning the temple, its structure, ornaments, &c. as mentioned in the books of Kings and Chronicles, in Ezekiel, and by Josephus; and as modern writers, such as Vilalpandus, Dr. Lightfoot, and Dr. Prideaux, professing to be guided by the same principles, have produced very different buildings; I think it best to hazard nothing on the subject, but give that description at the end of the chapter which Calmet with great pains and industry has collected: at the same time pledging myself to no particular form or appearance, as I find I cannot give any thing as the likeness of Solomon's temple, which I could say, either in honour or conscience, bears any affinity to it. For other particulars I must refer the reader to the three large vols. of Vilalpandus, Dr. Lightfoot's Works, and to the Connexions of Dr. Prideaux.

Verse 4. Windows of narrow lights.] The Vulgate says, fenestras obliquas, oblique windows:—but what sort of windows could such be? The Hebrew is חלונות שקופים חלונות shekuphim atumim; windows to look through, which shut. Probably latticed windows: windows through which a person within could see well; but a person without, nothing.

Windows, says the Targum, which were open within, and shut without. Does he mean windows with shutters; or, are we to understand, with the Arabic, windows opening wide within, and narrow on the outside; such as we still see in ancient castles? This sense our margin expresses.

Verse 7. The house—was built of stone] It appears that every stone was hewn and squared, and its place in the building ascertained, before it came to Jerusalem: the timbers were fitted in like manner. This greatly lessened the trouble and expense of carriage; on this account, that all was prepared at mount Lebanon, There was neither hammer, axe, nor any tool of iron, heard in the building: nothing except mallets to drive the tenons into the mortices, and drive in the pins to fasten them, was necessary; therefore, there was no noise. But why is this so particularly marked? Is it not because the temple was a type of the kingdom of God; and the souls of men are to be prepared here for that place of blessedness. There, there is no preaching, exhortations, repentance, tears, cries, nor prayers; the stones

14 ¶ So Solomon built the house, and finished it.

15 And he built the walls of the house within with boards of cedar; ^x both the floor of the house, and the walls of the ceiling: and he covered them on the inside with wood, and covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.

16 And he built twenty cubits on the sides of the house, both the floor and the walls with boards of cedar: he even built them for it within, even for the oracle, even for the ^y most holy place.

17 And the house, that is, the temple before it, was forty cubits long.

18 And the cedar of the house within was carved with ^z knops and ^a open flowers: all was cedar; there was no stone seen.

19 ¶ And the oracle he prepared in the house within, to set there the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

20 And the oracle in the fore-part was twenty cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof; and he overlaid it with ^b pure gold; and so covered the altar which was of cedar.

21 So Solomon overlaid the house within with pure gold: and he made a partition by the chains of gold before the oracle; and he overlaid it with gold.

must be all squared and fitted here for their place in the New Jerusalem; and being living stones, must be built up a holy temple for a habitation of God, through the Spirit.

Verse 9. Covered the house with beams and boards of cedar.] The Eastern custom is very different from ours: We ceil with plaster, and make our floors of wood: they make their floors of plaster, or painted tiles; and make their ceilings of wood. But it may not be improper to observe that, in ancient times, our buildings were somewhat similar: Westminster Hall is a proof of this.

Verse 11. The word of the Lord came to Solomon] Some think that this is the same revelation as that mentioned chap. xii. 2, &c. which took place after the dedication of the temple: but to me it appears different; it was a word to encourage him while building; to warn him against apostasy, and to assure him of God's continued protection of him and his family, if they continued faithful to the grace which God had given.

23 ¶ And within the oracle^d he made two cherubim of^e olive^f tree, each ten cubits high.

24 And five cubits was the one wing of the cherub, and five cubits the other wing of the cherub: from the uttermost part of the one wing unto the uttermost part of the other were ten cubits.

25 And the other cherub was ten cubits: both the cherubim were of one measure and one size.

26 The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and so was it of the other cherub.

27 And he set the cherubim within the inner house: and^g they^h stretched forth the wings of the cherubim, so that the wing of the one touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall; and their wings touched one another in the midst of the house.

28 And he overlaid the cherubim with gold.

29 And he carved all the walls of the house round about with carved figures of cherubim, and palm trees, andⁱ open flowers, within and without.

description of the temple at the end of this chapter.

Verse 22. The whole house he overlaid with gold] It is impossible to calculate this expense, or the quantity of gold employed in this sacred building.

Verse 26. The height of the one cherub was ten cubits] Concerning the cherubim, their form, &c. see my note on Exod. xxiv. 18. the height of each cherub was about eighteen feet and three inches.

Verse 36. Three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams.] Does not this intimate that there were three courses of stones; and then one course of timber, all through this wall? Three strata of stone, and one stratum of timber, and so on. If so, could such a building be very durable? This is also referred to in the succeeding chapter, ver. 11.; and as both the temple and Solomon's house were built in the same manner, we may suppose that this was the ordinary way in which the better sort of buildings were constructed. Calmet thinks, that to this mode of building the prophet al-laid with gold, within and without.

31 ¶ And for the entering of the oracle he made doors of olive tree: the lintel and side posts were^k a fifth part of the wall.

32 The^l two doors also were of olive tree; and he carved upon them carvings of cherubim, and palm trees, and^m open flowers, and overlaid them with gold, and spread gold upon the cherubim, and upon the palm trees.

33 So also made he for the door of the temple posts of olive tree, ⁿa fourth part of the wall.

34 And the two doors were of fir tree: the^o two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding.

35 And he carved thereon cherubim, and palm trees, and open flowers: and covered them with gold fitted upon the carved work.

36 ¶ And he built the inner court with three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams.

37 ¶ ^pIn the fourth year was the foundation of the house of the LORD laid, in the month Zif:

38 And in the eleventh year, in the month Bul, which is the eighth month, was the house finished^r throughout all the parts thereof, and according to all the fashion of it. So was he^s seven years in building it.

cludes, Hab. ii. 11. The stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it. But it should be observed, that this was in the inner court; and, therefore, the timber was not exposed to the weather. The outward court does not appear to have been built stratum super stratum, of stone and wood.

Verse 38. In the eleventh year—was the house finished] It is rather strange that this house required seven years and about six months to put all the stones and the timbers in their places: for we have already seen, that they were all prepared before they came to Jerusalem: but the ornamenting, gilding, or overlaying with gold, making the carved work, cherubim, trees, flowers, &c. must have consumed a considerable time. The month Bul, answers to a part of our October and November; as Zif, in which it was begun, answers to a part of April and May.

The dedication did not take place till the following year, the twelfth of Solomon; because that then, according to Archbishop Ussher, the jubilee happened.

[So he was seven years in building of it.] Properly, seven years and six months: but the Scripture generally expresses things in round numbers.

Diana's temple, at Ephesus, was one of the seven wonders of the world. It is said that almost all Asia was employed in the building of it, for about two hundred years: but it was certainly more extensive than the temple at Jerusalem; for it may be justly questioned, notwithstanding the profusion of gold, silver, precious stones, &c. employed in the temple of Solomon, whether it cost any thing like the money expended on the temple of Diana.

Pliny informs us, Hist. Nat. lib. xxxvi. cap. 12. that, in order to build one of the pyramids in Egypt, no less than three hundred and sixty thousand men were employed for the space of twenty years. But neither was the temple any such work as this. We may also observe, that the temple was never intended to hold a vast concourse of people; it was only for the service of the Lord, and the priests were those alone who were employed in it. The courts, chambers, and other apartments, were far more extensive than the temple itself: it was never designed to be a place to worship in, but a place to worship at. There God was known to have a peculiar residence; and before him the tribes came, and the priests were a sort of mediators between him and the people. In short, the temple was to the Jews in the promised land, what the tabernacle was to the Hebrews in the wilderness; the place where God's honour dwelt, and whither the people flocked to pay their adoration.

"Solomon laid the foundation of the temple in the year of the world 2992, before Christ 1008, before the vulgar era 1012; and it was finished in the year of the world 3000, and dedicated in 3001, before Christ 999, before the vulgar era 1003, (1 Kings viii. 2 Chron. v. vii. viii.) The place that was pitched on for erecting this magnificent structure was on the side of mount Sion, called Moriah. Its entrance, or frontispiece, stood toward the east; and the most holy, or most retired part, was toward the west. The author of the First Book of Kings, and of the Second of Chronicles, has chiefly made it his business to describe the temple, properly so called; that is, the sanctuary, the sanctum, and the apartments belonging to them; as also the vessels, the implements, and the ornaments of the temple; without giving any description almost of the courts and open areas, which, however, made a principal part of the grandeur of this august edifice.

"But Ezekiel has supplied this defect, by the exact plan he has delineated of these necessary parts. Indeed, it must be owned, that the temple, as described by Ezekiel, was never restored after the captivity of Babylon, according to the model and the mensuration that this prophet has given of it. But, as the measures he sets down for the sanctum and the sanctuary are, within a small matter, the same as those of the temple of Solomon; and as this prophet, who was himself a priest, had seen the first temple; it is to be supposed that the description he gives us of the temple of Jerusalem is the same as that of the temple of Solomon.

"The ground-plot upon which the temple was built, was a square of six hundred cubits, or twenty-five thousand royal feet, (Ezek. xiv.) This space was encompassed with a wall of the height of six cubits, and of the same breadth. Beyond this wall was the court of the Gentiles, being fifty cubits wide. After this was seen a great wall, which encompassed the whole court of the children of Israel. This wall was a square of five hundred cubits. The court of Israel was a hundred cubits in square; and was encompassed all round with magnificent galleries, supported by two or three rows of pillars. It had four gates of entrances; one to the east, another to the west, a third to the north, and the fourth to the south. They were all of the same form and largeness, and each had an ascent of seven steps. The court was paved with marble of divers colours, and had no covering; but the people, in case of need, could retire under the galleries that were all round about. These apartments were to lodge the priests in, and to lay up such things as were necessary for the use of the temple. There were but three ways to come in, to the east, to the north, and to the south; and they went to it by an ascent of eight steps. Before, and over against the gate of the court of the priests, in the court of Israel, was erected a throne for the king, being a magnificent alcove, where the king seated himself when he came into the temple. Within the court of the priests, and over against the same eastern gate, was the altar of burnt-offerings, of twelve cubits square, according to Ezekiel, xliii. 12, 13. or of ten cubits high, and twenty broad, according to 2 Chron. iv. 1. They went up to it by stairs on the eastern side.

"Beyond this, and to the west of the altar of burnt-offerings, was the temple, properly so called; that is to say, the sanctuary, the sanctum, and the porch of entrance. The porch was twenty cubits wide, and six cubits deep. Its gate was fourteen cubits wide. The sanctum was forty cubits wide, and twenty deep. There stood the golden candlestick, the table of show-bread, and the golden altar, upon which the incense was offered. The sanctuary was a square of twenty cubits. There was nothing in the sanctuary but the ark of the covenant, which included the tables of the law. The high priest entered here but once a year, and none but himself was allowed to enter. Solomon had embellished the inside of this holy place with palm trees in relief, and cherubim of wood, covered with plates of gold; and, in general, the whole sanctuary was adorned, and, as it were, overlaid with plates of gold.

"Round the sanctum and sanctuary were three stories of chambers, to the number of thirty-three. Ezekiel makes them but four cubits wide; but the First Book of Kings, vi. 5. allows five cubits to the first story, six to the second, and seven to the third.

"Since the consecration or dedication of the temple by Solomon, in the year of the world 3001, this edifice has suffered many revolutions, which it is proper to take notice of here.

"In the year of the world 3033, before Christ 967, before the vulgar era 971, Shishach, king of Egypt, having declared war with Rehoboam, king of Judah, took Jerusalem, and carried away the treasures of the temple, 1 Kings xiv. 2 Chron. xii.

"In 3146, Joash, king of Judah, got silver together, to go upon the repairs of the temple;

they began to work upon it in earnest in 3148, before Christ 852, before the vulgar era, 856. 1 Kings xii. 4, 5. and 2 Chron. xxiv. 7, 8, 9, &c.

"Ahaz, king of Judah, having called to his assistance Tilgath-pilneser, king of Assyria, against the kings of Israel and Damascus, who were at war with him, robbed the temple of the Lord of its riches, to give away to this strange king: (2 Chron. xxviii. 21, 22, &c. in the year of the world 3264, before Christ 736, before the vulgar era 740;) and not contented with this, he profaned this holy place, by setting up there an altar like one he had seen at Damascus, and taking away the brazen altar that Solomon had made, 2 Kings xvi. 10, 11, 12, &c. He also took away the brazen sea from off the brazen oxen that supported it, and the brazen basins from their pedestals, and the king's throne, or oratory, which was of brass. These he took away to prevent their being carried away by the king of Assyria. Nor did he stop here; but carried his wickedness so far as to sacrifice to strange gods, and to erect profane altars in all the corners of the streets of Jerusalem, 2 Chron. xxviii. 24, 25. He pillaged the temple of the Lord, broke the sacred vessels, and, lastly, shut up the house of God. This happened in the year of the world 3264, before Christ 736, before the vulgar era 740, to his death, which happened in 3278, before Christ 722, before the vulgar era 726.

"Hezekiah, the son and successor of Ahaz, opened again, and repaired the gates of the temple, which his father had shut up and robbed of their ornaments. (2 Chron. xxix. 3, 4, &c. in the year of the world 3278, before Christ 722, before the vulgar era 726.) He restored the worship of the Lord, and the sacrifices, and made new sacred vessels in the place of those that Ahaz had destroyed. But in the fourteenth year of his reign, (2 Kings xviii. 15, 16. in the year of the world 3291, before Christ 709, before the vulgar era 713,) Sennacherib, king of Assyria, coming with an army into the land of Judah, Hezekiah was forced to take all the riches of the temple, and even the plates of gold that he himself had put upon the gates of the temple, and give them to the king of Assyria. But when Sennacherib was gone back into his own country, there is no doubt that Hezekiah restored all these things to their first condition.

"Manasseh, son and successor of Hezekiah, profaned the temple of the Lord, by setting up altars to all the hosts of heaven, even in the courts of the house of the Lord, (2 Kings xxi. 4, 5, 6, 7. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 5, 6, 7. in the year of the world 3306, and the following years.) He set up idols there, and worshipped them. God delivered him into the hands of the king of Babylon, who loaded him with chains, and carried him away beyond the Euphrates. (2 Chron. xxxiii. 11, 12. &c. in the year of the world 3328, before Christ 672, before the vulgar era 676.) There he acknowledged and repented of his sins; and being sent back to his own dominions, he redressed the profanations he had made of the temple of the Lord, by taking away the idols, destroying the profane altars, and restoring the altar of burnt-offerings, upon which he offered his sacrifices.

"Josiah, king of Judah, laboured with all his might in repairing the edifices of the temple, 2 Kings xxii. 4, 5, 6, &c. 2 Chron. 8, 9, 10. in the year of the world 3380, before Christ, 620, before the vulgar era 624,) which had been either neglected or demolished by the kings of Judah, his predecessors. He also commanded the priests and Levites to replace the ark of the Lord in the sanctuary, in its appointed place; and ordered that it should not any more be removed from place to place, as it had been during the reign of the wicked kings, his predecessors, 2 Chron. xxxv. 3.

"Nebuchadnezzar took away a part of the sacred vessels of the temple of the Lord, and placed them in the temple of his god, at Babylon, under the reign of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, 7. in the year of the world 3398, before Christ 702, before the vulgar era 706.) He also carried away others under the reign of Jehoniah; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10. in the year of the world 3405, before Christ 595, before the vulgar era 599. Lastly, he took the city of Jerusalem, and entirely destroyed the temple, in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in the year of the world 3416, before Christ 584, before the vulgar era 588. 2 Kings xxv. 1, 2, 3, &c. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 18, 19.

"The temple continued buried in its ruins for the space of fifty-two years, till the first year of Cyrus, at Babylon, in the year of the world 3468, before Christ 532, before the vulgar era 536. Then Cyrus gave permission to the Jews to return to Jerusalem, and there to rebuild the temple of the Lord, Ezra i. 1, 2, 3, &c. The following year they laid the foundation of the second temple; but they had hardly been at work upon it one year, when either Cyrus or his officers, being gained over by the enemies of the Jews, forbade them to go on with their work, (Ezra iv. 5. in the year of the world 3470, before Christ 530, before the vulgar era 534.) After the death of Cyrus and Cambyes, they were again forbid by the Magian, who reigned after Cambyes, and whom the Scripture calls by the name of Artaxerxes, Ezra iv. 7, 17, 18. (in the year of the world 3483, before Christ 517, before the vulgar era 521.) Lastly, these prohibitions being superseded, under the reign of Darius, son of Hystaspes, (Ezra v. 1. vi. 1, 14. Hag. i. 1. &c.; in the year of the world 3485, before Christ 515, before the vulgar era 519,) the temple was finished and dedicated four years after, in the year of the world 3489, before Christ 511, before the vulgar era 515, twenty years after the return from the captivity.

"This temple was profaned by order of Antiochus Epiphanes, in the year of the world 3837. The ordinary sacrifices were discontinued therein, and the idol of Jupiter Olympus was set up upon the altar. It continued in this condition for three years; then Judas Maccabeus purified it, and restored the sacrifice and the worship of the Lord, in the year of the world 3840, before Christ 160, before the vulgar era 164. 1 Mac. iv. 36.

"Herod the Great undertook to rebuild the whole temple of Jerusalem anew, in the eighteenth year of his reign, and in the year of the world 3986, (Joseph. Antiq. lib. xv. c. 14.) He began to lay the foundation of it in the year of the world 3987, forty-six years before the first passover of Jesus Christ, as the Jews observe to him, by saying, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? John ii. 20. This is not saying that Herod had employed six and forty years in building it; for Josephus assures us, that he finished it in nine years and a half, (Joseph. Antiq. lib. xv. c. 14.) But, after the time of this prince, they all continued to make some new addition to it; and the same Josephus tells us, that they went on working upon it, even to the beginning of the Jewish war. Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. c. 8.

"This temple, built by Herod, did not subsist more than seventy-seven years, being destroyed in the year of the world 4073, of Christ 73, of the vulgar era 70. It was begun by Herod, 3987, finished in 3996, burnt and destroyed by the Romans in 4073.

"This temple of Herod was very different from that of Solomon, and from that which was rebuilt by Zerubbabel, after the captivity. This is the description that Josephus has left us of it, who himself had seen it:

"The temple, properly so called, was built sixty cubits high, and as many broad; but there were two sides of front, like two arms, or shoulders, which advanced twenty cubits on each side, which gave in the whole front a hundred cubits wide, as well as in height. The stones made use of in this building were white and hard, twenty-five cubits long, eight in height, and twelve in width. Joseph. de Bell. lib. vi. p. 917.

"The front of this magnificent building resembled that of a royal palace. The two extremes of each face were lower than the middle, which middle was so exalted, that those who were over against the temple, or that approached toward it, at a distance, might see it, though they were many furlongs from it. The gates were almost of the same height as the temple; and on the top of the gates were veils, or tapestry, of several colours, embellished with purple flowers. On the two sides of the doors were two pillars, the cornices of which were adorned with the branches of a golden vine, which hung down with their grapes and clusters; and were so well imitated, that art did not at all yield to nature. Herod made very large and very high galleries about the temple, which were suitable to the magnificence of the rest of the building, and exceeded in beauty and sumptuousness all of the kind that had been seen before.

"The temple was built upon a very irregular mountain; and at first there was hardly place enough on the top of it for the site of the temple and altar. The rest of it was steep and sloping, (Joseph. de Bell. lib. vi. pag. 915. exord. Antiq. lib. 15. c. 14.) But when King Solomon built it, he raised a wall toward the east, to support the earth on that side; and after this side was filled up, he then built one of the porticoes, or galleries. At that time this face only was cased with stone; but, in succeeding times, the people endeavouring to enlarge this space, and the top of the mountain being much extended, they broke down the wall which was on the north side, and enclosed another space as large as that which the whole circumference of the temple contained at first. So that at last, against all hope and expectation, this work was carried so far, that the whole mountain was surrounded by a treble wall. But, for the completing of this great work, whole ages were no more than sufficient; and all the sacred treasures were applied to this use, that the devotion of the people had brought to the temple from all the provinces of the world. In some places these walls were above three hundred cubits high; and the stones used in these walls were some forty cubits long. They were fastened together by iron cramps and lead, to be able to resist the injuries of time. The platform on which the temple was built was a furlong square, or one hundred and twenty-five paces." Thus far Calmet and Josephus.

CHAPTER VII.

Solomon builds his own house, and completes it in thirteen years. 1. He builds another, called the house of the forest of Lebanon; and a house for Pharaoh's daughter, 2—12. He brings Hiram, a coppersmith, out of Tyre, who makes much curious work for the temple, 13—20. He makes the two pillars, Jachin and Boaz, 21, 22. The molten sea, and the twelve oxen that bare it, 23—26. And ten brazen bases, and the ten lavers, with pots, shovels, and basins, all of which he cast in the plain of Jordan, 27—43. The brass too great to be weighed; and the vessels of the temple were all of pure gold, 47—50. Solomon brings into the house the silver and gold which his father had dedicated, 51.

BUT Solomon was building his own house a thirteen years, and he finished all his house.

2 ¶ He built also the house of the forest of Lebanon; the length thereof was a hundred cubits, and the breadth thereof fifty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits, upon four rows of cedar pillars, with cedar beams upon the pillars.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. Building his own house] This house is said to have been situated in Jerusalem; and probably was, what some call it, his winter's residence. It is called the king's house, chap. ix. 10.

5 And all the doors and posts were square, with the windows: and light was against light in three ranks.

6 ¶ And he made a porch of pillars;

It was not built in Lebanon, but is thought to have been on mount Sion. And why it was called the house of the forest of Lebanon, does not appear: probably it was because it was built almost entirely of materials brought from that place. See the following verses.

the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth thereof thirty cubits: and the porch was before them: and the other pillars and the thick beam were before them.

7 Then he made a porch for the throne where he might judge, even the porch of judgment: and it was covered with cedar from one side of the floor to the other.

8 And his house where he dwelt had another court within the porch, which was of the like work. Solomon made also a house for Pharaoh's daughter, whom he had taken to wife, like unto this porch.

9 All these were of costly stones, according to the measures of hewed stones, sawed with saws, within and without, even from the foundation unto the coping, and so on the outside toward the great court.

10 And the foundation was of costly stones, even great stones, stones of ten cubits, and stones of eight cubits.

11 And above were costly stones, after the measures of hewed stones and cedars.

12 And the great court round about was with three rows of hewed stones, and a row of cedar beams, both for the inner court of the house of the LORD, and for the porch of the house.

13 And King Solomon sent and fetched Hiram out of Tyre.

Verse 7. A porch for the throne] One porch appears to have been devoted to the purpose of administering judgment, which Solomon did in person.

Verse 8. A house for Pharaoh's daughter] This appears to have been a third house: probably the whole three made but one building; and were in the same place, but distinguished from each other; the first as Solomon's palace; the second as a house of judgment, a court-house; the third, the haram, or apartments for the women.

Verse 13. Solomon sent and fetched Hiram out of Tyre.] This was not the Tyrian king, mentioned before; but a very intelligent copiersmith, of Jewish extraction by his mother's side, who was probably married to a Tyrian. In 2 Chron. ii. 14. this woman is said to be of the daughters of Dan; but here of the tribe of a man of Tyre, a worker in brass: and he was filled with wisdom, and understanding, and cunning to work all works in brass. And he came to King Solomon, and wrought all his work.

15 For he cast two pillars of brass, of eighteen cubits high apiece: and a line of twelve cubits did compass either of them about.

16 And he made two chapters of molten brass, to set upon the tops of the pillars: the height of the one chapter was five cubits, and the height of the other chapter was five cubits:

17 And nets of checker-work, and wreaths of chain-work, for the chapters which were upon the top of the pillars; seven for the one chapter, and seven for the other chapter.

18 And he made the pillars, and two rows round about upon the one network, to cover the chapters that were upon the top, with pomegranates: and so did he for the other chapter.

19 And the chapters that were upon the top of the pillars were of lily-work in the porch, four cubits.

20 And the chapters upon the two pillars had pomegranates also above, over against the belly which was by the net-work: and the pomegranates were two hundred, in rows round about upon the other chapter.

21 And he set up the pillars in the porch of the temple: and he set up the right pillar, and called the name there-

Naphtali. The king of Tyre, who gives the account as we have it in Chronicles, might have made the mistake, and confounded the two tribes: or, she might have been of Naphtali by her father, and of Dan by her mother; and so be indifferently called of the tribe of Naphtali, or of the daughters of Dan. This appears to be the best solution of the difficulty. The versions and MSS. give no help here.

of ^v Jachin: and he set up the left pillar, and called the name thereof ^w Boaz.

22 And upon the top of the pillars was lily-work: so was the work of the pillars finished.

23 ¶ And he made ^x a molten sea, ten cubits ^y from the one brim to the other: it was round all about, and his height was five cubits: and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

24 And under the brim of it round about there were knops compassing it, ten in a cubit, ^z compassing the sea round about: the knops were cast in two rows, when it was cast.

25 It stood upon ^a twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

26 And it was a handbreadth thick, and the brim thereof was wrought like the brim of a cup, with the flowers of lilies: it contained ^b two thousand baths.

27 ¶ And he made ten bases of brass; four cubits was the length of one base, and four cubits the breadth thereof, and three cubits the height of it.

28 And the work of the bases was on this manner: they had borders, and the borders were between the ledges:

29 And on the borders that were between the ledges were lions, oxen, and cherubim: and upon the ledges there was a base above: and beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions made of thin work.

30 And every base had four brazen wheels, and plates of brass: and the four corners thereof had undersetters; under the laver were undersetters molten, at the side of every addition.

emblematical; for, notwithstanding their names, they seem to have supported no part of the building.

Verse 27. He made ten bases] That is, pedestals, for the ten lavers to rest on.

Verse 33. Then made he ten lavers] These were set on the ten bases or pedestals, and were to hold water for the use of the priests in their sacred office; particularly to wash the victims that were to be offered as a burnt-offering, as 31 And the mouth of it within the chapter and above was a cubit: but the mouth thereof was round after the work of the base, a cubit and a half: and also upon the mouth of it were gravings with their borders, four-square, not round.

32 And under the borders were four wheels; and the axletrees of the wheels were ^c joined to the base: and the height of a wheel was a cubit and half a cubit.

33 And the work of the wheels was like the work of a chariot wheel; their axletrees, and their naves, and their feloes, and their spokes, were all molten.

34 And there were four undersetters to the four corners of one base: and the undersetters were of the very base itself.

35 And in the top of the base was there a round compass of half a cubit high: and on the top of the base the ledges thereof and the borders thereof were of the same.

36 For on the plates of the ledges thereof, and on the borders thereof, he graved cherubim, lions, and palm trees, according to the ^d proportion of every one, and additions round about.

37 After this manner he made the ten bases; all of them had one casting, one measure, and one size.

38 ¶ Then ^e made he ten lavers of brass: one laver contained forty baths: and every laver was four cubits: and upon every one of the ten bases one laver.

39 And he put five bases on the right ^f side of the house, and five on the left side of the house: and he set the sea on the right side of the house eastward over against the south.

40 ¶ And ^g Hiram made the lavers, and the shovels, and the basins. So Hiram made an end of doing all the work that he made King Solomon we learn from 2 Chron. iv. 6.; but the brazen sea was for the priests to wash in. The whole was a building of vast art, labour, and expense.

Verse 40. So Hiram made an end] It is truly surprising that, in so short a time, one artist could design and execute works of such magnitude, taste, and variety, howsoever numerous his assistants might be. The mere building of the house was a matter of little difficulty, in comparison of these internal works

In this place he found that particular kind of clay that was proper for his purpose. Some suppose that the place where Hiram had his foundry was on the other side, some on this side of Jordan. Calmet supposes, that it was near to Bethshan.

Verse 51. Solomon brought in the things] It has been a question whether Solomon, in the structure of the temple, used any of the gold and silver which David had provided? And here it seems answered in the negative; for, after the house was finished, with all its utensils and ornaments, with its immense profusion of gold, it is here said that Solomon brought in the silver, and the gold, and the vessels which David ing many: neither was the weight of the brass ^s found out.

48 ^t And Solomon made all the vessels that pertained unto the house of the LORD: ^u the altar of gold, and ^v the table of gold, whereupon ^v the show-bread was.

and the basins, and the spoons, and the ^w censers of pure gold: and the hinges of gold, both for the doors of the inner house, the most holy place, and for the doors of the house, to wit, of the temple.

51 So was ended all the work that King Solomon made for the house of the LORD. And Solomon brought in the ^x things ^y which David his father had dedicated; ^z even the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, did he put among the treasures of the house of the LORD.

his father had dedicated. It appears, therefore, that Solomon had employed four years to make preparation for the work before it was begun.
During the whole time of the building, he was, no doubt, still appropriating a part of the public revenue for this purpose; and the provision made by his father he placed among the treasures of the house: but the temple was truly Solomon's, as he had provided all its materials, and borne all its expense.

As the temple was built, in some measure, on the model of the tabernacle, and dedicated to the same use, I wish to refer the reader to the description of the former, in Exod. xxv—xxvii., and xxxv—xxxix.; and the notes there.

CHAPTER VIII.

Solomon assembles the elders of Israel, and brings up the ark, and the holy vessels, and the tabernacle, out of the city of David, and places them in the temple; on which account, a vast number of sheep and oxen are sacrificed, 1—8. There was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone which Moses put there at Horeb, 9. The cloud of God's glory fills the house, 10, 11. Solomon blesses the people, 12—21. His dedicatory prayer, 22—53. Afterward he blesses and exhorts the people, 54—61. They offer a sacrifice of twenty-two thousand oxen, and one hundred and twenty thousand sheep, 62, 63. He allows the middle of the court for offerings; as the brazen altar, which was before the Lord was too little, 64. He holds the Feast of the Dedication for seven days; and, for other seven days, the Feast of Tabernacles; and, on the eighth day, blesses the people, and sends them away joyful, 65, 66.

The eighth day of the seventh month, viz. the thirtieth of our October, being Friday, was the first of the seven days of dedication; the tenth day, Saturday, November 1, was the fast of expiation, or atonement, held; whereon, according to the Levitical law, the jubilee was proclaimed by sound of trumpet. The fifteenth day, Friday, November 6, was the feast of tabernacles; the twenty-second, of our November 13, being also Friday, was the feast of tabernacles, which was always very solemnly kept, 2 Chron. vii. 9. the city of David; which one David had constructed as a temporary residence for the ark, in the event of a temple being built. Which of these tabernacles was brought into the temple at this time is not well known; some think both were brought in, in order to prevent the danger of idolatry. I should rather suppose that the tabernacle from Gibeon was brought in, and that the temporary one erected by David was demolished.

Verse 8. And there they are unto this day.] This proves that the book was written before the destruction of the first temple; but how long before we cannot tell.

Verse 9. Save the two tables of stone] See my notes on Heb. ix. 4.

Verse 10. When the priests were come out] That is, after having carried the ark into the holy of holies; before any sacred service had yet commenced.

Verse 11. The glory of the LORD had filled the house] The cloud, the symbol of the divine glory and presence, appears to have filled not only the holy of holies, but the whole temple, court and all; and became evident to the people: and, by this, Solomon knew that God had honoured the place with his presence, and taken it for his habitation in reference to the people of Israel.

Verse 12. The LORD said—he would dwell] It was under the appearance of a cloud that God showed himself present with Israel in the wilderness, see Exod. xiv. 19, 20. And at the dedication of the tabernacle in the wilderness God manifested himself in the same way that he did here, at the dedication of the temple: see Exod. xvi. 10.

25 Therefore now, LORD God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him, saying, 'There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit on the throne of Israel; so that thy children take heed to their way, that they walk before me as thou hast walked before me.

28 Yet have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O LORD my God, to hearken unto the cry and to the prayer, which thy servant prayeth before thee to-day:

thence; while, humbly kneeling on their knees, they seemed to acknowledge at once their dependence and unworthiness. On this subject I have spoken elsewhere. In the Scriptures we meet with several examples of the kind: Hear my voice—when I lift up my hands toward thy holy oracle, Psa. xxviii. 2. LIFT UP YOUR HANDS in the sanctuary, and bless the Lord, Psa. cxxxiv. 2. Let my prayer be set forth—and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice, Psa. cxli. 2. And see 1 Tim. ii. 8, &c. In heathen writers, examples are not less frequent:

*Sustulit exutas vinculis ad sidera palmas
Vos aeterni ignes et non violabitis nestrum Testor nomen ait. Virg. Æn. lib. ii. v. 153.*

*Ye lamps of heaven, he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free; thou venerable sky, Inviolable powers!*

And that they kneeled down when supplicating, I have also proved. Of this also the Scriptures afford abundant evidence; as do also the heathen writers. I need add but one word:

*Et genibus pronus, supplex, similisque roganti, Circumfert tacitos, tanquam sua brachia, vultus.
Ovid. Met. lib. iii. f. 3. v. 240.*

Indeed, so universal were these forms in praying, that one of the heathens has said, "All men, in praying, lift up their hands to heaven."

Verse 24. Who hast kept with thy servant David] This is in reference to 2 Sam. vii. 13. where God promises to David that Solomon shall build a house for the name of the Lord. The temple being now completed, this promise was literally fulfilled.

Verse 27. But will God indeed dwell on the earth] This expression is full of astonishment, veneration, and delight. He is struck with the immensity, dignity, and grandeur, of the Divine Being; but especially at his condescension to dwell with men: and though he sees, by his filling the place, that he has come now to make his abode with them, yet he cannot help asking the question—How can such a God dwell in such a place, and with such creatures?

Behold, the heaven] The words are all in the plural number in the Hebrew: השמים והשמש והירח hashshamayim, u-shemey hashshamayim; "the heavens, and the heavens of heavens." What do these words imply? That there are systems, and systems of systems, each possessing its sun, its primary and secondary planets; all extending beyond each other in unlimited space, in the same regular and graduated order which we find to prevail in what we call our solar system; which, probably, in its thousands of millions of miles in diameter, is, to some others, no more than the area of the lunar orbit to that of the Georgium Sidus. When God, his manifold wisdom, his creative energy, and that space which is unlimited, are considered, it is no hyperbole to say, that, although the earth has been created nearly six thousand years ago, suns, the centres of systems, may have been created at so immense a distance that their light has not yet reached our earth, though travelling at the rate of one hundred and ninety thousand miles every second; or upwards of a million times swifter than the motion of a cannon ball! This may be said to be inconceivable; but what is even all this to the vast immensity of space! Had God created a system like ours in every six days since the foundation of the world, and kept the seventh as a sabbath, and though there might have been by this time [A. M. 5823, ineunte, A. D. 1819, ineunte,] three hundred and three thousand five hundred and seventy-five mundane systems, they would occupy but a speck in the inconceivable immensity of space. Reader, all this, and millions more, is demonstrably possible; and, if so, what must God be—illud inexpressibile, quo i-n-h-a-b-i-t-e-t-h-e-t-e-r-n-i-t-y!

Verse 29. My name shall be there] I will there show forth my power and my glory, by enlightening, quickening, pardoning, sanctifying, and saving all my sincere worshippers.

Verse 30. Toward this place] Both tabernacle and temple were types of our Lord Jesus.

Verse 35. When the heaven is shut up, and there is no rain] The THIRD case: When, because of their sin, and ceasing to walk in the good way in which they should have walked, God refuses to send the early and latter rain, so that the appointed weeks of harvest come in vain, as there is no crop: then, if they pray, confess their sin, &c. hear thou in heaven, and forgive, &c.

Verse 37. If there be in the land famine—pestilence] The FOURTH case includes several kinds of evils: 1. Famine; a scarcity, or total want of bread, necessarily springing from the preceding cause, drought. 2. Pestilence; any general and contagious disease. 3. Blasting; any thing by which the crops are injured, so that the ear is never matured; but, instead of wholesome grain, a black offensive dust. 4. Mildew; any thing that vitiates, or corrodes the texture of the stalk, destroys the flowers and blossoms, or causes the young shaped fruits to fall off their stems. 5. Locust; a well-known curse in the East, a species of grasshopper, that multiplies by millions, and covers the face of the earth for many miles square, destroying every green thing; leaving neither herb nor grass upon the earth, nor leaf, nor bark upon the trees. 6. Caterpillar; the locust in its young or nympha state. The former refers to locusts, brought by winds from other countries, and settling on the land; the latter to the young locusts bred in the land. 7. An enemy, having attacked their defended cities, the keys and barriers of the land. 8. Any other kind of plague; that which affects the surface of the body; blotch, blain, leprosy, ophthalmia, &c.: or sickness, whatever impaired the strength, affected the intestines, disturbed or destroyed their natural functions. All such cases were to be brought before the Lord, the persons having a deep sense of the wickedness which induced God thus to afflict, or permit them to be afflicted; for only those who know or of God manifested in the flesh; and he was and is the Mediator between God and man. All prayer, to be acceptable, and to be entitled to a hearing, must go to God through him. The human nature of Christ is the temple in which dwell all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; therefore, with propriety, all prayer must be offered to God through him. "If they pray toward this place, hear thou in heaven, thy dwelling-place; and when thou hearest, forgive." This appears to me to be the true sense and doctrine of this verse.

Verse 31. If any man trespass against his neighbour] Solomon puts here seven cases, in all of which the mercy and intervention of God would be indispensably requisite; and he earnestly bespeaks that mercy and intervention, on condition that the people pray toward that holy place; and, with a feeling heart, make earnest supplication.

The FIRST case is one of doubtfulness; where a man has sustained an injury, and charges it on a suspected person, though not able to bring direct evidence of the fact, the accused is permitted to come before the altar of God, and purge himself by his personal oath. Solomon prays that God may not permit a false oath to be taken; but that he will discover the truth, so that the wicked shall be condemned, and the righteous justified.

Verse 33. When thy people Israel be smitten down, &c.] The SECOND case: When their enemies make inroads upon them, and defeat them in battle, and lead them into captivity, because God, being displeased with their transgressions, has delivered them up: then, if they shall turn again, confess the name of God, which they had, in effect denied, by either neglecting his worship, or becoming idolatrous; and pray and make supplication. Then, says Solomon, hear thou in heaven—and bring them again into the land which thou gavest unto their fathers.

the plague of their own hearts, ver. 38 ; the deep-rooted moral corruption of their nature, and the destructive nature and sinfulness of sin, were likely to pray in such a manner as to induce God to hear and forgive.

Verse 41. Moreover, concerning a stranger] The FIFTH case relates to heathens coming from other countries, with the design to become proselytes to the true religion ; that they might be received, blessed, and protected, as the true Israelites : that the name of Jehovah might be known over the face of the earth.

Verse 44. If thy people go out to battle] The SIXTH case refers to wars undertaken by divine appointment : whithersoever thou shalt send them ; for in no other wars could they expect the blessing and concurrence of the Lord ; in none other could the God of truth and justice maintain their cause. There were such wars under the Mosaic dispensation, there are none such under the Christian dispensation : nor can there be any ; for the Son of man is come not to destroy men's lives, but to save them. Except mere defensive war, all others are diabolic ; and, query, were there no provocations, would there be any attacks, and consequently any need of defensive wars ?

Verse 46. If they sin against thee] This SEVENTH case must refer to some general defection from truth ; to some species of false worship, idolatry, or corruption of the truth and ordinances of the Most High ; as for it, they are here stated to be delivered into the hands of their enemies, and carried away captive, which was the general punishment for idolatry ; and what is called, ver. 47. acting perversely, and committing wickedness.

In ver 46. we read, If they sin against thee, for there is no man that sinneth not. On this verse we may observe, that the second clause, as it is here translated, renders the supposition, in the first clause, entirely nugatory ; for, if there be no man that sinneth not, it is useless to say, if they sin : but this contradiction is taken away by reference to the original, כִּי יִשְׁחָטוּ לָךְ ki yechetau lak, which should be translated if they shall sin against thee : or, should they sin against thee, אֲשֶׁר לֹא יִחָטֵא כִּי אָדָם asher lo yecheta ; ki ein Adam asher lo yecheta ; "For there is no man that may not sin :"^r i. e. there is no man impeccable, none infallible ; none that is not liable to transgress. This is the true meaning of the phrase in various parts of the Bible, and so our translators have understood the original ; for, even in the 31st verse of this chapter, they have translated יִשְׁחָטוּ ki yecheta, if a man trespass ; which certainly implies he might or might not do it : and in this way, they have translated the same word, if a soul sin, in Lev. v. 1. vi. 2. 1 Sam. ii. 25. 2 Chron. vi. 22., and in several other places. The truth is, the Hebrew has no mood to express words in the permissive or optative way, but to express this sense it uses the future tense of the conjugation kāl.

This text has been a wonderful strong-hold for all who believe that there is no redemption from sin in this life ; that no man can live without committing sin ; and that we cannot be entirely freed from it till we die. 1. The text speaks no such doctrine, it only speaks of the possibility of every man sinning ; and this must be true of a state of probation. 2. There is not another text in the divine records that is more to the purpose than this. 3. The doctrine is flatly in opposition to the design of the Gospel; for Jesus came to save his people from their sins, and to destroy the works of the devil. 4. It is a dangerous and destructive doctrine, and should be blotted out of every Christian's creed. There are too many who are seeking to excuse their crimes by all means in their power; and we need not embody their excuses in a creed, to complete their deception, by stating that their sins are unavoidable.

Verse 2. The Lord appeared to Solomon] The design of this appearance, which was in a dream, as that was at Gibeon, was to assure Solomon that he had accepted his service, and hast built, ^f to put my name there for ever; ^g and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.

4 And if thou wilt ^h walk before me, ⁱ as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprightness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my statutes and my judgments;

5 Then I will establish the throne of thy kingdom upon Israel for ever. ^k as I promised to David thy father, saying,

There shall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Israel.

6 ¹ But if ye shall at all turn from following me, ye or your children, and will not keep my commandments, and my statutes, which I have set before you, but go and serve other gods, and worship them;

7 ^m Then will I cut off Israel out of the land which I have given them: and this house, which I have hallowed ^a for my name, will I cast out of my sight; ^a and Israel shall be a proverb and a by-word among all people:

8 And ^p at this house, which is high, every one that passeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss; and they shall say, Why hath the LORD done thus unto this land, and to this house?

9 And they shall answer, Because they forsook the LORD their God, who brought forth their fathers out of the land of Egypt, and have taken hold upon other gods, and have worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath the LORD brought upon them all this evil.

him, he would abandon both them and his temple.

Verse 7. A proverb and a by-word among all people] And so they are to the present: the unbelieving Jews; the stubborn, stiff-necked Jews; are words still in common use. They forsook the Lord, rejected his Christ, and are cast off, their temple destroyed, and they scattered over the face of the earth.

Verse 10. At the end of twenty years] He employed seven years and a half in building the temple, and twelve years and a half in building the king's house; see 1 Kings vii. 1. 2 Chron. viii. 1.

Verse 11. Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities] It is very likely that Solomon did not give those cities to Hiram, so that they should be annexed to his Tyrian dominions; but rather gave him the produce of them till the money was paid which he had advanced to Solomon for his buildings. It appears, however, that either Hiram did not accept them, or that, having received the produce till he was paid, he then restored them to Solomon; for, in the parallel place, 2 Chron. viii. 2, it is said, The cities which Hiram had restored to Solomon, Solomon built them, and caused the children of Israel to dwell there. Some think that they were heathen cities, which Solomon had conquered; and, therefore, had a right to give them, if he pleased, as they were not any part of the land given by promise to the Israelites.

Verse 13. Called them the land of Cabul

10 [†] And it came to pass at the end of twenty years, when Solomon had built the two houses, the house of the LORD, and the king's house, 11 (Now Hiram the king of Tyre had furnished Solomon with cedar trees and fir trees, and with gold, according to all his desire,) that then King Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee.

12 And Hiram came out from Tyre to see the cities which Solomon had given him; and they ^u pleased him not.

13 And he said, What cities are these which thou hast given me, my brother? ^v And he called them the land of ^w Cabul unto this day.

14 And Hiram sent to the king sixscore talents of gold.

15 [†] And this is the reason of ^x the levy which King Solomon raised; for to build the house of the LORD, and his own house, and ^y Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and ^z Hazor, and ^a Megiddo, and ^b Gezer.

Whether this epithet was given to this land by Hiram, as a mark of disapprobation, or what is its proper meaning, the learned are not agreed. That there was a country of this name in the promised land, in the time of Joshua, is evident enough, from Josh. xix. 27. as it was one part of the boundary of the tribe of Asher: hence some interpret the word border, or boundary; and so the Septuagint understood it, for they have translated the Hebrew word opon, which signifies the same. The margin gives another meaning.

Verse 14. Sixscore talents of gold] This was the sum which Hiram had lent; and, in order to pay this, he laid a tax upon his people, as we afterward learn. The whole is very darkly expressed.

Verse 15. This is the reason of the levy] That is, in order to pay Hiram the sixscore talents of gold which he had borrowed from him, Hiram not being willing to take the Galilean cities mentioned above, or having taken them, soon restored them again, he was obliged to lay a tax upon the people; and that this was a grievous and oppressive tax we learn from chap. xii. 1-4. where the elders of Israel came to Rehoboam, complaining of their heavy state of taxation, and entreating that their yoke might be made lighter.

And Millo] This is supposed to have been a deep valley between mount Sion and what was called the city of Jebus, which Solomon filled up, and it was built on; and became a sort of fortified place, and a place for public assemblies. See Calmet.

Verse 16. Pharaoh—had gone up and taken Gezer. This city Joshua had taken from the Canaanites, Josh. x. 33. and xii. 12. and it was divided by lot to the tribe of Ephraim, and was intended to be one of the Levitical cities: but it appears that the Canaanites had retaken it, and kept possession till the days of Solomon, when his father-in-law Pharaoh, king of Egypt, retook it, and gave it to Solomon in dowry with his daughter.

Verse 18. And Tadmor in the wilderness. This is almost universally allowed to be the same with the celebrated Palmyra, the ruins of which remain to the present day, and give us the highest idea of Solomon's splendour and magnificence. Palmyra stood upon a fertile plain, surrounded by a barren desert, having the river Euphrates on the east. The ruins are well described by Messrs. Davokes and Wood; of which they give fine representations. They are also well described in the ancient part of the Universal History, vol. i. p. 367—70. The description concludes thus: "The world never saw a more glorious city; the pride, it is likely, of ancient times, and the reproach of our own. A city not more remarkable for the state of her buildings and unwontedness of her situation, than for the extraordinary personages who once flourished there; among whom the renowned Zenobia, and the incomparable Longinus, must for ever be remembered with admiration and regret."

22 But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondmen: but they were men of war, and his servants, and his princes, and his captains, and rulers of his chariots, and his horsemen.

23 These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's work, five hundred and fifty, which bare rule over the people that wrought in the work.

24 But Pharaoh's daughter came up out of the city of David unto her house which Solomon had built for her: then did he build Millo.

25 And three times in a year did Solomon offer burnt-offerings and peace-offerings upon the altar which he built unto the LORD, and he burnt incense upon the altar that was before the LORD. So he finished the house.

26 And King Solomon made a navy of ships in Ezion-geber, which is beside Eloth, on the shore of the Red sea, in the land of Edom.

27 And Hiram sent in the navy his servants, shipmen that had knowledge

Verse 19. And all the cities of store. Though, by the multitude and splendour of his buildings, Solomon must have added greatly to the magnificence of his reign; yet, howsoever plentiful silver and gold were in his times, his subjects must have been greatly oppressed with the taxation necessary to defray such a vast public expenditure.

Verse 21. A tribute of bond-service. He made them do the most laborious part of the public works, the Israelites being generally exempt. When Sesostris, king of Egypt, returned from his wars, he caused temples to be built in all the cities of Egypt: but did not employ one Egyptian in the work; having builded the whole by the hands of the captives which he had taken in his wars. Hence he caused this inscription to be placed upon each temple:—

Οὐδὲς ἑλληνιστὴς εἰς αὐτὰ μικοχθῆκε.

No native has laboured in these.

Diodor. Sic. Bibl. l. i. c. 56.

It appears that Solomon might, with propriety, have placed a similar inscription on most of his works.

Verse 25. Three times in a year did Solomon offer. These three times were—1. The Passover—2. Pentecost—3. The feast of Tabernacles.

Verse 26. A navy of ships. Literally אני אני, "a ship;" but in the parallel place, 2 Chron. viii. 17. it is said that Hiram sent him אניו, anioth, "ships;" but it does not appear that Solomon, in this case, built more than one ship, and this was manned principally by the Tyrians.

Verse 23. And they came to Ophir] No man knows certainly, to this day, where this Ophir was situated. There were two places of this name; one somewhere in India, beyond the Ganges; and another in Arabia, near the country of the Sabæans, mentioned by Job, chap. xxii. 24. Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust; and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brook. And chap. xxviii. 16. It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx or the sapphire. Calmet places this country at the sources of the Euphrates and Tigris.

But there are several reasons to prove that this was not the Ophir of the Bible; which, it seems, was so situated as to require a voyage of three years long to go out, load, and return. Mr. Bruce has discussed this subject at great length; see his Travels, vol. ii. c. 4. p. 354, &c. He endeavours to prove that Ezion-geber is situated on the Elanitic branch of the Arabian gulf, or Red sea. 2. That Tharshish is Moka; near to Melinda, in the Indian ocean, in about three degrees south latitude. 3. That Ophir lies somewhere in the land of Sofala, or in the vicinity of the Zambese river, opposite the island of Madagascar, where there have been gold and silver mines in great abundance, from the remotest antiquity. And he proves—4. That no vessel could perform this voyage in less than three years, because of the Monsoons; that more time need not be employed; and that this is the precise time mentioned 1 Kings x. 22. 5. That this is the country of the queen of Sheba, or Sabia, or Azeba, who, on her visit to Solomon, brought him one hundred and twenty talents of gold; and of spices and precious stones great store, ver. 10. And that gold, ivory, silver, &c. are the natural productions of this country. To illustrate and prove his positions, he has given a map on a large scale, “showing the tract of Solomon’s fleet in their three years’ voyage from the Elanitic gulf to Ophir and Tharshish;” to which, and his description, I must refer the reader.

CHAPTER X.

The queen of Sheba visits Solomon, and brings rich presents; and tries him by hard questions, which he readily solves, 1-3. She expresses great surprise at his wisdom, his buildings, his court, &c.; and praises God for placing him on the Jewish throne, 4-9. She gives him rich presents, 10. What the navy of Hiram brought from Ophir, 11, 12. The queen of Sheba returns, 13. Solomon’s annual revenue, 14, 15. He makes two hundred targets, and three hundred shields of gold, 16, 17. His magnificent ivory throne, 18-20. His drinking vessels all of gold, 21. What the navy of Tharshish brought every three years to Solomon, 22. His great riches, numerous chariots, and horsemen, 23-27. He brings chariots and horses out of Egypt, 28, 29.

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 1. When the queen of Sheba heard] As our Lord calls her queen of the south, Matt. xii. 42. it is likely the name should be written Saba, Azab, or Azaba, all of which signify the south. She is called Balkis by the Arabians; but by the Abyssinians Maqueda. See the account at the end of this chapter.

With hard questions.] בְּחִידוֹת bechidoth; עֲשֵׂי פְּאֻזִּים, Septuagint, with riddles. With parables and riddles, says the Arabic. Those who contend that she was queen of the Sabæans, a people of Arabia Felix, toward the southern extremity of the Red sea, find several proofs of their opinion—1. That the Sabæans abounded in riches and spices.

India mittit ebur; molles sua thura Sabæi.

2. All ancient authors speak not only of their odoriferous woods, but of their rich gold and silver mines, and of their precious stones. See Pliny, Hist. Nat. lib. xxxvii. c. 6, &c.

3. It is also well known that the Sabæans had queens for their sovereigns, and not kings. So Claudian, in Entrop. lib. i.

By this is meant, says Mr. Bruce, the country between the Tropic and mountains of Abyssinia, the country of shepherds; from berber, a shepherd. And he contends that these Sabæans were a distinct people from the Æthio-

5 And the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel, and his cup-bearers, and his ascent by which he went up unto the house of the LORD; there was no more spirit in her.

6 And she said to the king, It was a true report that I heard in mine own land of thy acts, and of thy wisdom.

7 Howbeit I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, the half was not told me: thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard.

8 Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants, which stand conpians and the Arabs; and that SABA was a distinct state.

Verse 3. Solomon told her all her questions] Riddles, problems, fables, apologies, &c. formed the principal part of the wisdom of the East: indeed, they use and delight in them to the present day. See the case of Samson and his friends, Judges xiv. 12, 14. and the notes there.

And his ascent by which he went up] It seems very strange that the steps to the temple should be such a separate matter of astonishment. The original is וַתֵּרָא אֶת־עֵלָהּ בַּיָּמָהּ, which all the versions have translated, And the holocausts which he offered in the house of the Lord. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Chaldee, Syriac, and

Arabic, all express this sense: so does the German translation of Luther; from which, in this place, we have most pitifully departed: Und seine brand opfer die er in dem house des Herrn opferte; "And his burnt-offering which he offered in the house of the Lord."

There was no more spirit in her.] She was overpowered with astonishment; she fainted. I have seen precisely the same effect produced: a lady, who was herself an artist, viewing some, exquisitely finished oriental paintings, was so struck with astonishment, that she twice nearly fainted; and was obliged to leave the room. What happened to the queen of Sheba is a natural, and not an uncommon effect, which will be produced in a delicate, sensible mind, at the sight of rare and extraordinary productions of art.

Of the profusion of Solomon's sacrifices we have already had proof, chap. viii. 63. and ix. 25.

Verse 8. Happy are thy men] All these are very natural expressions from a person in her state of mind.

Verse 10. A hundred and twenty talents of gold] The worth of these one hundred and twenty talents of gold, according to Mr. Reynolds, is equal to 843,905*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* of our British sterling. But the spices and precious stones, might have been yet of more value. After this verse the 13th should be read, which is here most evidently misplaced; and then the account of the queen of Sheba will be concluded, and that of Solomon's revenue will stand without interruption.

asked] Some imagine she desired progeny from the wise king of Israel; and all the traditions concerning her state that she had a son by Solomon, called Menilek, who was brought up at the Israelitish court, succeeded his mother in the kingdom of Saba, and introduced among his subjects the Jewish religion. See at the end of the chapter.

Verse 11. Great plenty of almug trees] In the parallel place, 2 Chron. ix. 10, 11. these are called almug trees, the mem and the gimel being transposed: probably the latter is the most correct orthography. What the almug trees were, we do not exactly know. The Vulgate calls it ligna thyina, the thya or lignum-vitæ wood; and Mr. Parkhurst thinks that the original אלגומים algumim, comes from אל al, not, and גם gem, to fill; because the lignum-vitæ is of so close a texture that it can imbibe no water, and cannot be affected by wet weather. The Septuagint translate it ξύλα πυκνόν, pine timber; the Syriac ܕܐܡܘܓܐ amug kaisé dakisotho, probably cypress, wood; or what the translators render ligna brasitica. The Arabic translates coloured wood; and subjoins a paraphrase, for that wood was by nature painted with various colours. Perhaps the Arabic comes nearest the truth; wood shaded of different colours, such as the rose wood, and such like, which are brought to us from various parts of the East Indies. The whole passage, as it stands in the Arabic, is this: "And the ships of Hiram brought gold from the land of Hind, (India); and they carried also much coloured wood, (but this wood is naturally painted of various colours), and very precious jewels. And Solomon put some of that same painted wood which was brought to him, in the house of the Lord, and in his own house; and 19 The throne had six steps, and the top of the throne was round ^b behind: and there were ^c stays on either side on the place of the seat, and two lions stood beside the stays.

20 And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps: there was not ^d the like made in any kingdom.

21 ¶ ^e And all King Solomon's drinking vessels were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold; ^f none were of silver: it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

22 For the king had at sea a navy of ^g Tharshish with the navy of Hiram: once in three years came the navy of Tharshish, bringing gold, and silver, ^h ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

with it he adorned them." And for inlaying and veneering nothing can be finer than this wood.

Verse 14. The weight of gold—was six hundred threescore and six talents] This would amount, in our money, to 4,683,675*l.* 12*s.* 8½*d.* sterling. This seems to be what he got annually of bullion; but, independently of this, he had tribute of all the kings of Arabia, duties from merchantmen, and the traffic of spice-merchants. See ver. 25.

Verse 16. Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold] I have already conjectured that the תב tsinnah, might resemble the Highland targe, or target, with a dagger projecting from the umbo, or centre.

Verse 17. He made three hundred shields] The מגן magen, was a large shield, by which the whole body was protected.

Mr. Reynolds computes that the two hundred targets, on each of which was employed three hundred shekels of gold, were worth 28,131*l.* 16*s.* 9½*d.*

And the three hundred shields, in forming each of which three pounds of gold were employed, were worth 210,976*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.*

Verse 19. The throne was round behind; and there were stays on either side] This description seems to indicate that this throne was in the form of one of our ancient round-topped, two-armed chairs. This throne, or chair of state, was raised on a platform, the ascent to which consisted of six steps. What we call stays is in the Hebrew יָדוֹת yadoth, hands; which serves to confirm the conjecture above.

Verse 22. A navy of Tharshish.] For probable conjectures concerning this place, and the three years' voyage, see at the end of this and the preceding chapter.

23 So ¹ King Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom.

24 ¶ And all the earth ^b sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom, which God had put in his heart.

25 And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and garments, and armour, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year.

26 ¶ And Solomon ^m gathered together chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he bestowed in the cities for chariots, ⁱ Ch. 3. 12, 13. & 4. 30.—^k Heb. sought the face of.—^l Ch. 4. 25. 2 Chron. 1. 14. & 9. 25.—^m Deut. 17. 16.—ⁿ 2 Chron. 1. 15-17.—^o Heb. gave.

[Apes] כֹּפִיִּם kophim; probably a species of monkey rather than ape.

Verse 23. Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches.] Mr. Reynolds, stating the income of Solomon at about four times as much as his father left him, hence reckons that he had, each YEAR, 142,242,034*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*; each WEEK, 2,735,423*l.* 14*s.* 9½*d.*; and, each DAY, 390,770*l.* 16*s.* 4½*d.*; taking each day, week, and year, one with another.

Verse 25. They brought every man his present.] This means tribute; and it shows us of what sort that tribute was—viz. vessels of gold and silver, probably ingots; garments of very rich stuffs; armour, for little of this kind was ever made in Judea; spices, which doubtless sold well in that country; horses, which were very rare; and mules, the most necessary animal for all the purposes of life.

Verse 26. He had a thousand and four hundred chariots.] See the note on chap. iv. 26.

Verse 27. Made silver—as stones.] He de-stroyed its value by making it so exceedingly plenty.

[As the sycamore trees.] He planted many cedars, and doubtless had much cedar wood imported; so that it became as common as the sycamore trees, which appear to have grown there in great abundance. This is considered to be a tree that partakes of the nature of the fig tree, and of the mulberry. Of the former it has the fruit, and of the latter the leaves: that is, the fruit has a considerable resemblance to the fig, and the leaf to that of the mulberry tree; hence its name sycamore, from the Greek συκα, a fig, and μορεα, a mulberry tree.

Verse 28. Horses brought out of Egypt.] It is thought that the first people who used horses in war were the Egyptians; and it is well known that the nations who knew the use of this creature in battle, had greatly the advantage of those who did not. God had absolutely prohibited horses to be imported or used; but, in many things, Solomon paid little attention to the divine command.

[And linen yarn.] The original word מִקְוֶה mikveh, is hard to be understood, if it be not indeed a corruption.

and with the king at Jerusalem.

27 ¶ And the king ^o made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones, and cedars made he to be as the sycamore trees that are in the vale, for abundance.

28 ^p And ^r Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and ^s linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

29 And a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty: and so for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did they bring them out ^u by their means.

^p Deut. 17. 16. 2 Chron. 1. 16. & 9. 28.—^r Heb. And the going forth of the horses which was Solomon's.—^s Ezek. 27. 7.—^t Josh. 1. 4. 2 Kings 7. 6.—^u Heb. by their hand.

The versions are all puzzled with it: the Vulgate and Septuagint make it a proper name, "And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and from Coa, or Tekoa." Some think it signifies a tribute: thus Bochart: "They brought horses to Solomon out of Egypt; and, as to the tribute, the farmers of this prince received it at a price." They farmed the tribute, gave so much annually for it; taking the different kinds to themselves, and giving a round sum for the whole.

Some suppose that מִקְוֶה signifies the string or cord by which one horse's head is tied to the tail of another; and that the meaning is, Solomon brought droves of horses, thus tied, out of Egypt.

Rabbi Solomon Jarchi, in his comment on the parallel place, 2 Chron. i. 14. says, that מִקְוֶה mikveh, signifies a collection, or drove of horses; or, what the Germans call stutte, a stud. He observes on that place, "That he has heard that there was a company of merchants in Egypt, who bought horses from the Egyptians at a certain price, on condition that no person should be permitted to bring a horse out of Egypt but through them."

Houbigant supposes the place to be corrupt; and that, for מִקְוֶה mikveh, we should read מֶרְכָּבָה merchubah, chariots: "And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and chariots; and the king's merchants received the chariots at a price: and a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, &c." This makes a very good and consistent sense; but none of the versions acknowledge it; nor is there any various reading here in any of the MSS. yet collated.

If we understand it of thread, it may refer to the byssus, or fine flax, for which Egypt was famous: but I do not see on what authority we translate it linen thread. Bochart's opinion appears to me the most probable, as the text now stands; but the change contended for by Houbigant makes the text far more simple and intelligible.

Verse 29. A chariot came up—for six hundred shekels.] This was the ordinary price of a chariot, as a hundred and fifty shekels were for a horse.

[Kings of the Hittites] These must have been the remains of the original inhabitants of Canaan, who had gone to some other country, probably Syria, and formed themselves into a principality there. It seems that neither horses nor chariots came out of Egypt but by means of Solomon's servants.

Mr. Bruce's account of Solomon's voyage to Ophir:

"We are not to wonder, if the prodigious hurry and flow of business, and the immensely valuable transactions they had with each other, had greatly familiarized the Tyrians and Jews with their correspondents, the Cushites and shepherds, on the coast of Africa. This had gone so far as, very naturally, to create a desire in the queen of Azab, the sovereign of that country, to go herself and see the application of the immense treasures that had been exported from her country for a series of years; and the prince who so magnificently employed them. There can be no doubt of this expedition; as Pagan, Arab, Moor, Abyssinian, and all the countries round, vouch for it nearly in the terms of Scripture.

"Her name, the Arabs say, was Belkis; the Abyssinians, Maqueda. Our Saviour calls her Queen of the South, without mentioning any other name: but gives his sanction to the truth of the voyage. 'The queen of the South, (or Saba, or Azab,) shall rise up in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it, for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon, is here.' No other particulars, however, are mentioned about her in Scripture; and it is not probable that our Saviour would have said she came from the uttermost parts of the earth, if she had been an Arab, and had near fifty degrees of the continent behind her. But, when we consider that the boundaries of the known land to the southward were, at that time, Raptum, or Prassum, as we have just seen, these being the uttermost parts of the known earth, were, with great propriety, so styled by our Saviour; and of these she was undoubtedly sovereign. The gold, the myrrh, cassia, and frankincense, were all the produce of her own country.

"Whether she was a Jewess or a Pagan is uncertain. Sabaism was the religion of all the East; it was the constant attendant and stumbling-block of the Jews: but, considering the multitude of that people, then trading from Jerusalem, and the long time it continued, it is not improbable she was a Jewess. 'And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, concerning the name of the Lord, she came to prove him with hard questions,' 1 Kings x. 1. 2 Chron. ix. 1. Our Saviour, moreover, speaks of her with praise, pointing her out as an example to the Jews. And in her thanksgiving before Solomon, she alludes to God's blessing on the seed of Israel for ever; which is by no means the language of a Pagan, but of a person skilled in the ancient history of this nation.

"She likewise appears to have been a person of learning, and of that sort of learning which was then almost peculiar to Palestine, not to Ethiopia; for we know that one of the reasons of her coming was to examine whether Solomon was really the learned man he was said to be.

She came to try him in allegories, or parables, in which Nathan had instructed him.

"The annals of the Abyssinians, being very full upon this point, have taken a middle opinion, and by no means an improbable one. They say she was a Pagan when she left Azab; but, being full of admiration at Solomon's works, she was converted to Judaism in Jerusalem, and bore him a son, whom he called Menilek, and who was their first king.

"The Abyssinians, both Jews and Christians, believe the xlvth psalm to be a prophecy of the queen's voyage to Jerusalem; that she was attended by a daughter of Hiram's from Tyre to Jerusalem; and that the last part of it contains a declaration of her having a son by Solomon, who was to be a king over a nation of the Gentiles.

"To Saba, or Azab, then, she returned with her son Menilek; whom, after keeping him some years, she sent back to his father to be instructed. Solomon did not neglect his charge; and he was anointed and crowned king of Ethiopia, in the temple of Jerusalem; and, at his inauguration, took the name of David. After this he returned to Azab, and brought with him a colony of Jews, among whom were many doctors of the law of Moses, particularly one of each tribe, to make judges of in his kingdom; from whom the present umbares, or supreme judges, (three of whom always attended the king,) are said and believed to be descended. With these came also Azarias, the son of Zadok the priest, and brought with him a Hebrew transcript of the law, which was delivered into his custody, as he bore the title of nebet, or high priest; and this charge, though the book itself was burnt with the church of Axum, in the Moorish war of Adel, is still continued, as it is said, in the lineage of Azarias, who are *nebet*s, or keepers of the church of Axum at this day. All Abyssinia was thereupon converted, and the government of the church and state modelled according to what was then in use at Jerusalem.

"By the last act of the queen of Saba's reign, she settled the mode of succession in her country for the future: First, she enacted that the crown should be hereditary in the family of Solomon for ever. Secondly, that, after her, no woman should be capable of wearing that crown, or being queen; but that it should descend to the heir male, however distant, in exclusion of all heirs female, however near; and that these two articles should be considered as the fundamental laws of the kingdom, never to be altered or abolished. And, lastly, that the heirs male of the royal house should always be sent prisoners to a high mountain, where they were to continue till their death, or till the succession should open to them.

"The queen of Saba, having made these laws irrevocable by all her posterity, died, after a long reign of forty years, in 986 before Christ, placing her son Menilek upon the throne, whose posterity, the annals of Abyssinia would teach us to believe, have ever since reigned. So far, indeed, we must bear witness to them, that this is no new doctrine, but has been steadfastly and uniformly maintained from their earliest account of time; first, when Jews, then in later days, after they embraced Christianity. We may farther add, that the testimony of all the neighbouring nations is with them upon this subject, whether friends or enemies. They only differ in the name of the queen, or in giving her two names.

"I shall, therefore, now give a list of their kings of the race of Solomon, descended from the queen of Saba, whose device is a lion passant, proper, upon a field gules; and their motto, Mo Anbasa am Nizilet Solomon am Negadé Juda; which signifies 'The lion of the race of Solomon and tribe of Judah hath overcome.'"

CHAPTER XI.

Solomon's attachment to strange women, and consequent idolatry, 1, 2. Number of his wives and concubines, 3. In his old age they turn away his heart from God, 4. He builds temples to idols, burns incense, and sacrifices to them, 5-8. The Lord is angry with him, and threatens to deprive him of the kingdom, but will leave one tribe for David's sake, 9-13. The Lord stirs up Hadad the Edomite, to be his enemy; the history of this man, 14-22. He stirs up another adversary against him, Rezon, the son of Eliadah. He and Hadad plague Israel, 23-25. Jeroboam also becomes his enemy, and the reason why, 26-28. Ahijah, the prophet, meets Jeroboam, and promises, in the name of the Lord, that God will rend Israel from the family of Solomon, and give him ten tribes, 29-39. Solomon hearing of this, seeks to put Jeroboam to death, who escapes to Egypt, where he continues till the death of Solomon, 40. Solomon dies, after having reigned over Israel forty years; and his son Rehoboam reigns in his stead, 41-43.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. Many strange women] That is, idolaters: — together with the daughter of Pharaoh; she was also one of those strange women, and an idolater; but many think she became a proselyte to the Jewish religion. Of this there is no evidence.

Verse 3. He had seven hundred wives, princesses] How he could get so many of the blood royal from the different surrounding nations is astonishing: but, probably, the daughters of noblemen, generals, &c. may be included.

And three hundred concubines] These were wives of the second rank, who were taken according to the usages of those times: but their offspring could not inherit. Sarah was to Abraham, what these seven hundred princesses were to Solomon; and the three hundred concubines stood in the same relation to the Israelitish king, as Hagar and Keturah did to the patriarch.

Here then are one thousand wives to form this

Mr. Bruce justly finds fault with this table as being defective: several kings must necessarily have been lost out of this list. It is, probably, a late invention, the ancient genealogical tables having been lost or destroyed; and no wonder, when we consider the numerous predatory wars in which the people of Abyssinia have been frequently engaged.

I need scarcely add, that the very learned Samuel Bochart has endeavoured to prove by arguments not to be despised, that the Scripture Ophir is the island Taprobanes, or Serendib; now called Ceylon. With any other opinions on this subject I think it unnecessary to trouble the reader. That the voyage which Mr. Bruce describes would take up three years, I think he has satisfactorily proved: but on other points and resemblances many readers will doubtless hesitate; while some may suppose his theory is the most plausible of any yet offered to the public on this very obscure subject. Bruce's Travels, vol. ii. p. 395.

3 And he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines: and his wives turned away his heart.

4 For it came to pass, when Solomon was old, ^e that his wives turned away his heart after other gods; and his ^f heart was not perfect with the LORD his God, ^g as was the heart of David his father.

5 For Solomon went after ^h Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zidonians, and great bad man's haram! Was it possible that such a person could have any piety to God, who was absorbed by such a number of women? We scarcely allow a man to have the fear of God, who has a second wife or mistress: in what state then must the man be who had one thousand of them? We may endeavour to excuse all this by saying, "It was a custom in the East to have a multitude of women; and that there were many of those whom Solomon never saw." &c. &c. But was there any of them whom he might not have seen? Was it for reasons of state, or merely court splendour, that he had so many? How then is it said, that he loved many strange women? — that he clave to them in love? And did he not give them the utmost proofs of his attachment, when he not only tolerated their iniquitous worship in the land, but built temples to their idols; and, more, burnt incense to them himself? As we should not condemn what God justifies; so we should not justify what God condemns.

He seems to have gone as far in iniquity as it was possible.

Verse 7. The hill that is before Jerusalem] This was the mount of Olives.

Verse 9. The Lord was angry with Solomon] Had not this man's delinquency been strongly marked by the divine disapprobation, it would have had a fatal effect on the morals of mankind. Vice is vice, no matter who commits it. And God is as much displeased with sin in Solomon, as he can be with it in the most profligate, uneducated wretch. And although God sees the same sin in precisely the same degree of moral turpitude, as to the act itself, yet there may be circumstances which greatly aggravate the offence, and subject the offender to greater punishment. Solomon was wise; he knew better: his understanding showed him the vanity, as well as the wickedness, of idolatry. God had appeared unto him twice; and thus given him the most direct proof of his being, and of his providence. The promises of God had been fulfilled to him in the most remarkable manner; and in such a way, as to prove that they came by a divine counsel, and not by any kind of casualty. All these were aggravations of Solomon's crimes, as to their demerit, for the same crime has, in every case, the same degree of moral turpitude in the sight of God: but circumstances may so aggravate, as to require the offender to be more grievously punished; so the punishment may be legally increased where the crime is the same. Solomon deserved more punishment for his worship of Ashtaroth than any of the Sidonians did, though they performed precisely the same acts. —The Sidonians had never known the true God; Solomon had been fully acquainted with him.

Verse 11. Forasmuch as this is done of thee] Was not this another warning from the Lord? And might not Solomon have yet recovered himself? Was there not mercy in this message, which he might have sought and found?

Verse 13. Will give one tribe—for David my servant's sake] The line of the Messiah must be preserved. The prevailing Lion must come out of the tribe of Judah: not only the tribe must be preserved, but the regal line, and the regal right. All this must be done for the true David's sake: and this was undoubtedly what God had in view by thus miraculously preserving the tribe of Judah, and the royal line, in the midst of so general a defection.

And for Jerusalem's sake] As David was a type of the Messiah, so was Jerusalem a type of the true church: therefore, the old Jerusalem must be preserved in the hands of the tribe of Judah, till the true David should establish the new Jerusalem in the same land, and in the same city. And what a series of providences did it require to do all these things!

Verse 14. The Lord stirred up an adversary] A Satan, per. When he sent to Hiram to assist him in building the temple of the Lord, he could say, There was no Satan, see chap. v. 4. And all his kingdom was in peace and security; every man dwelt under his vine, and under his fig tree, chap. iv. 25; but now that he had turned away from God, three Satans rise up against him at once, Hadad, Rezon, and Jero-boam.

Verse 15. Was gone up to bury the slain] The slain Edomites; for Joab had in the course of six months exterminated all the males, except Hadad and his servants, who escaped to Egypt. Instead of bury the slain, the Targum has it, to take the spoils of the slain.

Verse 18. They arose out of Midian] They at first retired to Midian, which lay to the southwest of the Dead sea. Not supposing themselves in safety there, they went afterward to Paran, in the south of Idumæa; and getting a number of persons to join them in Paran, they went straight to Egypt, where we find Hadad became a favourite with Pharaoh, who gave him his sister-in-law to wife; and incorporated him and his family with his own.

Verse 22. Let me go in any wise.] It does not appear that he avowed his real intention to Pharaoh: for at this time there must have been peace between Israel and Egypt; Solomon having married the daughter of Pharaoh.

Verse 23. Rezon the son of Eliadah] Thus God fulfilled his threatening by the prophet Nathan; If he commit iniquity I will chasten him with the rod of men; and with the stripes of the children of men, 2 Sam. vii. 14.

Verse 24. And reigned in Damascus] Rezon was one of the captains of Hadadezer, whom David defeated. It seems that, at this time, behold, thou seekest to go to thine own country? and he answered, ^cNothing: howbeit let me go in any wise.

23 ¶ And God stirred him up another adversary, Rezon the son of Eliadah, which fled from his lord ^dHadadezer king of Zobah:

24 And he gathered men unto him, and became captain over a band, ^ewhen David slew them of Zobah: and they went to Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.

25 And he was an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon, besides the mischief that Hadad did: and he abhorred Israel, and reigned over Syria.

Rezon escaped with his men; and having lived, as is supposed, some time by plunder, he seized on Damascus, and reigned there, till David took Damascus, when he subdued Syria, and drove out Rezon. But after Solomon's defection from God, Rezon, finding that God had departed from Israel, recovered Damascus; and joining with Hadad, harassed Solomon during the remaining part of his reign. But some think that Hadad and Rezon were the same person.

Verse 26. Jeroboam the son of Nebat] From the context we learn, that Jeroboam, while a young man, was employed by Solomon to superintend the improvements and buildings at Millo; and had so distinguished himself there by his industry and good conduct, as to attract general notice, and to induce Solomon to set him over all the labourers employed in that work, belonging to the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, called here the house of Joseph. At first it appears that Solomon employed none of the Israelites in any drudgery: but it is likely that, as he grew profane, he grew tyrannical and oppressive; and, at the works of Millo, he changed his conduct; and there, in all probability, were the seeds of disaffection sown. And Jeroboam, being a clever and enterprising man, knew 33 ^p Because that they have forsaken me, and have worshipped Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, Chemosh the god of the Moabites; and Milcom the god of the children of Ammon, and have not walked in my ways, to do that which is right in mine eyes, and to keep my statutes and my judgments, as did David his father.

Verse 29. When Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem] On what errand he was going out of Jerusalem we know not.

Ahijah the Shilonite] He was one of those who wrote the history of the reign of Solomon, as we find from 2 Chron. ix. 29; and it is supposed that it was by him God spake twice to Solomon; and particularly delivered the message which we find in this chapter, ver. 11—13.

Verse 31. Take thee ten pieces] The garment was the symbol of the kingdom of Israel; the twelve pieces the symbol of the twelve tribes; the ten pieces, given to Jeroboam, of the ten tribes which should be given to him, and afterward form the kingdom of Israel, ruling in Samaria, to distinguish it from the kingdom of Judah, ruling in Jerusalem.

Verse 36. That David my servant may have a light alway] That his posterity may never fail, and the regal line never become extinct. This, as we have already seen, was in reference to the Messiah. He was not only David's light, but he was a light to enlighten the Gentiles.

Verse 39. According to all that thy soul desireth] It appears from this that Jeroboam had afflicted the kingdom, and was seeking for an opportunity to seize on the government. God now tells him by his prophet, what he shall have, and what he shall not have; in order to prevent him from attempting to seize on the whole kingdom, to the prejudice of the spiritual seed of David.

Verse 38. And build thee a sure house] He would have continued his posterity on the throne of Israel, had he not, by his wickedness, forfeited the promises of God, and thrown himself out of the protection of the Most High.

Verse 39. But not for ever] They shall be in affliction and distress till the Messiah come; who shall sit on the throne of David, to order it and establish it in judgment and justice for ever. Jarchi says, on this verse, When the Messiah comes, the kingdom shall be restored to the house of David.

Verse 40. Sought—to kill Jeroboam] He thought by this means to prevent the punishment due to his crimes.

book of the acts of Solomon?

time we meet with the proper name of an Egyptian king; Pharaoh being the common name for all the sovereigns of that country. Some suppose that this Shishak was the Sesostris, so renowned for his wars and his conquests. But it is likely that this king lived long before Solomon's time.

Verse 41. The book of the acts of Solomon] These acts were written by Nathan the prophet, Ahijah the Shilonite, and Iddo the seer; as we learn from 2 Chron. ix. 29. Probably from these were the books of Kings and Chronicles composed: but the original documents are long since lost.

Verse 42. Solomon reigned—forty years.] Josephus says four score years; which is sufficiently absurd. Calmet supposes him to have been eighteen years old when he came to the throne; and that he died, A. M. 3029, aged fifty-eight years: and, when we consider the excess in which he lived, and the criminal passions which he must have indulged among his thousand wives, and their idolatrous and impure worship, this life was as long as could be reasonably expected.

Verse 43. Solomon slept with his fathers] He died in almost the flower of his age; and, it appears, unregretted. His government was no blessing to Israel; and laid, by its exactions and oppressions, the foundation of that schism which was so fatal to the unhappy people of Israel and Judah: and was the most powerful procuring cause of the miseries which have fallen upon the Jewish people from that time until now.

I. It may be now necessary to give a more distinct outline of the character of this king.

1. In his infancy and youth he had the high honour of being peculiarly loved by the Lord; and he had a name given him by the express authority of God himself; which, to himself and others, must ever call to remembrance this peculiar favour of the Most High.

There is little doubt that he was a most amiable youth; and his whole conduct appeared to justify the high expectations that were formed of him.

2. He ascended the Israelitish throne at a time the most favourable for the cultivation of those arts so necessary to the comfort and improvement of life. Among all the surrounding nations, Israel had not one open enemy: there was neither adversary nor evil occurrent, 1 Kings v. 4. He had rest on every side; and, from the universal and profound peace which he enjoyed, the very important name Jedidiah, "beloved of the Lord," which was given him by divine authority, was changed to that of Solomon, the peaceable, 2 Sam. xii. 24, 25. which at once indicated the state of the country, and the character of his own mild, pacific mind.

3. To the dying charge of his pious father, relative to the building a temple for the Lord,

43^a And Solomon slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father: and Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead.

he paid the most punctual attention. He was fond of architecture, as we may learn from the account that is given of his numerous buildings and improvements: and yet it does not appear that he at all excelled in architectural knowledge. Hiram, the amiable king of Tyre, and his excellent workmen, were the grand directors and executors of the whole. By his public buildings he doubtless rendered Jerusalem highly respectable; but his passion for such works was not, on the whole, an advantage to his subjects, as it obliged him to have recourse to a burdensome system of taxation; which at first oppressed and exasperated his people, and ultimately led to the fatal separation of Israel and Judah.

4. That he improved the trade and commerce of his country is sufficiently evident: by his public buildings vast multitudes were employed; and knowledge in the most beneficial arts must have been greatly increased, and the spirit of industry highly cultivated.

Commerce does not appear to have been much regarded, if even known, in Israel, previously to the days of Solomon. The most celebrated maritime power then in the world was that of the Tyrians. With great address and prudence he availed himself of their experience and commercial knowledge; sent his ships, in company with theirs, to make long and dangerous but lucrative voyages; and, by getting their sailors aboard of his own vessels, he gained possession of their nautical skill; and also a knowledge of those safe ports in which they harboured, and of the rich countries with which they traded. His friendly alliance with the king of Tyre was a source of advantage to Israel; and might have been much more so, had it been prudently managed. But, after the time of Solomon, we find it scarcely mentioned; and therefore it does not appear that the Jews continued to follow a track which had been so successfully opened to them: their endless contentions, and the ruinous wars of the two kingdoms, paralyzed all their commercial exertions; till, at length, all the maritime skill which they had acquired from the expert and industrious Tyrians dwindled down to the puny art of managing a few boats on the internal lakes of their own country. Had it not been for the destructive feuds that reigned between the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah, that country might have become one of the best and richest maritime powers of either Asia or Europe. Their situation was grand and commanding; but their execrable jealousies deprived them of its advantages, exposed them to the aggressions of their enemies, and finally brought them to ruin.

5. That Solomon was truly pious in his youth there can be no doubt: it was on this account that the Lord loved him; and his zeal in the cause of true religion, and high respect for the honour of God, are strong indications of such a frame of mind. Had we no other proof of this than his prayer for wisdom, and his prayer at the dedication of the temple, it would put the matter for ever beyond dispute; independently of the direct testimonies we have from God himself on the subject. He loved the worship and ordinances of God; and was a pattern to his subjects in the strictest attention to religious duties. He even exceeded the requisitions of the law, in the multitude of his sacrifices; and was a careful observer of those annual festivals so necessary to preserve the memory of the principal facts of the Israelitish history, and those miraculous interventions of God in the behalf of that people.

6. There can be no doubt that Solomon possessed the knowledge of governing well: of the importance of this knowledge he was duly aware; and this was the wisdom that he so particularly sought from God. "I am," said he, "but a little child; I know not how to go out or come in; and thy servant is in the midst of a great people that cannot be counted for multitude. Give, therefore, thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people; and that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people? And the speech pleased the Lord, that Solomon had asked this thing," 1 Kings iii. 8—10. This wisdom he did receive from God; and he is here a pattern to all kings, who, as they are the viceregents of the Lord, should earnestly seek that wisdom which is, from above, that they may be able to know how to govern the people intrusted to their care; because, in every civil government, there are a multitude of things on which a king may be called to decide, concerning which neither the laws, nor the commonly received political maxims by which, in particular cases, the conduct of a governor is to be regulated, can give any specific direction.

7. But the wisdom of Solomon was not confined to the art of government: he appears to have possessed a universal knowledge. The sages of the East were particularly distinguished by their accurate knowledge of human nature; from which they derived innumerable maxims for the regulation of man in every part of his moral conduct, and in all the relations in which he could possibly be placed. Hence their vast profusion of maxims, proverbs, instructive fables, apologues, enigmas, &c.; great collections of which still remain locked up in the languages of Asia, particularly the Sanscrit, Arabic, and Persian; besides those which, by the industry of learned men, have been translated and published in the languages of Europe. Much of this kind appears in the books of Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus in the Apocrypha; and in the very excellent collections of D'Hérbelot, Visdelou, and Galand, in the Bibliothèque Orientale. That Solomon possessed this wisdom in a very high degree, the Book of Proverbs bears ample testimony; leaving Ecclesiastes, for the present out of the consideration.

8. As a poet, Solomon stands deservedly high; though of his one thousand and five poems, not one, except the Book of Canticles, remains. This ode alone, taken in a literary point of view, is sufficient to raise any man to a high degree of poetic fame. It is a most interesting drama; where, what Racine terms the génie créateur, the creative genius, every where appears: in which the imagery, which is always borrowed from nature, is impressive and sublime; the characters accurately distinguished and defined; the strongest passion, in its purest and most vigorous workings, elegantly portrayed; and in which allusions, the most delicate, to transactions of the tenderest complexion, while sufficiently described to make them intelligible, are nevertheless hidden from the eye of the gross vulgar, by a tissue as light as a gossamer covering. Such is the nature of this inimitable ode; which, had it not been perverted by weak but well-designing men to purposes to which it can never legitimately apply, would have ranked with the highest productions of the Epithalamian kind that ever came from the pen of man. But, alas! for this exquisite poem; its true sense has been perverted; it has been forced to speak a language that was never intended, a language far from being honourable to the cause which it was brought to support, and subversive of the unity and simplicity of the ode itself. By a forced mode of interpretation, it has been hackneyed to death; and allegorized to destruction. It is now little read, owing to the injudicious manner in which it has been interpreted.

It was scarcely to be expected that the son of such a father should not, independently of inspiration, have caught a portion of the pure poetic fire. Though the spirit of poetry, strictly speaking, is not transmissible by ordinary generation, yet most celebrated poets have had poetical parents: but, in many cases, the talent has degenerated into that of music; and the spirit of poetry in the sire has become a mere musical instrument in the hands of the son. This, however, was not the case with the son of David; for, though vastly inferior to his father in this gift, he had nevertheless the spirit and powers of a first-rate poet.

9. His knowledge in natural history must have been very extensive: it is said, "He spake of trees, from the cedar that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall. He spake also of beasts, of fowls, of reptiles, and of fishes," 1 Kings iv. 33. All this knowledge has perished: his countrymen, the prophets excepted, were without taste, and took no pains to preserve what they did not relish. A man of such mental power and comprehension, under the direction of divine light, must have spoken of things as they are: his doctrine, therefore, of generation and corruption, of nutrition, vegetation, production, elements, tribes, classes, families, and habits, relative to the different subjects in botany, zoology, ornithology, entomology, and ichthyology, which are all evidently referred to here, must have been at once correct, instructive, and delightful. I have already lamented the labour it has cost our Rays, Tourneforts, Linnés, Buffons, Willoughbys, Swammerdams, and Bloschs, to regain those sciences which possibly were possessed in their highest degrees by the Israelitish king; and which, alas! are all lost, except a few traces in the Book of Ecclesiastes; if that work can be traced to so remote an age as that of Solomon.

10. As a moral philosopher the author of the Book of Ecclesiastes occupies no mean rank. At present we may consider this work as a production of Solomon, though this is disputed; and the question shall be considered in its proper place. This book contains such a fund of wisdom, applied to the regulation of life, and all referred to the proper end, that it most deservedly occupies a high place in Biblical ethics; and deserves the closest attention of every reader.

11. The proofs of Solomon's vast wisdom, as brought into practical effect, lie in a very small compass, because his history in the Bible is short; his own writings, in general, lost; and the annals of his reign, as compiled by Nathan the prophet, Ahijah the Shilonite, and Iddo the seer, long since perished. The decision between the two harlots is almost the only instance.

Of his interesting interview with the queen of Sheba, and the discussions into which they entered, we have only the fact stated, without the least detail of particulars. Those who have read the Concessus of Hariri, or the Heetopadesa of Veshnoo Sarma, will regret that the conversations of the wisest of men, with probably the most intelligent of women, should have been lost to the world; which may be reasonably concluded to have been as far superior to the excellent works above referred to, as they are beyond the maxims of Rochefoucauld, and the sayings of Madame Maintenon.

12. The wisdom of the East has been ever celebrated; and, if we may believe their own best writers, much of what they possess has been derived from Solomon! Encomiums of his wisdom are every where to be met with in the Asiatic writers; and his name is famous in every part of the East. Most of the oriental historians, poets, and philosophers, mention Soliman ben Daoud, "Solomon, the son of David." They relate that he ascended the throne of Israel at the death of his father, when he was only twelve years of age; and that God subjected to his government not only men, but good and evil spirits, the fowls of the air, and the winds of heaven. They agree with the sacred writers in stating that he employed seven years in building the temple at Jerusalem.

Solomon's seal, and Solomon's ring are highly celebrated by them; and to which they attribute a great variety of magical effects. They state that, without his ring, he had not the science of government; and, having once lost it, he did not remount his throne for forty days, as being destitute of that wisdom without which he could not decide according to truth and equity. But these things are probably spoken allegorically by their oldest writers. Of the throne of this prince they speak in terms of the most profound admiration: I have met with the most minute description of its magnificence, its ivory, gold, and jewels; and an estimate of its cost in lacs of rupees! According to these writers it had 12,000 seats of gold on the right hand, for patriarchs and prophets; and as many on the left, for the doctors of the law, who assisted him in the distribution of justice.

In various parts of the Koran Solomon is spoken of in terms of the highest respect, and is represented as a true believer; though, through the envy of demons, magic and sorcery were attributed to him. Mohammed speaks of this in the second surat of his Koran. The story, in sum, is this: The devils, by God's permission, having tempted Solomon without success, made use of the following stratagem to blast his reputation: they wrote several books of magic, and hid them under his throne; and, after his death, told the chief men that if they wished to know by what means Solomon had obtained absolute dominion over men, genii, and the winds, they should dig under his throne. This they did, and found the aforesaid books full of impious superstitions. The better sort would not learn these incantations: but the common people did, and published them as the genuine works of Solomon. From this imputation the Koran justifies him, by saying, Solomon was not an unbeliever, surat 2. From the wonder-working signet and ring of the Asiatics came the clavicle of Solomon, so celebrated among the Jewish rabbins, and the Christian occult philosophers: for such things, found in Cornelius Agrippa, and such like writers, are not late inventions, but have descended from a very remote antiquity, as the Koran, and the various commentators on it, sufficiently prove. See Calmet and Sale.

The oriental traditions concerning this prince have been embodied in the Soliman Nameh of Ferdowsy, in Persian; and in the Soliman Nameh of Uscobi, in Turkish. D'Herbelot mentions one of these histories in Persian verse, containing 1571 couplets.

Indeed, the traditions concerning the wonderful knowledge of Solomon, which abound so much in the East, are, at least, an indirect proof that many things relative to this prince have been preserved among them which are not mentioned in our sacred books; but which they have blended so miserably with fables that it is impossible now to distinguish the precious from the vile.

Works attributed to Solomon have existed in different ages, from his time till the present. Eusebius states that Hezekiah, finding the Jews putting too much confidence in the books of Solomon, relative to cures and different occult arts, ordered them to be suppressed. Josephus positively says, that Solomon did compose books of charms, to cure diseases; and conjunctions to expel demons, Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2. He states farther, that a Jew, named Eliezar, cured several demoniacs in the presence of Vespasian, by reciting the charms which had been invented by Solomon. R. D. Kimchi speaks of a book of Solomon, entitled The Cure of Diseases, which Genebrard supposes to be the same work of which Josephus speaks. And Origen speaks of conjurations which were used by the Jews in his time, and which they professed to derive from the books of Solomon.

There are still extant books of this kind attributed to Solomon: such as The Enchantments, The Clavicle, The Ring, The Pygromantia, The New Moons, and The Shadows of Ideas; but these, as they now stand, are the inventions of quacks and impostors, and entitled to no regard. If there were any books containing the wisdom of Solomon, they are either irrecoverably lost, or exist in mutilated fragments among the Eastern sages; and are disfigured by being connected with improbable tales, and pretended mantras or charms.

II. Hitherto we have looked only at the bright side of Solomon's character; we must now take a much less satisfactory view of this singular man: one in whom every thing great, glorious, wise, and holy; and every thing little, mean, foolish, and impious, predominated by turns. He forsook the God of his mercies in a great variety of ways.

1. Whatever may be thought of the step, in a political point of view, he most assuredly went out of the way of God's providence, and acted contrary to his law, in making affinity with Pharaoh's daughter. The sacred writers frequently refer to this; and it is never mentioned with approbation; it is rather associated with circumstances that place it in a reprehensible point of view. She was doubtless an idolater; and the question of her becoming a proselyte, is far from being satisfactorily settled. I believe she was the first means of drawing off his heart from the true God.

2. His expensive buildings, obliging him to have recourse to a system of oppressive taxation, was another flaw in his character. Though with great zeal, and honourable industry, and at great expense, he built a temple for the Lord, which he completed in seven years; yet the expense here was little in comparison of what was incurred by his own house, called the house of the forest of Lebanon, in which he spent incredible sums, and consumed nearly thirteen years; almost twice the time employed in building the temple at Jerusalem. This would have had no evil operation, provided he had not been obliged to impose heavy taxes on his subjects, which produced an almost universal disaffection. Add to this, he had a most expensive household: one thousand women, part wives, part mistresses, would require immense riches to support their pomp, and gratify their ambition. The people, therefore, justly complained of an establishment, which, notwithstanding the riches brought into the country, must be both odious and oppressive.

3. He began his reign by an inauspicious act, the death of his brother Adonijah. This was a sin against God and nature; and no art of man can ever wash out its guilt. If state policy required it, which is very questionable, what had that to do with the feelings of humanity, and the love of God. On no pretence whatever is Solomon justified in this act.

4. His inordinate love of women:—he had no doubt formed matrimonial alliances with all kingdoms and neighbouring states, by taking their sisters and daughters to be his wives, to the fearful amount of no less than seven hundred! Politicians may endeavour to justify these acts by asserting that, in the Eastern countries, they were matters of a sound policy, rather than an argument of the prevalence of an irregular and unbridled passion. Let this stand for its value:—but what can such apologists say for the additional three hundred concubines, for the taking of whom no such necessity can be pleaded? But even allowing that state policy might require such extensive alliances, what are we to say to the flagrant breaches of a most positive law of God? Most solemnly and most authoritatively had he said that his people should not give their daughters to the heathen, nor take the daughters of the heathen to be their wives; lest they should turn their hearts away from serving the Lord. In the face of this most positive declaration, Solomon took wives of the most idolatrous of the surrounding nations: who succeeded, according to what was foretold, in turning his heart away from God.

5. He became an idolater:—he worshipped Ashtaroth, the Venus of the Sidonians; Milcom, the abomination of the Ammonites; Chemosh, the abomination of the Moabites; and Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon." He did more; he built a temple to each of these; "and to all the gods of all his strange wives, which burned incense, and sacrificed unto their gods," chap. xi. 5—8.

6. By this time we may suppose that the light of God had entirely departed from his mind. He who knew so well the true God, now served him not; or, if he did, it was in conjunction with those idols; thus bringing the Supreme Being on a level with demons, or the figments of impure hearts and disordered fancies. We need not wonder at the tale of the mighty Samson, betraying his life's secret in the lap of Delilah; or of the unconquerable Hercules, handling the distaff among the maids of Omphale, queen of Lydia; when we see the son of David, the once well-beloved of the Lord, the wisest of human beings, for the love of his millenary of wives and concubines, erecting temples to devils, and burning incense to them that were no gods; not considering that an idol is nothing in the world. To what an indescribable state of blindness and fatuity must this man have been brought before he could have been capable of such acts as these! O Lucifer, son of the morning, how art thou fallen!

7. I have already hinted that Solomon's oppressive taxation laid the foundation of that discontent which, shortly after his death, produced the separation of Israel and Judah; also the long and ruinous wars which drenched these states in blood: and was doubtless the cause that ten-twelfths of the Jewish people became idolaters; which crime was punished by the just judgments of God, by the Babylonish captivity, which lasted seventy years; and by the carrying away of the ten Israelitish tribes by the Assyrians, who are lost from the map of the universe, and no longer numbered among the children of men!

8. What greatly aggravates the whole of this most dismal tale is, that this strange defection from God, truth, reason, and common sense, was persisted in to his old age; or, that in his old age, meaning undoubtedly, his latter days, his wives turned away his heart from God. But his idolatry must have been of many years standing; he meddled with it in his connexion with the princess of Egypt; each of his idolatrous wives in succession increased the propensity: to chastise him for this very idolatry, the Lord stirred up an adversary unto him, Hadaad the Edomite, and Rezon the son of Eliadah, who was an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon, 1 Kings xi. 14—25; which surely intimates that this idolatry was not the sin merely of his old age; as, to chastise him for it, Rezon was an adversary to Israel all his days. And, as Solomon reigned forty years, we may fairly presume that a principal part of that time was spent in idolatrous practices.

9. This dismal account has a more dismal close still; for, in the same place in which we are informed of his apostasy, we are informed of his death; without the slightest intimation that he ever repented and turned to God. It is true, that what is wanting in fact, is supplied by conjecture; for it is firmly believed that "he did repent, and wrote the Book of Ecclesiastes after his conversion, which is a decided proof of his repentance." I am sorry that I cannot strengthen this opinion; of which I find not the shadow of a proof. 1. The Book of Ecclesiastes, though it speaks much of the vanity of the creature; yet speaks little or nothing of the vanity or sin of idolatry. 2. It is not the language of a man who was recovering from a state of the most awful backsliding. -Is there any direct confession of sin in it? Is there any thing in it like the penitential confessions of his father? or like the lamentations of Jeremiah? Is there any where to be heard in it the sighing of a broken heart, or strong crying and tears to deprecate the justice, and implore the mercy, of a deeply offended God? Does it any where exhibit the language of a penitent, or expressions suitable to the state and circumstances of this supposed penitent king of Israel? Excellent as it is of its kind, is it any thing more than a valuable collection of experimental ethics, relative to the emptiness of the creature; and the folly of earthly pursuits, and worldly anxieties? 3. Nor is it even past doubt that Solomon wrote this book; it certainly does, in several places, bear evidences of times posterior to those of Solomon. Eminent scholars have discerned a deterioration in the style from the pure classical Hebrew; with an admixture of exotic terms, that did not exist in the Hebrew language, previously to the Babylonish captivity. But supposing that they are mistaken here, I still contend that it is not the language of a penitent soul. 4. It has been supposed, that as Solomon was a type of Christ, it is not likely that he has finally perished. To this I answer—1. I know not that Solomon was a type of Christ. The reference to Cant. iii. 7. viii. 11, 12. is to me no proof whatever of the point. 2. Were it even otherwise, this would be no proof of his repentance, when the Scriptures are silent on the subject. The brazen serpent was a type of Christ, John iii. 14. and was held in great veneration for a considerable time among the Jews; but when it became an incitement to idolatry, it was called nehushtan, a brazen trifle, taken down, and destroyed, 2 Kings xviii. 4. Typical persons, and typical things, may perish as well as others. The antitype alone will infallibly remain. Finally, there seems every evidence that he died in his sins. His crimes were greatly aggravated: he forsook the Lord, who had appeared unto him twice; his wives turned away his heart, in his old age: there is not a single testimony in the Old or New Testament that intimates he died in a safe state. That awful denunciation of divine justice stands pointblank in the way of all contrary suppositions: "If thou forsake the Lord, he will cast thee off for ever," 1 Chron. xxviii. 9. He did forsake the Lord; and he forsook him in his very last days; and there is no evidence that he ever again clave to him. Ergo,—

Reader, let him that standeth take heed lest he fall; not only foully, but finally. Certainly, unconditional final perseverance will find little support in the case of Solomon. He was once most incontrovertibly in grace. He lost that grace, and sinned most grievously against God. He was found in this state in his old age. He died, as far as the Scripture informs us, without repentance. Even the doubtfulness in which the bare letter of the Scripture leaves the eternal state of this man, is a blast of lightning to the siren song of "once in grace, and still in grace;" "once a child, and a child for ever."

I shall close these observations with the account given by Abul Faragè, an Arabic writer of the thirteenth century, in his work entitled The History of the Dynasties, page 55. "But in this Solomon transgressed, because toward the end of his life he took other women of foreign nations, besides the daughter of Pharaoh; nations with whom God had forbidden the children of Israel to form matrimonial alliances; but leaning toward their gods, he worshipped their idols. In the thirty-fourth year of his reign he built a house for idols in the mount which is opposite to Jerusalem; and the length of it was one hundred cubits, its breadth fifty, and its height thirty. He made also for himself golden shields, and a brazen sea, supported on the horns of brazen oxen. God reprovèd him for his infidelity, and gave him for punishment in this world that he took away from his son the greater part of the kingdom. Moreover, the duration of his reign was forty years; ومات عوفي توبه and he died without repentance, and was buried in the sepulchre of his father David."

For other particulars relative to the different transactions of this reign, the reader is referred to the notes, in the order of their occurrence: and to those treatises which have been written on the probability that Solomon did or did not repent of his idolatry: and also to the notes on Ecclesiastes, where the subject will be again reviewed.

CHAPTER XII.

The people go to Shechem to make Rehoboam king, and send for Jeroboam out of Egypt, who, with the heads of the tribes, request relief from the heavy burdens laid on them by Solomon, 1—4. He requires three days to consider their petition, 5. He rejects the counsel of the elders, who served his father, and follows that of young men, and returns the people a provoking answer, 6—15. The people, therefore, renounce the family of David, stone to death Adoram, who came to receive their tribute, and make Jeroboam king; none cleaving to Rehoboam but the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, 16—20. Rehoboam comes to Jerusalem, and assembles all the fighting men of Judah and Benjamin, and finds the number to be one hundred and eighty thousand; and with these he purposes to reduce the men of Israel to his allegiance, but is forbidden by the prophet Shemaiah, 21—24. Jeroboam builds Shechem in mount Ephraim and Peniel, 25. - And, lest the people should be drawn away from their allegiance to him by going up to Jerusalem to worship, he makes two golden calves, and sets them up, one in Dan, the other in Beth-el, and the people worship them, 26—30. He makes priests of the lowest of the people, and established the fifteenth day of the eighth month as a feast to his new gods; makes offerings, and burns incense, 31—33.

AND Rehoboam went to Shechem; for all Israel were come to Shechem to make him king.

2. And it came to pass, when Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was yet in Egypt, heard of it, (for he was fled from the presence of King Solomon, and Jeroboam dwelt in Egypt.)

3 That they sent and called him. And Jeroboam and all the congregation of Israel came, and spake unto Rehoboam, saying,

4 Thy father made our yoke grievous: now therefore make thou the grievous service of thy father, and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, Depart yet for three days, then come again to me. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And King Rehoboam consulted with the old men, that stood before Solomon his father, while he yet lived, and said, How do ye advise that I may answer this people?

7 And they spake unto him, saying, ° If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day, and wilt serve them, and answer them, and speak good words to them, then they will be thy servants for ever.

8 But he forsook the counsel of the old men, which they had given him, and consulted with the young men that were grown up with him, and which stood before him.

9 And he said unto them, What counsel give ye that we may answer this people, who have spoken to me, saying, Make the yoke which thy father did put upon us lighter?

10 And the young men that were grown up with him, spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou speak unto this people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it lighter unto us; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XII.

Verse 1. Rehoboam went to Shechem] Rehoboam was probably the only son of Solomon; for although he had a thousand wives, he had not the blessing of a numerous offspring; and though he was the wisest of men himself, his son was a poor unprincipled fool. Had Solomon kept himself within reasonable bounds in matrimonial affairs, he would probably have had more children; and such as would have had common sense enough to discern the delicacy of their situation, and rule according to reason and religion.

Verse 4. The grievous service—and—heavy yoke] They seem here to complain of two things: excessively laborious service, and a heavy taxation. At first, it is supposed, Solomon employed no Israelite in drudgery; afterward, when he forsook the God of compassion, he seemed to have used them as slaves, and to have revived the Egyptian bondage.

Verse 7. If thou wilt be a servant unto this people] This is a constitutional idea of a king: he is the servant, but not the slave, of his people; every regal act of a just king is an act of service to the state. The king is not only the fountain of law and justice; but as he has the appointment of all officers and judges, consequently, he is the executor of the laws; and all justice is administered in his name. Properly speaking, a good and constitutional king is the servant of his people; and, in being such, he is their father and their king.

They will be thy servants for ever.] The way to ensure the obedience of the people, is to hold the reins of empire with a steady and impartial hand; let the people see that the king lives for them, and not for himself; and they will obey, love, and defend him. The state is maintained on the part of the ruler, and the ruled by mutual acts of service and benevolence. A good king has no self-interest; and such a king will ever have obedient and loving subjects. The haughty proud tyrant will have a suspicious and jealous people, hourly ripening for revolt. The king is made for the people, not the people for the king. Let every potentate wisely consider this: and let every subject know that the heaviest cares rest on the heart, and the heaviest responsibility rests on the head, of the king. Let them, therefore, under his government, fashion themselves as obedient children; acknowledge him their head; and duly consider whose authority he has; that they may love, honour, and obey him. Happy are the people who have such a king. safe is the king who has such a people.

Verse 10. And the young men that were grown up with him] It was a custom in different countries to educate with the heir to the throne young noblemen of nearly the same age. This, as Calmet observes, answered two great and important ends: 1. It excited the prince to emulation; that he might, as far as possible, surpass in all manly exercises, and in all acts of prudence and virtue, those whom one day he was to surpass in the elevation and dignity of his station. 2. That he might acquire a correct knowledge of the disposition and views of those who were likely to be, under him, the highest officers of the state; and, consequently, know the better how to trust and employ them. The old counsellors Rehoboam did not know; with the young nobility he had been familiar.

My little finger shall be thicker] A pro-

11 And now, whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke: my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

12 ¶ So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam the third day, as the king had appointed, saying, Come to me again the third day.

13 And the king answered the people 'roughly, and forsook the old men's counsel that they gave him;

14 And spake to them after the counsel of the young men, saying, My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke: my father also chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people; ^gfor the cause was from the LORD, that he might perform his saying, which the LORD ^hspake by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 ¶ So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not unto them; the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the son verbal mode of expression: "My little finger is thicker than my father's thigh." As much as the thigh surpasses the little finger in thickness, so much does my power exceed that of my father; and the use that I shall make of it to employ and tax you, shall be in proportion.

Verse 11. Chastise you with scorpions.] Should you rebel, or become disaffected, my father's whip shall be a scorpion in my hand. His was chastisement, mine shall be punishment. St. Isidore, and after him Calmet, and others, assert that the scorpion was a sort of severe whip, the lashes of which were armed with iron points, that sunk into and tore the flesh. We know that the scorpion was a military engine among the Romans for shooting arrows, which, being poisoned, were likened to the scorpion's sting, and the wound it inflicted.

Verse 15. The cause was from the Lord.] God left him to himself, and did not incline his heart to follow the counsel of the wise men. This is making the best of our present version; but if we come to inquire into the meaning of the cause of all this confusion and anarchy, we shall find it was Rehoboam's folly, cruelty, and despotic tyranny:—and was this from the Lord? But does the text speak this bad doctrine? No: it says no sibba, the revolution was from the Lord. This is consistent with all the declarations which went before. God stirred up the people to revolt from a man who of Jesse: to your tents, O Israel: now see to thine own house, David: So Israel departed unto their tents.

17 But ^kas for the children of Israel which dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then King Rehoboam ^lsent Adoram, who was over the tribute; and all Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. Therefore King Rehoboam ^mmade speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.

19 So ⁿIsrael ^orebelled against the house of David unto this day.

20 ¶ And it came to pass, when all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again, that they sent and called him unto the congregation, and made him king over all Israel: there was none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah ^ponly.

21 ¶ And when ^rRehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he assembled all the house of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, a hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against the house of Israel, to bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam the son of Solomon.

had neither skill nor humanity to govern them. We had such a מה revolution in these nations, in 1688; and, thank God, we have never since needed another. None of our ancient translations understood the word as our present version does: they have it either the TURNING AWAY was from the Lord, or it was the Lord's ORDINANCE; viz. that they should turn away from this foolish king.

Verse 16. So Israel departed unto their tents.] That is, the ten tribes withdrew their allegiance from Rehoboam; only Judah and Benjamin, frequently reckoned one tribe, remaining with him.

Verse 18. King Rehoboam sent Adoram.] As this was the person who was superintendent over the tribute, he was probably sent to collect the ordinary taxes; but the people, indignant at the master who had given them such a brutish answer, stoned the servant to death. The sending of Adoram to collect the taxes, when the public mind was in such a state of fermentation, was another proof of Rehoboam's folly and incapacity to govern.

Verse 20. Made him king over all Israel.] What is called Israel here, was ten-twelfths of the whole nation;—and had they a right to call another person to the throne? They had not: they had neither legal nor constitutional right. Jeroboam was not of the blood royal; he had no affinity to the kingdom. Nothing could 22 But ^a the word of God came unto Shemaiah, the man of God, saying,

23 Speak unto Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and unto all the house of Judah, and Benjamin, and to the remnant of the people, saying,

24 Thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel: return every man to his house; ¹ for this thing is from me. They hearkened therefore to the word of the LORD, and returned to depart, according to the word of the LORD.

25 ¶ Then Jeroboam ^u built Shechem in mount Ephraim, and dwelt therein; and went out from thence, and built ^v Penuel.

26 ¶ And Jeroboam said in his heart, Now shall the kingdom return to the house of David:

27 If this people ^w go up to do sacrifice in the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, then shall the heart of this people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah, and they shall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah.

28 Whereupon the king took counsel, justify this act, but the just judgment of God. God thus punished a disobedient and gainsaying people; and especially Solomon's family, whose sins against the Lord were of no ordinary magnitude.

Verse 24. For this thing is from me] That is, the separation of the ten tribes from the house of David.

They—returned to depart] This was great deference, both in Rehoboam and his officers, to relinquish, at the command of the prophet, a war which they thought they had good grounds to undertake. The remnant of the people heard the divine command gratefully, for the mass of mankind are averse from war. No nations would ever rise up against each other, were they not instigated to it, or compelled by their rulers.

Verse 27. And they shall kill me] He found he had little cause to trust this fickle people; though they had declared for him, it was more from caprice, desire of change, and novelty, than from any regular and praiseworthy principle.

Verse 28. Made two calves of gold] He invented a political religion, and instituted feasts in his own times, different from those appointed by the Lord; gave the people certain objects of devotion, and pretended to think it would be both inconvenient and oppressive to them to and ^a made two calves of gold, and said unto them, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: ^y behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

29 And he set the one in ^z Beth-el, and the other put he in ^a Dan.

30 And this thing became ^b a sin: for the people went to worship before the one, even unto Dan.

31 And he made a ^c house of high places, ^d and made priests of the lowest of the people, which were not of the sons of Levi.

32 And Jeroboam ordained a feast in the eighth month, on the fifteenth day of the month, like unto ^e the feast that ^z is in Judah, and he ^f offered upon the altar. So did he in Beth-el, ^g sacrificing unto the calves that he had made; and ^h he placed in Beth-el the priests of the high places which he had made.

33 So he ⁱ offered upon the altar which he had made in Beth-el the fifteenth day of the eighth month, even in the month which he had ^k devised of his own heart; and ordained a feast unto the children of Israel: and he offered upon the altar, ^l and ^m burnt incense.

have to go up to Jerusalem to worship. This was not the last time that religion was made a state engine to serve political purposes. It is strange that, in pointing out his calves to the people, he should use the same words that Aaron used when he made the golden calf in the wilderness! when they must have heard what terrible judgments fell upon their forefathers for this idolatry.

Verse 29. One in Beth-el, and the other—in Dan.] One at the southern, and the other at the northern extremity of the land. Solomon's idolatry had prepared the people for Jeroboam's abominations.

Verse 31. A house of high places] A temple of temples: he had many high places in the land; and, to imitate the temple at Jerusalem, he made one chief over all the rest, where he established a priesthood of his own ordination.

Made priests of the lowest of the people] He took the people indifferently as they came; and made them priests till he had enough, without troubling himself whether they were of the family of Aaron, or the house of Levi, or not. Any priests would do well enough for such gods. But those whom he took seem to have been worthless good-for-nothing fellows, who had neither piety nor good sense. Probably the sons of Levi had grace enough to refuse to sanction this new priesthood, and idolatrous worship.

Verse 32. Ordained a feast] The Jews held their feast of tabernacles on the 15th day of the seventh month: Jeroboam, who would meet the prejudices of the people, as far as he could, appointed a similar feast on the 15th of the eighth month: thus appearing to hold the thing, while he subverted the ordinance.

Verse 33. He offered upon the altar] Jeroboam probably performed the functions of high priest himself, that he might in his own person condense the civil and ecclesiastical power.

CHAPTER XIII.

A man of God prophesies against Jeroboam's altar, and foretells the destruction of that altar, and of its idolatrous priests, by Josiah; and gives Jeroboam a sign that the prophecy should be accomplished, 1—3. Jeroboam is enraged, and orders the man of God to be seized; and stretching out his arm for this purpose, his arm dries up, 4. The altar is rent, and the ashes poured out, according to the sign given by the man of God; and at his intercession Jeroboam's arm is restored, 5, 6. Jeroboam wishes to engage him in his service, but he refuses, and tells him, that he was ordered by God not even to eat or drink in that place; and he accordingly departs, 7—10. An old prophet that dwelt at Beth-el, hearing of this, rides after the man of God; deceives him; brings him back to his house, and persuades him to eat and drink, 11—19. While he is eating, the word of the Lord comes to the old prophet, and he foretells the death of the man of God; who, departing, is met by a lion, and slain, 20—25. On hearing this, the old prophet goes to the place, finds the carcass, brings it home, buries it, and mourns over it, charging his sons to bury him, when dead, in the same grave, 26—32. Notwithstanding these warnings, Jeroboam continues in his idolatry, 33, 34.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

Verse 1. There came a man of God] Who this was, we know not. The Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, call him a prophet. The Vulgate and Septuagint follow the Hebrew. איש אלהים ish elohim, means a divine person; one wholly devoted to God's service. Some have thought it was Shemaiah, others Joel, and others Iddo. It could not have been either the former or the latter, for he wrote the acts of Jeroboam, 2 Chron. ix. 29; and the prophet was killed before he returned home: but conjecture is idle on such a subject.

Jeroboam stood by the altar] Like gods, like priest: he made himself high priest: and he took of the lowest of the people, and made them priests of the high places; they proved themselves to be fools, by worshipping of calves.

Verse 2. He cried against the altar] He denounced the destruction of this idolatrous system.

A child shall be born—Josiah by name] This is one of the most remarkable and most singular prophecies in the Old Testament. It here most circumstantially foretells a fact which took place three hundred and forty years after the prediction: a fact which was attested by the two nations. The Jews, in whose behalf this prophecy was delivered, would guard it most sacredly; and it was the interest of the Israelites, against whom it was levelled, to impugn its authenticity and expose its falsehood, had this been possible. This prediction not only

3 And he gave ^e a sign the same day, saying, This is the sign which the LORD hath spoken; Behold, the altar shall be rent, and the ashes that are upon it shall be poured out.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, when king Jeroboam heard the saying of the man of God, which had cried against the altar in Beth-el, that he put forth his hand from the altar, saying, Lay hold on him. And his hand, which he put forth against him, dried up, so that he could not pull it in again to him.

5 The altar also was rent, and the showed the knowledge of God, but his power. He gave, as it were, this warning to idolatry, that it might be on its guard, and defend itself against this Josiah, whenever a person of that name should be found sitting on the throne of David: and, no doubt, it was on the alert, and took all prudent measures for its own defence; but all in vain; for Josiah, in the eighteenth year of his reign, literally accomplished this prophecy, as we may read, 2 Kings, chap. xxiii. 15—20. And from this latter place we find that the prophecy had three permanent testimonials of its truth. 1. The house of Israel. 2. The house of Judah. And, 3. The tomb of the prophet, who delivered this prophecy, who, being slain by a lion, was brought back and buried at Beth-el; the superscription on whose tomb remained till the day on which Josiah destroyed that altar, and burnt dead men's bones upon it. See above, verses 15, 17, and 18.

Verse 3. And he gave a sign] A miracle, to prove that the prophecy should be fulfilled in its season.

Verse 4. Lay hold on him.] No doubt stretching out his own hand at the same time, through rage, pride, and haste, to execute his own orders.

And his hand—dried up] The whole arm became suddenly rigid; the nerves no longer communicated their influence, and the muscles ceased to obey the dictates of the will.

Verse 5. The altar also was rent] It split ashes poured out from the altar, according to the sign which the man of God had given by the word of the LORD.

6 And the king answered and said unto the man of God, ¹Entreat now the face of the LORD thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may be restored me again. And the man of God besought ²the LORD, and the king's hand was restored him again, and became as it was before.

7 ¶ And the king said unto the man of God, Come home with me, and refresh thyself, and ³I will give thee a reward.

8 And the man of God said unto the king, ⁴If thou wilt give me half thine house, I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread nor drink water in this place:

9 For so was it charged me by the word of the LORD, saying, ⁵Eat no bread, nor drink water, nor turn again by the same way that thou camest.

10 So he went another way, and returned not by the way that he came to Beth-el.

11 Now there dwelt an old prophet in Beth-el; and his ⁶sons came and told him all the works that the man of or clave of its own accord; and, as the split parts would decline at the top from the line of their perpendicular, so the ashes and coals would fall off, or be poured out.

Verse 6. Entreat—the face of the LORD thy God] The face of God is his favour, as we see in many parts of the Sacred Writings: he says, thy God; for Jeroboam knew that he was not his God, for he was now in the very act of acknowledging other gods, and had no portion in the God of Jacob.

And the king's hand was restored] Both miracles were wrought to show the truth of the Jewish religion, and to convince this bold innovator of his wickedness, and to reclaim him from the folly and ruinous tendency of his idolatry.

Verse 7. Come home with me—and I will give thee a reward.] Come and be one of my priests, and I will give thee a proper salary.

Verse 9. For so was it charged me—Eat no bread, &c.] That is, have no kind of communication with those idolaters. He was charged also not to return by the way that he came; probably lest the account of what was done should have reached the ears of any of the people through whom he had passed, and he suffer inconveniences on the account, either by persecution from the idolaters, or from curious God had done that day in Beth-el: the words which he had spoken unto the king, them they told also their father.

12 And their father said unto them, What way went he? For his sons had seen what way the man of God went, which came from Judah.

13 And he said unto his sons, Saddle me the ass. So they saddled him the ass: and he rode thereon, 14 And went after the man of God, and found him sitting under an oak: and he said unto him, Art thou the man of God that camest from Judah? And he said, I am.

15 Then he said unto him, Come home with me, and eat bread.

16 And he said, ⁷I may not return with thee, nor go in with thee: neither will I eat bread nor drink water with thee in this place:

17 For ⁸it was said to me ⁹by the word of the LORD, Thou shalt eat no bread nor drink water there, nor turn again to go by the way that thou camest.

18 He said unto him, I am a prophet also as thou art; and an angel spake unto me by the word of the LORD, saying, Bring him back with thee into people delaying him, in order to cause him to give an account of the transactions which took place at Beth-el. This is a reason why he should not return by the same way; but what the reason of this part of the charge was, if not the above, is not easy to see.

Verse 11. An old prophet] Probably once a prophet of the Lord, who had fallen from his steadfastness, and yet not so deeply as to lose the knowledge of the true God, and join with Jeroboam in his idolatries. We find he was not at the king's sacrifice, though his sons were there; and perhaps even they were there not as idolaters, but as spectators of what was done.

Verse 14. And went after the man of God] I can hardly think that this was with any evil design. His sons had given him such an account of the prediction, the power, and influence of this prophet, that he wished to have a particular acquaintance with him, in order that he might get farther information relative to the solemn import of the prophecy which he had denounced against the idolatry at Beth-el. This good man could not have been an object of the old prophet's malevolence.

Verse 18. An angel spake unto me] That he lied unto him is here expressly asserted, and is amply proved by the event. But why should thine house, that he may eat bread and drink water. But he lied unto him.

19 So he went back with him, and did eat bread in his house, and drank water.

20 ¶ And it came to pass, as they sat at the table, that the word of the LORD came unto the prophet that brought him back:

21 And he cried unto the man of God that came from Judah, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Forasmuch as thou hast disobeyed the mouth of the LORD, and hast not kept the commandment which the LORD thy God commanded thee,

22 But camest back, and hast eaten bread and drunk water in the place, of the which the LORD did say to thee, Eat no bread, and drink no water; thy carcass shall not come unto the sepulchre of thy fathers.

23 ¶ And it came to pass, after he had eaten bread, and after he had drunk, that he saddled for him the ass, to wit, for the prophet whom he had brought back.

24 And when he was gone, ^a lion

he deceive him? The simple principle of curiosity to know all about this prediction, and the strange facts which had taken place, of which he had heard at second hand, by means of his sons, was sufficient to induce such a person to get the intelligence he wished, by any means. We may add to this, that, as he found the man of God sitting under an oak, probably faint with fatigue and fasting, for he had had no refreshment, his humanity might have led him to practise this deception, in order to persuade him to take some refreshment. Having fallen from God, as I have supposed, ver. 11. his own tenderness of conscience was gone; and he would not scruple to do a moral evil, if even a temporal good could come of it. Again, is it not possible that the old prophet was himself deceived? for though he lied unto him, it is possible that he was not conscious of his lie, for Satan, as an angel of light, might have deceived him in order to lead him to deceive the other. He does not say, as the man of God did, It was said to me by the word of the Lord—No: but An angel spake unto me by the word of the Lord. And I think it very likely that an angel did appear to him on the occasion; an angel of darkness and idolatry, in the garb of an angel of light, who wished to use him as an instrument to bring discredit on the awful transactions which had lately taken place, and to destroy him who had foretold the destruction of his power and influence.

Verse 19. So he went back with him] He permitted himself to be imposed on: he might have thought, as he had accomplished every purpose for which God sent him, and had actually begun to return by another way, God, who had given him the charge, had authority to say, "As thy purpose was to obey every injunction, even to the letter, I now permit thee to go with this old prophet, and take some refreshment." Now God might have as well dispensed with this part of the injunction, as he did in the case of Abraham—Take thy son Isaac, thy only son, whom thou lovest—and offer him for a burnt-offering: but, when he saw his perfect readiness, he dispensed with the actual offering, and accepted a ram in his stead. Thus much may be said in vindication of the man of God:—But, if this be so, why should he be punished with death, for doing what he had reason and precedent to believe might be the will of God? I answer—He should not have taken a step back, till he had remission of the clause from the same authority which gave him the general message. He should have had it from the word of the Lord to himself, in both cases, as Abraham had; and not taken an apparent contradiction of what was before delivered unto him, from the mouth of a stranger, who only professed to have it from an angel, who pretended to speak unto him by the word of the Lord. In this, and in this alone, lay the sinfulness of the act of the man of God, who came out of Judah.

Verse 20. The word of the Lord came unto the prophet that brought him back] "A great clamour," says Dr. Kennicott, "has been raised against this part of the history, on account of God's denouncing sentence on the true prophet by the mouth of the false prophet: but, if we examine with attention the original words here, they will be found to signify either, he who brought him back; or, whom he had brought back; for the very same words, אשר אשר asher heshibo, occur again ver. 23; where they are now translated, whom he had brought back; and where they cannot be translated otherwise. This being the case, we are at liberty to consider the word of the Lord as delivered to the true prophet, thus brought back; and then the sentence is pronounced by God himself, calling to him out of heaven, as in Gen. xxii. 11. And that this doom was thus pronounced by God, not by the false prophet, we are assured in ver. 26. 'The Lord hath delivered him unto the lion, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake unto him.' Josephus expressly asserts, that the sentence was declared by God to the true prophet." The Arabic asserts the same.

Verse 21. And he] That is, according to the above interpretation, the voice of God from heaven, addressing the man of God; the old prophet having nothing to do in this business.

Verse 22. Thy carcass shall not come] This intimated to him that he was to die an untimely death; but probably did not specify by what means.

Verse 24. A lion met him—and slew him] By permitting himself to be seduced by the old prophet, when he should have acted only on the expressly declared counsel of God, he committed the sin unto death: that is, such a sin as met him by the way, and slew him: and his carcass was cast in the way, and the ass stood by it, the lion also stood by the carcass.

25 And, behold, men passed by, and saw the carcass cast in the way, and the lion standing by the carcass: and they came and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt.

26 ¶ And when the prophet that brought him back from the way heard thereof, he said, It is the man of God, who was disobedient unto the word of the LORD: therefore the LORD hath delivered him unto the lion, which hath ^s torn him, and slain him, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake unto him.

27 And he spake to his sons, saying, Saddle me the ass. And they saddled him.

28 And he went and found his carcass cast in the way, and the ass and the lion standing by the carcass: the lion had not eaten the carcass, nor ^t torn the ass.

God will punish with the death of the body, while he extends mercy to the soul. See my notes on 1 John v. 16, 17.

From the instance here related we see, as in various other cases, that often judgment begins at the house of God. The true prophet, for receiving that as a revelation from God which was opposed to the revelation which himself had received, and which was confirmed by so many miracles, is slain by a lion, and his body deprived of the burial of his fathers; while the wicked king, and the old fallen prophet, are both permitted to live! If this was severity to the man of God, it was mercy to the others; neither of whom was prepared to meet his judge. Here we may well say, "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the sinner and the ungodly appear?"

Verse 28. The lion had not eaten the carcass, nor torn the ass.] All here was preternatural. The lion, though he had killed the man, does not devour him; the ass stands quietly by, not fearing the lion; and the lion does not attempt to tear the ass: both stand as guardians of the fallen prophet. How evident is the hand of God in all!

Verse 30. Alas, my brother!] This lamentation is very simple, very short, and very pathetic. Perhaps the old prophet said it as much in reference to himself, who had been the cause of this untimely death, as in reference to the man of God, whose corpse he now committed to the tomb.

Verse 31. Lay my bones beside his bones] This argues a strong conviction, in the mind of the old prophet, that the deceased was a 29 And the prophet took up the carcass of the man of God, and laid it upon the ass, and brought it back: and the old prophet came to the city, to mourn, and to bury him.

30 And he laid his carcass in his own grave: and they mourned over him, saying, "Alas, my brother!"

31 And it came to pass, after he had buried him, that he spake to his sons, saying, When I am dead, then bury me in the sepulchre wherein the man of God is buried; ^v lay my bones beside his bones:

32 ¶ For the saying which he cried by the word of the LORD against the altar in Beth-el, and against all the houses of the high places which are in the cities of ^s Samaria; shall surely come to pass.

33 ¶ After this thing Jeroboam returned not from his evil way, but ^z made again of the lowest of the people priests of the high places: whosoever would, he ^a consecrated good and holy man of God; and he is willing to have place with him in the general resurrection.

Verse 32. In the cities of Samaria] It is most certain that Samaria, or as it is called in Hebrew, Shomeron, was not built at this time. We are expressly told that Omri, king of Israel, founded this city on the hill which he bought for two talents of silver, from a person of the name of Shimer, after whom he called the city Samaria; or Shomeron, see chap. xvi. 24. And this was fifty years after the death of Jeroboam. How then could the old prophet speak of Samaria, not then in existence, unless he did it by the spirit of prophecy, calling things that are not as though they were; as the man of God called Josiah by name three hundred years before he was born? Some suppose that the historian adds these words, because Samaria existed in his time, and he well knew that it did not exist in the time of the old prophet; for himself, in the xvth chapter, gives us the account of its foundation by Omri. After all, it is possible that God might have given this revelation to the old prophet; and thus by anticipation, which is the language of prophecy, spoke of Samaria as then existing. This is the solution of Houbigant, and is thought sound by many good critics.

Verse 33. Jeroboam returned not from his evil way] There is something exceedingly obstinate and perverse, as well as blinding and insatiable, in idolatry. The prediction lately delivered at Beth-el, and the miracles wrought in confirmation of it, were surely sufficient to have affected and alarmed any heart, not him, and he became one wholly and incorrigibly hardened; and yet they had no effect on Jeroboam!

Made—the lowest of the people priests] So hardy was this bad man in his idolatry, that he did not even attempt to form any thing according to the model of God's true worship: he would have nothing like God and truth. In his calves, or rather oxen, he copied the manner of Egypt; and, in the formation of his priesthood, he seems to have gone aside from all models. Among the worst of heathens, the priesthood was filled with respectable men: but Jeroboam took of the lowest of the people, and put them in that office.

Whosoever would, he consecrated him] He made no discrimination: any vagabond that offered was accepted, even of those who had no character; who were too idle to work, and too stupid to learn.

Verse 34. And this thing became sin] These abominations were too glaring, and too insulting to the Divine Majesty, to be permitted to last; therefore his house was cut off, and destroyed from the face of the earth.

A HOLY priesthood, a righteous ministry, is a blessing to any state; because it has a most powerful effect on the morals of the community; inducing order, sobriety, and habits of industry among the people; on the contrary, sin unto the house of Jeroboam, even to cut it off, and to destroy it from off the face of the earth.

the profligacy of the clergy, and false principles of religion, are the most likely to unsettle a kingdom, and to bring about destructive revolutions in the state. This is the principle in which all national establishments of religion were originally formed. The state thought proper to secure a permanency of religion, that religion might secure the safety of the state; because it was supposed, from the general aversion of men from good, that, if left to themselves, they would have no religion at all. Where the religion of the country is pure, founded solely on the oracles of God, it deserves the utmost sanction of the state, as well as the attention of every individual. A Christian state has surely authority to enact, The Christian religion is, and shall be, the religion of this land; and, prejudice apart, should not the laws provide for the permanence of this system? Is the form of Christianity likely to be preserved in times of general profligacy, if the laws do not secure its permanence? What would our nation have been if we had not had a version of the Sacred Writings established by the authority of the laws; and a form of sound words for general devotion established by the same authority? Whatever the reader may do, the writer thanks God for the religious establishment of his country.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIV.

Verse 1. Ahijah—fell sick.] This was but a prelude to the miseries which fell on the house of Jeroboam; but it was another merciful warning, intended to turn him from his idolatry and wickedness.

All the shields of gold which Solomon had made.] These were three hundred in number, and were all made of beaten gold. See a computation of their value in the note on chap. x. 17.

Verse 28. The guard bare them] The guard probably were just three hundred, answering to the number of the shields.

Verse 31. Naamah, an Ammonitess.] He was born of a heathen mother, and begotten of an apostate father:—from such an impure fountain could sweet water possibly spring?

Abijam was the wicked son of an apostate father, and heathenish mother. Grace may be grafted on a crab stock; but let none do evil that good may come of it. A bad stock will produce bad fruit.

Dr. Kennicott observes, that the name of this king of Judah is now expressed three ways: here, and in four other places, it is Abijam, or Abim; in two others, it is Abihu; but in eleven other places, it is Abiah, as it is expressed by

St. Matt. i. 7. Ποσειδωνος υιου, ABIA; and this is the reading of thirteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. and of thirteen respectable editions of the Hebrew Bible. The Syriac is the same. The Septuagint, in the London Polyglott, has Αβιου, Abihu; but in the Complutensian and Antwerp Polyglotts it is Αβια, Abiah. Though the common printed Vulgate has Abiam, yet the Editio Princeps of the Vulgate, some MSS., and the text in the Complutensian and Antwerp Polyglotts, has Abia; which, without doubt, is the reading, that should in all cases, be followed.

The rabbins say, and particularly Rab. Sol. Jarchi, that the Shishak mentioned in this chapter is Pharaoh Necho; and that he invaded Israel in order to get the ivory throne of his son-in-law Solomon, which he had always coveted: and this throne he carried away. It appears, however, that he spoiled the temple, the king's palace, &c.; and, in short, took every thing away without resistance which he chose to carry off. It is very likely that this had a good effect on Rehoboam; it probably caused him to frequent the temple, ver. 28. which, it is likely, he had before neglected. This history is more particularly told in 2 Chron. xii. to which the reader will do well to refer: and, as to Rehoboam, though so much positive iniquity is not laid to his charge as to his father, yet little can be said for his piety: the idolatry introduced by Solomon does not appear to have been lessened in the days of Rehoboam.

CHAPTER XV.

Abijam's wicked reign, and death, 1—8. Asa succeeds him in the kingdom of Judah, and rules well, 9—15. He makes a league with the king of Syria against Baasha, king of Israel, who is obliged to desist in his attempts against Judah, 16—22. He is diseased in his feet and dies, and is succeeded by his son Jehoshaphat, 23—25. Nadab, son of Jeroboam, reigns over Israel; but is slain by Baasha, who reigns in his stead, 26—28. Baasha destroys all the house of Jeroboam, according to the prediction of Ahijah, 29, 30. Baasha continues the idolatry of Jeroboam, 31—34.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

Verse 1. Reigned Abijam over Judah.] Of this son of Rehoboam, of his brethren, and of Rehoboam's family in general, see the eleventh of 2 Chron. where many particulars are added.

Verse 3. His heart was not perfect.] He was an idolater; or did not support the worship of the true God. This appears to be the general meaning of the heart not being perfect with God.

Verse 4. The LORD—give him a lamp.] That is, a son to succeed him: see chap. xi. 36.

Verse 5. Save only in the matter of Uriah.] Properly speaking, this is the only flagrant fault or crime in the life of David. It was a horrible offence; or rather, a whole system of offences. See the notes on 2 Sam. xi. and xii.

Verse 6. There was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam.] This was mentioned in the preceding chapter, ver. 30. and it can mean no more than this: there was a continual spirit of hostility kept up between the two kingdoms, and no doubt frequent skirmishing between bordering parties; but it never broke out into open war, for this was particularly forbidden. See chap. xii. 24. Hostility did exist, and no doubt frequent skirmishes; but open war, and pitched battles, there were none.

But why is this circumstance repeated, and the history of Abijam interrupted by the repetition? There is some reason to believe that Rehoboam is not the true reading, and that it should be Abijam: "Now there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam all the days of his life." And this is the reading of fourteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. The Syriac has, Abia the son of Rehoboam; the Arabic has Abijam. In the Septuagint, the whole verse is omitted in the London Polyglott; but it is extant in those of Complutum and Antwerp. Some copies of the Targum have Abijam also; and the Editio Princeps of the Vulgate has Abia. This is doubtless the true reading, as we know there was a very memorable war between Abia and Jeroboam; see it particularly described 2 Chron. xiii. 3, &c.

Verse 10. His mother's name.] Our translators thought that grandmother was likely to be the meaning, and therefore have put it in the margin.

The daughter of Abishalom.] She is called, says Calmet, the daughter of Absalom, according to the custom of the Scriptures, which give the name of daughter indifferently to the niece, the granddaughter, and great-granddaughter.

13 And also ¹Maachah his mother, even her he removed from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove; and Asa ²destroyed her idol, and ³burnt it by the brook Kidron.

14 ¹But the high places were not removed: nevertheless Asa's ²heart was perfect with the LORD all his days.

Verse 13. She had made an idol in a grove] The original word מִיִּפְּעֵלֶתֶשֶׁת mipeletseth, is variously understood. I shall give its different views in the versions:

“Besides, he removed his mother Maachah from being chief in the sacred rites of Priapus, and in his grove which she had consecrated.”—VULGATE.

“And Ana, (other copies Maacha,) he removed from being governess, because she had made an assembly in her grove.”—SEPTUAGINT.

“Moreover he deprived Maacha, his mother, of her own magnificence; because she had celebrated a solemnity to her own worship.”—SYRIAC.

“And even Maachah his mother he removed from the kingdom, because she had made an idol in a grove.”—CHALDEE.

“Besides, he removed Maacha, his mother, from her kingdom, because she had made a high tree into an idol.”—ARABIC.

“Also, he removed Maacha his mother, from the kingdom, because she had made a horrible statue; and our rabbins say, that it was called מִיִּפְּעֵלֶתֶשֶׁת mipeletseth, because מִפְּלִי מִלֵּוּת mipelia leyatsoutha, it produced wonderful ridicule: for she made it ad instar membri virilis, and she used it daily.” Rabbi Solomon Jarchi.

From the whole, it is pretty evident that the image was a mere Priapus, or something of the same nature; and that Maachah had an assembly in the grove where this image was set up, and doubtless worshipped it with the most impure rites. What the Roman Priapus was I need not tell the learned reader; and, as to the unlearned, it would not profit him to know it. Maachah was most likely another Messalina; and Asa probably did for his mother what Claudius did for his wife.

Verse 14. The high places were not removed] He was not able to make a thorough reformation; this was reserved for his son Jehoshaphat.

Asa's heart was perfect] He worshipped the true God; and zealously promoted his service; see on ver. 3. And even the high places which he did not remove were probably those where the true God alone was worshipped; for, that there were such high places, the preceding history amply proves: and Jarchi intimates that these were places which individuals had erected for the worship of Jehovah.

Verse 15. Which his father had dedicated] On what account he and his father dedicated the things mentioned below we know not; but it appears that Asa thought himself bound by the vow of his father.

Verse 16. There was war] That is, there was continual enmity; see on ver. 6. But there was no open war till the thirty-sixth year of Asa, when Baasha, king of Israel, began to build Ramah, that he might prevent all communication between Israel and Judah: see 2 Chron. xv. 19. and xvi. 1; but this does not agree with what is said here, chap. xvi. 3, 9. that Baasha was killed by Zimri, in the twenty-sixth year of the reign of Asa. Chronologists endeavour to reconcile this, by saying that the years should be reckoned not from the beginning of the reign of Asa, but from the separation of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah. It is most certain that Baasha could not make war upon Asa in the thirty-sixth year of his reign, when it is evident from this chapter that he was slain in the twenty-sixth year of that king. We must either adopt the mode of solution given by chronologists, or grant that there is a mistake in some of the numbers; most likely in the parallel places in Chronicles, but which we have no direct means of correcting. But the reader may compare 2 Chron. xiv. 1. with xv. 10. 19. and xvi. 1.

Verse 17. And Baasha—built Ramah] As the word signifies a high place, what is here termed Ramah was probably a hill, (commanding a defile through which lay the principal road to Jerusalem,) which Baasha fortified, in order to prevent all intercourse with the kingdom of Judah, lest his subjects should cleave to the house of David. Ramah was about two leagues northward of Jerusalem.

Verse 18. Asa took all the silver] Shishak, king of Egypt, had not taken the whole, or there had been some treasures brought in since that time.

Ben-hadad] This was the grandson of Rezon, called here Hezion, who founded the kingdom of Damascus. See chap. xi. 23. 24. and Calmet.

Verse 19. There is a league between me and thee] Or, Let there be a league between me and thee; as there was between my father and thy father. There was no reason why Asa should have emptied his treasures at this time to procure the aid of the Syrian king; as it does not appear that there was any danger which himself could not have turned aside. He probably wished to destroy the kingdom of Israel; and, to effect this purpose, even robbed the house of the Lord.

Verse 20. Ijon, and Dan, &c.] He appears to have attacked and taken those towns which constituted the principal strength of the kingdom of Israel.

Verse 21. Dwelt in Tirzah.] This seems to have been the royal city: see ver. 33. and chap. xiv. 17. And in this Baasha was probably obliged to shut himself up.

Verse 22. None was exempted] Every man was obliged to go and help dismantle the fortress at Ramah which Baasha had built. This was a general levée en masse of the people: every one was obliged to lend a helping hand, as the state was then supposed to be in danger,

The entail of iniquity cannot be cut off but by a thorough conversion of the soul to God; and, of this, these bad kings seem to have had no adequate notion. The wicked followed the steps of the wicked, and became still more wicked: sin gathers strength by exercise and age.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVI

Verse 1. Then the word of the Lord came to Jehu] Of this prophet we know nothing but from this circumstance. It appears from 2 Chron. xvi. 7, 10. that his father Hanani was also a prophet, and suffered imprisonment in consequence of the faithful discharge of his ministry to Asa.

Verse 2. Made thee prince over my people] That is, in the course of my providence, I suffered thee to become king: for it is impossible that God should make a rebel, a traitor, and a murderer, king over his people, or over any people. God is ever represented in Scripture as doing those things which, in the course of his providence, he permits to be done.

Verse 7. And because he killed him.] This the Vulgate understands of Jehu the prophet, put to death by Baasha: Ob hanc causam occidit eum, hoc est, Jehu filium Hanani prophetam; “on this account he killed him, that is, Jehu the prophet, the son of Hanani.” Some think Baasha is intended; others Jeroboam; and others Nadab, the son of Jeroboam. This last is the sentiment of Rab. Sol. Jarchi, and of some good critics. The order is here confused; and the seventh verse should probably be placed between the fourth and fifth.

9 ¶ And his servant Zimri, captain of half his chariots, conspired against him, as he was in Tirzah, drinking himself drunk in the house of Arza, steward of his house in Tirzah.

10 And Zimri went in and smote him, and killed him, in the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah, and reigned in his stead.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, when he began to reign, as soon as he sat on his throne, that he slew all the house of Baasha: he left him not one that piss-eth against a wall, neither of his kins-folks, nor of his friends.

12 Thus did Zimri destroy all the house of Baasha, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake against Baasha by Jehu the prophet.

13 For all the sins of Baasha, and the sins of Elah his son, by which they sinned, and by which they made Israel to sin, in provoking the LORD God of Israel to anger with their vanities.

14 Now the rest of the acts of Elah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

15 ¶ In the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah did Zimri reign seven days in Tirzah. And the people were encamped against Gibbethon, which belonged to the Philistines.

16 And the people that were encamped heard say, Zimri hath conspired, and hath also slain the king: wherefore all Israel made Omri, the captain of the host, king over Israel that day in the camp.

17 And Omri went up from Gibbethon, and all Israel with him, and they besieged Tirzah.

18 And it came to pass, when Zimri saw that the city was taken, that he went into the palace of the king's house, and burnt the king's house over him with fire, and died.

19 For his sins which he sinned in doing evil in the sight of the LORD, in walking in the way of Jeroboam, and in his sin which he did, to make Israel to sin.

20 Now the rest of the acts of Zimri, and his treason that he wrought, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

21 ¶ Then were the people of Israel divided into two parts; half of the people followed Tibni the son of Ginath, to make him king; and half followed Omri.

22 But the people that followed Omri prevailed against the people that followed Tibni the son of Ginath: so Tibni died, and Omri reigned.

23 ¶ In the thirty and first year of Asa king of Judah began Omri to reign over Israel, twelve years: six

Verse 9. Captain of half his chariots] It is probable that Zimri, and some other who is not here named, were commanders of the cavalry.

Verse 11. He slew all the house of Baasha] He endeavoured to exterminate his memory: and the Jews say, when such a matter is determined, they not only destroy the house of the person himself, but the five neighbouring houses, that the memory of such a person may perish from the earth.

Verse 13. For all the sins of Baasha] We see why it was that God permitted such judgments to fall on this family. Baasha was a grievous offender, and so also was his son Elah: and they caused the people to sin; and they provoked God to anger by their idolatries.

Verse 15. The people were encamped against Gibbethon] It appears that, at this time, the Israelites had war with the Philistines, and were now besieging Gibbethon, one of their cities. This army, hearing that Zimri had rebelled, and killed Elah, made Omri, their general, king, who immediately raised the siege of Gibbethon, and went to attack Zimri in the royal city of Tirzah; who, finding his affairs desperate, chose rather to consume himself in his palace than to fall into the hands of his enemies.

Verse 21. Divided into two parts] Why this division took place we cannot tell; the people appear to have been for Tibni, the army for Omri: and the latter prevailed.

Verse 23. In the thirty and first year of Asa] There must be a mistake here in the number thirty-one; for, in verses 10 and 15, it is said that Zimri slew his master, and began to reign in the twenty-seventh year of Asa: and as Zimri reigned only seven days, and Omri immediately succeeded him, this could not be in the thirty-first, but in the twenty-seventh year of Asa, as related above. Rab. Sol. Jarchi reconciles the two places thus: “The division of the kingdom between Tibni and Omri began in the twenty-seventh year of Asa: this division lasted five years, during which Omri had but a share of the kingdom. Tibni dying, Omri came into the possession of the whole kingdom, which he held seven years: this was in the thirty-first year of Asa. Seven years he reigned alone: five years he reigned over part of Israel: twelve years in the whole. The two dates, the twenty-seventh and thirty-first of Asa, answering, the first to the beginning of the division, the second to the sole reign of Omri.” Jarchi quotes Sedar Olam for this solution.

Verse 24. He bought the hill Samaria of Shemer] This should be read, “He bought the hill of Shomeron from Shomer, and called it Shomeron; (i. e. Little Shomer,) after the name of Shomer, owner of the hill.” At first the kings of Israel dwelt at Shechem, and then at Tirzah; but this place having suffered much in the civil broils, and the palace having been burnt down by Zimri, Omri purposed to found a new city, to which he might transfer the seat of government. He fixed on a hill that belonged to a person of the name of Shomer; and bought it from him for two talents of silver, about 707l. 3s. 9d. Though this was a large sum in those days, yet we cannot suppose that the hill was very large which was purchased for so little; and probably no other building upon it than Shomer’s house, if indeed he had one there. Shomeron, or, as corruptly written, Samaria, is situated in the midst of the tribe of Ephraim, not very far from the coast of the Mediterranean sea, and about midway between Dan and Beer-sheba: thus Samaria became the capital of the ten tribes, the metropolis of the kingdom of Israel, and the residence of its kings. The kings of Israel adorned and fortified it: Ahab built a house of ivory in it, chap. xxii. 39; the kings of Syria had magazines or storehouses in it, for the purpose of commerce; see chap. xx. 34. And it appears to have been a place of considerable importance and great strength.

Samaria endured several sieges: Ben-hadad, king of Syria, besieged it twice, chap. xx. 1, &c.; and it cost Shalmanezar a siege of three years to reduce it, 2 Kings xvii. 6, &c. After the death of Alexander the Great, it became the property of the kings of Egypt: but Antiochus the Great took it from the Egyptians; and it continued in the possession of the kings of Syria till the Asmoneans took and razed it to the very foundation. Gabinus, proconsul of Syria, partially rebuilt it, and called it Gabiniانا. Herod the Great restored it to its ancient splendour, and placed in it a colony of six thousand men, and gave it the name of Sebasté, in honour of Augustus. It is now a place of little consequence.

Verse 25. Did worse than all—before him.] Omri was—1. An idolater in principle—2. An idolater in practice—3. He led the people to idolatry by precept and example—And 4. which was that in which he did worse than all before him, he made statutes in favour of idolatry, and obliged the people by law to commit it. See Mic. vi. 16. where this seems to be intended; For the statutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab.

Verse 31. He took to wife Jezebel] This was the head and chief of his offending: he took to wife not only a heathen, but one whose hostility to the true religion was well known, and carried to the utmost extent. 1. She was the idolatrous daughter of an idolatrous king—2. She practised it openly—3. She not only countenanced it in others, but protected it, and gave its partisans honours and rewards—4. She used every means to persecute the true religion—5. She was hideously cruel; and put to death the prophets and priests of God—6. And all this she did with the most zealous perseverance, and relentless cruelty.

Notwithstanding Ahab had built a temple, and made an altar for Baal, and set up the worship of Asherah, the Sidonian Venus, which we (ver. 33.) have transformed into a grove; yet so well known was the hostility of Jezebel to all good, that his marrying her was esteemed the highest pitch of vice, and an act the most provoking to God, and destructive to the prosperity of the kingdom.

Verse 33. Ahab made a grove אֲשֶׁרָה Ashe-rah, Astarte, or Venus: what the Syriac calls an idol, and the Arabic a tall tree; probably meaning by the last an image of Priapus, the obscene keeper of groves, orchards, and gardens.

Verse 34. Did Hiel the Beth-elite build Jericho I wish the reader to refer to my note on Josh. vi. 26. for a general view of this subject. I shall add a few observations. Joshua's curse is well known: "Cursed be the man before the Lord that riseth up and buildeth this city Jericho; he shall lay the foundation thereof in his first-born; and in his youngest son shall he set up the gates of it."—Josh. vi. 26. This is the curse, but the meaning of its terms are not very obvious. Let us see how this is to be understood, from the manner in which it was accomplished.

"In his days did Hiel the Beth-elite build Jericho: he laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his first-born, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son Segub; according to the word of the Lord which he spake by Joshua the son of Nun." This prediction was delivered upwards of five hundred years before the event; and, though it was most circumstantially fulfilled, yet we know not the precise meaning of some of the terms used in the original execration, and in this place, where its fulfilment is mentioned. There are three opinions on the words, lay the foundation in his first-born, and set up the gates in his youngest son.

1. It is thought, that when he laid the foundation of the city, his eldest son, the hope of his family, died by the hand and judgment of God, and that all his children died in succession; so that when the doors were ready to be hung, his youngest and last child died, and thus, instead of securing himself a name, his whole family became extinct.

34 ¶ In his days did Hiel the Beth-elite build Jericho: he laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his first-born, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son Segub, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake by Joshua the son of Nun.

21. 3. Jer. 17. 2.—b Ver. 30. Ch. 21. 25.—i Josh. 6. 26.

2. These expressions signify only great delay in the building:—that he who should undertake it should spend nearly his whole life in it; all the time in which he was capable of procreating children: in a word, that if a man laid the foundation when his first-born came into the world, his youngest and last son should be born before the walls should be in readiness to admit the gates to be set up in them; and that the expression is of the proverbial kind, intimating greatly protracted labour, occasioned by multitudinous hinderances and delays.

3. That he who built this city should, in laying the foundation, slay, or sacrifice, his first-born, in order to consecrate it, and secure the assistance of the objects of his idolatrous worship; and should slay his youngest at the completion of the work, as a gratitude-offering for the assistance received. This latter opinion seems to be countenanced by the Chaldee, which represents Hiel as slaying his first-born, Abiram, and his youngest son, Segub.

But who was Hiel the Beth-elite? The Chaldee calls him Hiel of Beth-Momé, or the Beth-momite; the Vulgate, Hiel of Beth-el; the Septuagint, Hiel the Baith-elite; the Syriac represents Ahab as the builder, "Also in his days did Ahab build Jericho, the place of execration;" the Arabic, "Also in his days did Hiel build the house of idols—to wit, Jericho." The MSS. give us no help. None of these versions, the Chaldee excepted, intimates that the children were either slain, or died; which circumstance seems to strengthen the opinion, that the passage is to be understood of delays and hinderances. Add to this, Why should the innocent children of Hiel suffer for their father's presumption? And is it likely that, if Hiel lost his first-born when he laid the foundation, he would have proceeded under this evidence of the divine displeasure, and at the risk of losing his whole family. Which of these opinions is the right one, or whether any of them be correct, is more than I can pretend to state.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVII.

Verse 1. Elijah the Tishbite] The history of this great man is introduced very abruptly; his origin is enveloped with perfect obscurity. He is here said to be a Tishbite. Tishbeh, says Calmet, is a city beyond Jordan, in the tribe of Gad, and in the land of Gilead. Who was his father, or from what tribe he sprang, is not intimated: he seems to have been the prophet of Israel peculiarly, as we never find him prophesying in Judah. A number of apocryphal writers have trifled at large about his parentage, miraculous birth, of his continual celibacy, his academy of the prophets, &c. &c. all equally worthy of credit. One opinion, which at first view appears strange, bears more resemblance to truth than any of the above, viz. that he had no earthly parentage known to any man; that he was an angel of God, united for a time to a human body, in order to call men back to perfect purity, both in doctrine and manners, from which they had totally swerved. His Hebrew name, which we have corrupted into Elijah, and Elias, is אליהו Alihu; or, according to the vowel points, Eliyahu; and signifies, he is my God. Does this give countenance to the supposition that this great personage was a manifestation in the flesh of the Supreme Being? He could not be the Messiah; for we find him with Moses on the mount of transfiguration with Christ. The conjecture, that he was an angel, seems countenanced by the manner of his departure from this world; yet, in James v. 17 he is said to be a man ὁμοπαθὴς, of like passions, or rather with real human propensities: this, however, is reconcilable with the conjecture.

There shall not be dew nor rain these years] In order to remove the abruptness of this address, R. S. Jarchi dreams thus:—"Elijah and Ahab went to comfort Hiel in his grief, concerning his sons. And Ahab said to Elijah, Is it possible that the curse of Joshua, the son of Nun, who was only the servant of Moses, should be fulfilled; and the curse of Moses, our teacher, not be fulfilled; who said, (Deut. xi. 16, 17.) If ye turn aside and serve other gods, and worship them, then the Lord's wrath shall be kindled against you; and he will shut up the heaven that there be no rain? Now all the Israelites serve other gods, and yet the rain is not withheld. Then Elijah said unto Ahab, As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word." The same mode of connecting this, and the preceding chapter, is followed by the Jerusalem and Babylonish Talmuds, Sedar Olam, Abarbanel, &c.

Verse 3. Hide thyself by the brook Cherith] This brook, and the valley through which it ran, are supposed to have been on the western side of Jordan, and not far from Samaria. Others suppose it to have been on the eastern side, because the prophet is commanded to go eastward, ver. 3. It was necessary, after such a declaration to this wicked and idolatrous king, that he should immediately hide himself; as, on the first drought, Ahab would undoubtedly seek his life. But what a proof was this of the power of God, and the vanity of idols! As God's prophet prayed, so there was rain or drought; and all the gods of Israel could not reverse it! Was not this sufficient to have converted all Israel?

Verse 4. I have commanded the ravens to feed thee] Thou shalt not lack the necessities of life; thou shalt be supplied by an especial providence. See more on this subject at the end of the chapter.

Verse 6. And the ravens brought him bread and flesh] The Septuagint, in the Codex Vaticanus, and some ancient fathers, read the passage thus—Καὶ οἱ κοραῖες ἔφερον αὐτῷ ἄρτους τοῦ πρωῆ, καὶ κρέα τοῦ δευτέρου, And the crows brought him bread in the morning, and flesh in the evening; but all the other versions agree with the Hebrew text. This is the first account we have of flesh-meat breakfasts, and flesh-meat suppers. And, as this was the food appointed by the Lord, for the sustenance of the prophet, we may naturally conjecture that it was the food of the people at large.

Verse 7. The brook dried up] Because there had been no rain in the land for some time; God having sent this drought as a testimony against the idolatry of the people. See Deut. xi. 16, 17.

Verse 9. Get thee to Zarephath] This was a town between Tyre and Sidon, but nearer to 11 And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thine hand.

12 And she said, As the LORD thy God liveth, I have not a cake, but a handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruise: and, behold, I am gathering two sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, that we may eat it, and die.

13 And Elijah said unto her, Fear not; go and do as thou hast said; but make me thereof a little cake first, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy son:

the latter, and is therefore called in the text Zarephath, which belongeth to Sidon; or, as the Vulgate and other versions express it, Sarepta of the Sidonians. Sarepta is the name by which it goes in the New Testament; but its present name is Sarphan. Mr. Maundrel, who visited it, describes it as consisting of a few houses only, on the tops of the mountains: but supposes that it anciently stood in the plain below, where there are still ruins of a considerable extent.

Verse 12. A handful of meal in a barrel] The word cad, is to be understood as implying an earthen jar; not a wooden vessel, or barrel of any kind. In the East they preserve their corn and meal in such vessels; without which precaution the insects would destroy them. Travellers, in Asiatic countries, abound with observations of this kind.

The word cruise, may tsipchath, says Jarchi, signifies what, in our tongue, is expressed by bouteille, a bottle. Jarchi was a French rabbin.

Verse 13. But make me thereof a little cake first] This was certainly putting the widow's faith to an extraordinary trial: to take and give to a stranger, of whom she knew nothing, the small pittance requisite to keep her child from perishing, was too much to be expected.

Verse 16. The barrel of meal wasted not] She continued to take out of her jar, and out of her bottle, the quantity of meal and oil requisite for the consumption of her household; and, without carefully estimating what was left, she went with confidence each time for a supply, and was never disappointed. This miracle was very like that worked by Jesus at the marriage at Cana in Galilee: as the servants drew the water out of the pots, they found it turned into wine; and thus they continued to draw wine from the water-pots till the guests had been sufficiently supplied.

Verse 17. There was no breath left in him.] He ceased to breathe, and died.

Verse 18. To call my sin to remembrance] She seems to be now conscious of some secret sin, which she had either forgotten, or too carelessly passed over; and, to punish this, she supposes the life of her son was taken away. It is mostly in times of adversity that we duly consider our moral state: outward afflictions often bring deep searchings of heart.

Verse 21. Stretched himself upon the child three times] It is supposed that he did this in order to communicate some natural warmth to the body of the child, in order to dispose it to receive the departed spirit. Elisha, his disciple, did the same, in order to restore the dead child of the Shunammite, 2 Kings iv. 34. And St. Paul appears to have stretched himself on Eutychus, in order to restore him to life, Acts xx. 10.

LORD, and said, O LORD my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again.

23 And Elijah took the child, and

• Heb. into his inward parts.—p Heb. 11. 35.

[Let this child's soul come into him again.] Surely this means more than the breath. Though the word נֶפֶשׁ nephesh, may sometimes signify the life; yet, does not this imply that the spirit must take possession of the body in order to produce and maintain the flame of animal life? The expressions here are singular: Let his soul, נֶפֶשׁ nephesh, come into him; אֶל קִרְבוֹ al kirbo, into the midst of him.

Verse 22. And the soul נֶפֶשׁ nephesh, "of the child came into him again;" אֶל קִרְבוֹ al kirbo, "into the midst of him;" and he revived, וַיַּחַי va yechai, "and he became alive." And did he not become alive from the circumstance of the immaterial principle coming again into him?

Although רוּחַ ruach, is sometimes put for the breath, yet נֶפֶשׁ generally means the immortal spirit; and where it seems to refer to animal life alone, it is only such a life as is the immediate and necessary effect of the presence of the immortal spirit.

The words and mode of expression here appear to me a strong proof, not only of the existence of an immortal and immaterial spirit in man; but also that that spirit can and does exist in a separate state from the body. It is here represented as being in the midst of the child like a spring in the centre of a machine, which gives motion to every part, and without which the whole would stand still.

Verse 24. The word of the LORD in thy mouth is truth.] Three grand effects were produced by this temporary affliction.—1. The woman was led to examine her heart, and try her ways.—2. The power of God became highly manifest in the resurrection of the child.—3. She was convinced that the word of the LORD was truth, and that not one syllable of it could fall to the ground. Through a little suffering all this good was obtained.

THE subject in the fourth verse of this chapter deserves a more particular consideration:

I have commanded the ravens to feed thee.—It is contended that, if we consider עֲרֵיבִים orebim to signify ravens, we shall find any interpretation on this ground to be clogged with difficulties. I need mention but a few: the raven is an unclean bird, And these ye shall have in abomination among the fowls—every raven after his kind, Lev. xi. 13–15: that is, every species of this genus shall be considered by you unclean and abominable. Is it, therefore, likely that God would employ this most unclean bird to feed his prophet? Besides, where could the ravens get any flesh that was not unclean? Carrion is their food; and would God send any thing of this kind to his prophet? Again, if the flesh was clean which God sent, where could ravens get it? Here must be at least three miracles; one, to bring from some table the flesh to the ravens; another, to induce the ravenous bird to give it up; and the third, to conquer its timidity toward man, so that it could come to the prophet without fear. Now, although God might employ a fowl that would naturally strive to prey on the flesh, and oblige it, contrary to its nature, to give it up; yet it is by no means likely that he would employ a bird that his own law had pronounced abominable. Again, he could not have employed this means without working a variety of miracles at the same time, in order to accomplish one simple end: and this is never God's method: his plan is ever to accomplish the greatest purposes by the simplest means.

brought him down out of the chamber into the house, and delivered him unto his mother: and Elijah said, See, thy son liveth.

The original word orebim has been considered by some as meaning merchants, persons occasionally trading through that country, whom God directed, by inspiration, to supply the prophet with food. To get a constant supply from such hands in an extraordinary way was miracle enough; it showed the superintendence of God, and that the hearts of all men are in his hands.

But in answer to this, it is said, that "the original word never signifies merchants; and that the learned Bochart has proved this." I have carefully read over cap. 13. part ii. lib. 2. of the Hierozicon of this author, where he discusses this subject; and think that he has never succeeded less than in his attempt to prove that ravens are meant in this passage. He allows that the Tyrian merchants are described by this periphrasis עֲרֵיבִים קָרְיִים Ezek. xxvii. 27. the occupiers of thy merchandise; and asserts that עֲרֵיבִים orebim, per se, mercatores nusquam significat, by itself, never signifies merchants. Now, with perfect deference to so great an authority, I assert that עֲרֵיבִים orebey, the contracted form of עֲרֵיבִים orebim, does signify merchants, both in Ezek. xxvii. 9, 27. and that עֲרֵיבִים meoreb signifies a place for merchandise, the market-place or bazaar, Ezek. xxvii. 9, 13, 17, 19; as also the goods sold in such places, Ezek. xxvii. 33; and therefore may, for aught proved to the contrary, signify merchants in the text.

As to Bochart's objection, that the prophet being ordered to go to the brook Cherith, that he might lie hid, and the place of his retreat not be known, if any traders or merchants supplied his wants, they would most likely discover where he was, &c.; I think there is no weight in it; for the men might be as well bound by the secret inspiration of God, not to discover the place of his retreat, as they were to supply his wants: besides, they might have been of the number of those seven thousand men who had not boxed their knees to the image of Baal, and consequently would not inform Ahab and Jezebel of their prophet's hiding place.

Some have supposed that the original means Arabians; but Bochart contends that there were no Arabians in that district: this is certainly more than he or any other man can prove. Colonies of Arabs, and hordes and families of the same people, have been widely scattered over different places, for the purpose of temporary sojournment and trade; for they were a wandering people, and often to be found in different districts remote enough from the place of their birth. But, letting this pass merely for what it is worth, and feeling as I do the weight of the objections that may be brought against the supposition of ravens being the agents employed to feed the prophet, I would observe, that there was a town or city of the name of Orbo, that was not far from the place where Elijah was commanded to hide himself. In Bereshith Rabba, a rabbinical comment on Genesis, we have these words: עיר היא ביהמאן ושהו ערבו Air hia belehem Beithshan, veshemo orbo; "There is a town in the vicinity of Bethshan, (Scythopolis,) and its name is Orbo." We may add to this from St. Jerom, Orbim accolæ villæ in finibus Arabum, Elivæ dederunt alimenta; "The Orbim, inhabitants of a town in the confines of the Arabs, gave nourishment to Elijah." Now, I consider Jerom's testimony to be of great worth, because he spent several years in the Holy Land, that he might acquire the most correct notion possible of the language and geography of the country, as well as of the customs and habits of the people, in order to his translating the Sacred Writings, and explaining them. Had there not been such a place in his time he could not have written as above: and, although in this place the common printed editions of the Vulgate have corvi, crows or ravens; yet, in 2 Chron. xxi. 16. St. Jerom translates the same word ערבים Orbim, "the Arabians;" and the same in Neh. iv. 7: it is, therefore, most likely that the inhabitants of Orëb, or Orbo, as mentioned above, furnished the aliment by which the prophet was sustained; and that they did this, being specially moved thereto by the Spirit of the Lord. Add to all these testimonies that of the Arabic version, which considers the word as meaning a people, عرب Orabim, and not ravens or fowls of any kind. In such a case this version is high authority.

It is contended, that those who think the miracle is lost if the ravens be not admitted, are bound to show—1. With what propriety the raven, an unclean animal, could be employed? 2. Why the dove, or some such clean creature, was not preferred? 3. How the ravens could get properly dressed flesh to bring to the prophet? 4. From whose table it was taken; and by what means? 5. Whether it be consistent with the wisdom of God, and his general conduct, to work a tissue of miracles where one was sufficient? 6. And whether it be not best, in all cases of this kind, to adopt that mode of interpretation which is most simple; the wisdom, goodness, and providence of God, being as equally apparent as in those cases where a multitude of miracles are resorted to, in order to solve difficulties?

CHAPTER XVIII.

Elijah is commanded by the Lord to show himself to Ahab, 1, 2. Ahab, and Obadiah his steward search the land to find provender for the cattle, 3—6. Obadiah meets Elijah, who commands him to inform Ahab that he is ready to present himself before him, 7—15. Elijah and Ahab meet, 16—18. Elijah proposes that the four hundred and fifty priests of Baal should be gathered together at mount Carmel; that they should offer a sacrifice to their god, and he to Jehovah; and the God who should send down fire to consume the sacrifice should be acknowledged as the true God, 19—24. The proposal is accepted, and the priests of Baal call in vain upon their god through the whole day, 25—29. Elijah offers his sacrifice, prays to God, and fire comes down from heaven and consumes it; whereupon the people acknowledge Jehovah to be the true God, and slay all the prophets of Baal, 30—40. Elijah promises Ahab that there shall be immediate rain; it comes accordingly, and Ahab and Elijah come to Jezreel, 41—46.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVIII.

Verse 1. After many days—in the third year.] We learn from our Lord, Luke iv. 25. that the drought, which brought on the famine in Israel, lasted three years and six months, St. James, v. 17. gives it the same duration. Probably Elijah spent six months at the brook Cherith, and three years with the widow at Sarepta.

I will send rain upon the earth.] The word האדמה haadamah, should be translated the ground, or, the land; as it is probable that this drought did not extend beyond the land of Judea.

Verse 3. Obadiah feared the LORD greatly.] He was a sincere and zealous worshipper of the true God; and his conduct toward the persecuted prophets was the full proof both of his piety and humanity.

Verse 4. Fed them with bread and water.] By these are signified the necessities of life, of whatsoever kind.

Verse 5. Unto all fountains of water.] All water, and unto all brooks; peradventure we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive, [†] that we lose not all the beasts.

6 So they divided the land between them to pass throughout it: Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

7 ¶ And as Obadiah was in the way, behold, Elijah met him: and he knew him, and fell on his face, and said, Art thou that my lord Elijah?

8 And he answered him, I am: go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

9 And he said, What have I sinned, that thou wouldest deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab, to slay me?

10 As the LORD thy God liveth, there is no nation nor kingdom, whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee: and when they said, He is not there, he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that they found thee not.

11 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord. Behold, Elijah is here.

12 And it shall come to pass, as soon as I am gone from thee, that ² the Spirit of the LORD shall carry thee whither I know not; and so when I come and tell Ahab, and he cannot find thee, he shall slay me: but I thy servant fear marshy or well-watered districts, where grass was most likely to be preserved.

Verse 10. There is no nation nor kingdom] He had sent through all his own states, and to the neighbouring governments, to find out the prophet; as he knew, from his own declaration, that both rain and drought were to be the effect of his prayers. Had he found him, he no doubt intended to oblige him to procure rain; or punish him for having brought on this drought.

He took an oath] Ahab must have had considerable power and authority among the neighbouring nations, to require and exact this; and Elijah must have kept himself very secret to have shunned such an extensive and minute search.

Verse 12. The Spirit of the LORD shall carry thee] Obadiah supposed that the Spirit of the LORD had carried him to some strange country, during the three years and a half of the drought: and, as he had reason to think that Ahab would slay Elijah if he found him, and that the God of the prophet would not suffer his servant to fall into such murderous hands; he took for granted that, as soon as he should come into danger, so soon would the Spirit of the LORD carry him away, or direct him to some hiding-place.

Verse 13. When Jezebel slew the prophets] This persecution was probably during the

the LORD from my youth.

13 Was it not told my lord what I did when Jezebel slew the prophets of the LORD, how I hid a hundred men of the LORD's prophets by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water?

14 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here: and he shall slay me.

15 And Elijah said, As the LORD of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, I will surely show myself unto him to-day.

16 So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him; and Ahab went to meet Elijah.

17 And it came to pass, when Ahab saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel?

18 ¶ And he answered, I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, ^k in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the LORD, and thou hast followed Baalim.

19 Now therefore send and gather to me all Israel unto mount ^l Carmel, and the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, ^m and the prophets of the groves four hundred, which eat at Jezebel's table.

20 So Ahab sent unto all the children dearth; for, as this bad woman would attribute the public calamity to Elijah, not being able to find him, she would naturally wreak her vengeance on the prophets of Jehovah, who were within her reach.

Verse 18. I have not troubled Israel] Here the cause of the dearth is placed on its true ground: the king and the people had forsaken the true God; and God shut up the heavens that there was no rain. Elijah was only the minister whom God used to dispense this judgment.

Verse 19. Gather to me all Israel] The heads of tribes and families; the rulers of the people.

The prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty—the prophets of the groves four hundred] The king and queen had different religious establishments: the king and his servants worshipped Baal, the supreme lord and master of the world, the sun. For this establishment four hundred and fifty priests were maintained.

The queen and her women worshipped אֲשֵׁרָה Asherah, אֲסִרְתֵּי Astarté, or Venus; and for this establishment four hundred priests were maintained. These latter were in high honour: they ate at Jezebel's table; they made a part of her household. It appears that those eight hundred and fifty priests were the domestic chaplains of the king and queen; and, probably, not all the priests that belonged to the rites of Baal and 21 ¶ And Elijah came unto all the people, and said, ^oHow long halt ye between two ^oopinions? If the LORD be God, follow him; but if ^aBaal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word.

22 Then said Elijah unto the people, ^aI, even I only, remain a prophet of the LORD; ^tbut Baal's prophets are four hundred and fifty men.

23 Let them therefore give us two bullocks; and let them choose one bullock for themselves, and cut it in pieces, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under; and I will dress the other bullock, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under.

Asherah in the land; and yet, from the following verse, we learn that Ahab had sent to all the children of Israel to collect these prophets: but Jezebel had certainly four hundred of them in her own house, who were not at the assembly mentioned here. Those of Baal might have a more extensive jurisdiction than those of Asherah, the latter being constantly resident in Samaria.

Verse 21. How long halt ye between two opinions? Literally, "How long hop ye about upon two boughs?" This is a metaphor taken from birds hopping about from bough to bough; not knowing on which to settle. Perhaps the idea of limping, through lameness, should not be overlooked. They were halt, they could not walk uprightly; they dreaded Jehovah, and therefore could not totally abandon him; they feared the king and queen, and therefore thought they must embrace the religion of the state. Their conscience forbade them to do the former; their fear of man persuaded them to do the latter: but in neither were they heartily engaged; and, at this juncture, their minds seemed in equipoise, and they were waiting for a favourable opportunity to make their decision. Such an opportunity now, through the mercy of God, presented itself.

Verse 22. I only, remain a prophet of the LORD That is, I am the only prophet of God present, and can have but the influence of an individual; while the prophets of Baal are four hundred and fifty to one! It appears that the queen's prophets, amounting to four hundred, were not at this great assembly; and these are they whom we meet, chap. xxii. 6. and whom the king consulted relative to the battle at Ramoth-gilead.

Verse 24. The God that answereth by fire Elijah gave them every advantage when he granted that the God who answered by fire should be acknowledged as the true God: for as the Baal who was worshipped here was incontestably Apollo, or the sun, he was therefore 25 ¶ And Elijah said unto the prophets of Baal, Choose you one bullock for yourselves, and dress it first; for ye are many: and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.

26 And they took the bullock which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, ^whear us. But there was ^xno voice, nor any that ^yanswered. And they ^zleaped upon the altar which was made.

the god of fire, and had only to work in his own element.

Verse 25. For ye are many And therefore shall have the preference; and the advantage of being first in your application to the Deity.

Verse 26. From morning even until noon It seems that the priests of Baal employed the whole day in their desperate rites. The time is divided into two periods:—1. From morning until noon; this was employed in preparing and offering the sacrifice, and in earnest supplication for the celestial fire. Still there was no answer; and at noon Elijah began to mock and ridicule them, and this excited them to commence anew.—And, 2. They continued from noon to the time of offering the evening sacrifice, dancing up and down, cutting themselves with knives, mingling their own blood with their sacrifice, praying, supplicating, and acting in the most frantic manner.

And they leaped upon the altar Perhaps it will be more correct to read with the margin, they leaped up and down at the altar; they danced round it with strange and hideous cries and gesticulations: tossing their heads to and fro, with a great variety of bodily contortions.

A heathen priest, a high priest of Budhoo, has been just showing me the manner in which they dance and jump up and down, and from side to side, twisting their bodies in all manner of ways, when making their offerings to their demon gods; a person all the while beating furiously on a tom-tom, or drum, to excite and sustain those frantic attitudes; at the same time imploring the succour of their god, frequently in some such language as this—"O loving brother devil, hear me, and receive my offering." To perform these sacrificial attitudes they have persons who are taught to practise them from their earliest years, according to directions laid down in religious books; and to make the joints and body pliant, much anointing of the parts, and mechanical management, are used; and they have masters whose 27 And it came to pass at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry ^a aloud; for he is a god: either ^b he is talking, or he ^c is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked.

28 And they cried aloud, and ^d cut themselves, after their manner, with knives and lancets, till ^e the blood gushed out upon them.

29 And it came to pass, when mid-day was past, ^f and they prophesied until the time of the ^g offering of the evening sacrifice, that there was ^h neibusiness it is to teach these attitudes and contortions, according to the rules laid down in those books. It seems, therefore, that was a very general practice of idolatry; as, indeed, are the others mentioned in this chapter.

Verse 27. At noon—Elijah mocked them] Had not Elijah been conscious of the divine protection, he certainly would not have used such freedom of speech, while encompassed by his enemies.

Cry aloud] Make a great noise: oblige him by your vociferations to attend to your suit.

For he is a god] הוּא אֱלֹהִים הוּא Elohim hu; he is the supreme god; you worship him as such; he must needs be such; and, no doubt, jealous of his own honour, and the credit of his votaries!

He is talking] He may be giving audience to some others: let him know that he has other worshippers, and must not give too much of his attention to one. Perhaps the word וַיִּשַׁח siach, should be interpreted as in the margin, he meditateth; he is in a profound reverie; he is making some godlike projects; he is considering how he may best keep up his credit in the nation. Shout! let him know that all is now at stake.

He is pursuing] He may be taking his pleasure in hunting; and may continue to pursue the game in heaven, till he have lost all his credit and reverence on earth.

The original words, וַיִּשַׁח sig lo, are variously translated: He is in a hotel, in diversorio, VULGATE. Perhaps he is delivering oracles μὴ ποτε χρηματίζῃ αὐτός, SEPTUAGINT. Or, he is on some special business. Therefore, cry aloud.

He is in a journey] He has left his audience-chamber, and is making some excursions: call aloud to bring him back, as his all is at stake.

Peradventure he sleepeth] Rab. S. Jarchi gives this a most degrading meaning: I will give it in Latin, because it is too coarse to be put in English;—Fortassis ad locum secretum abiit, ut ventrem ibi exoneret. "Perhaps he is gone to the ——" This certainly reduces Baal to the lowest degree of contempt, and with it the ridicule and sarcasm are complete.

Verse 28. They cried aloud] The poor fools acted as they were bidden.

And cut themselves after their manner] This was done according to the rites of that bar-ther voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded.

30 ¶ And Elijah said unto all the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him. ^k And he repaired the altar of the LORD that was broken down.

31 And Elijah took twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, unto whom the word of the LORD came, saying, ^l Israel shall be thy name;

32 And with the stones he built an altar ^m in the name of the LORD: and he made a trench about the altar, as barous religion: if the blood of the bullock would not move him, they thought their own blood might; and with it they smeared themselves and their sacrifice. This was not only the custom of the idolatrous Israelites, but of the Syrians, Persians, Greeks, Indians, and in short, of all the heathen world.

Verse 29. They prophesied] They made incessant prayer and supplication: a farther proof that to pray, or supplicate, is the proper ideal meaning of the word נָבָא naba, which we constantly translate to prophesy, when even all the circumstances of the time and place are against such a meaning. See what is said on the case of Saul among the prophets, in the note on 1 Sam. x. 5.

Verse 30. He repaired the altar of the LORD] There had been an altar of Jehovah in this place, called, even among the heathens, the altar of Carmel, probably built in the time of the Judges; or, as the rabbins imagine, by Saul. Tacitus and Suetonius mention an altar on mount Carmel, which Vespasian went to consult: there was no temple nor statue, but simply an altar that was respectable for its antiquity. "Est Judeam inter Syriamque Carmelus; ita vocant montem. Deumque: nec simulacrum Deo, aut templum solum tradidere majores: aram tantum, et reverentiam." TACIT. Hist. lib. ii. c. 78. A priest, named Basilides, officiated at that altar; and assured Vespasian that all his projects would be crowned with success.

Suetonius speaks to this purpose:—Apud Judeam Carmeli Dei oraculum consulente ita confirmavere sortes, ut quicquid cogitaret volvereque animo, quamlibet magnum, id esse proventurum pollicerentur. SUET. in Vespas. cap. 5. The mount, the absence of a temple, no image, but a simple altar, very ancient, and which was held in reverence on account of the true answers which had been given there, prove that this was originally the altar of Jehovah; though, in the time of Vespasian, it seems to have been occupied by a heathen priest, and devoted to lying vanities.

Verse 31. Took twelve stones] He did this to show that all the twelve tribes of Israel should be joined in the worship of Jehovah.

Verse 32. He made a trench] This was to detain the water that might fall down from the altar, when the barrels should be poured upon it, ver. 35.

Verse 33. Fill four barrels] This was done to prevent any kind of suspicion that there was fire concealed under the altar. An ancient writer, under the name of Chrysostom, quoted by Calmet, says, that he had seen, under the altars of the heathens, holes dug in the earth, with funnels proceeding from them, and communicating with openings on the tops of the altars. In the former the priests concealed fire, which, communicating through the fun-nels with the holes, set fire to the wood, and consumed the sacrifice; and thus the simple people were led to believe that the sacrifice was consumed by a miraculous fire. Elijah showed that no such knavery could be practised in the present case. Had there been a concealed fire under the altar, as in the case mentioned above, the water that was thrown on the altar must have extinguished it most effectually. This very precaution has for ever put this miracle beyond the reach of suspicion.

Verse 36. LORD God of Abraham] He thus addressed the Supreme Being, that they might know, when the answer was given, that it was the same God whom the patriarchs and their fathers worshipped; and thus have their hearts turned back again to the true religion of their ancestors.

Verse 38. Then the fire of the LORD fell] It did not burst out from the altar: this might still, notwithstanding the water, have afforded some ground for suspicion that fire had been concealed (after the manner of the heathens) under the altar.

Consumed the burnt-sacrifice] The process of this consumption is very remarkable; and all calculated to remove the possibility of a they fell on their faces: and they said, suspicion that there was any concealed fire.

1. The fire came down from heaven. 2. The pieces of the sacrifice were first consumed. 3.
The wood next, to show that it was not even by means of the wood that the flesh was burnt.
4. The twelve stones were also consumed, to show that it was no common fire, but one whose agency nothing could resist. 5. The dust, the earth of which the altar was constructed, was burnt up. And, 6. The water that was in the trench was, by the action of this fire, entirely evaporated. 7. The action of this fire was, in every case, downward, contrary to the nature of all earthly and material fire. Nothing can be more simple and artless than this description; and yet how amazingly full and satisfactory is the whole account!

Verse 39. Fell on their faces] Struck with awe and reverence at the sight of this incontestable miracle.

And they said] We should translate the words thus:—JEHOVAH, He is the God! JE-HOVAH, He is the God! Baal is not the God;
Jehovah alone is the God of Israel!

As our term Lord is very equivocal, we should every where insert the original word יהוה which we should write Yehé or Yeheveh, or Yahvah or Yehueh; or, according to the points, Yehovah.

Verse 40. Let not one of them escape] They had committed the highest crime against the state and the people, by introducing idolatry, and bringing down God's judgments upon the land: therefore their lives were forfeited to that law which had ordered every idolater to be slain. It seems also that Ahab, who was present, consented to this act of impartial justice.

Verse 41. Get thee up, eat and drink] It appears most evidently that Ahab and the prophet were now on good terms; and this is a farther evidence, that the slaying of the false prophets was by the king's consent.

Verse 42. Put his face between his knees] He kneeled down, and then bowed his head to the earth; so that, while his face was between his knees, his forehead touched the ground.

Verse 43. Look toward the sea.] From the top of mount Carmel the Mediterranean sea was full in view.

Verse 44. There ariseth a little cloud out of the sea, like a man's hand.] וַיֵּרָא כְּכַף יָד ke caph ish, like the hollow of a man's hand. In the form of the hand bent, the concave side downmost. I have witnessed a resemblance of this kind at sea, previously to a violent storm. A little cloud, the size of a man's hand, first appearing, and this increasing in size and density every moment, till at last it covered the whole heavens, and then burst forth with incredible fury.

Mr. Bruce mentions a similar appearance in Abyssinia:—"Every morning, in Abyssinia, is clear, and the sun shines. About nine a small cloud, not above four feet broad, appears in the east, whirling violently round, as if upon an axis; but arrived near the zenith, it first abates its motion, then loses its form, and extends itself greatly, and seems to call up vapours from all opposite quarters. clouds, having attained nearly the same height, rush against each other with great violence, and put me always in mind of Elijah foretelling rain on mount Carmel." Travels, vol. v. page 336. edit. 1805.

Verse 44. Ran before Ahab] Many think that Elijah ran before the king, in order to do him honour: and much learned labour has been spent on this passage, in order to show that Elijah had put himself at the head of a company of chanters, who ran before the king, reciting his praises, or the praises of God; a custom which still exists in Arabian countries. I believe all these entirely mistake the writer's meaning. Ahab yoked his chariot, and made all speed to Jezreel. The hand of the Lord, or, as the Targum says, the spirit of strength, came upon Elijah, and he girded up his loins, that is, tucked up his long garments in his girdle, and ran; and notwithstanding the advantage the king had, by means of his chariot, the prophet reached Jezreel before him. There is no intimation here that he ran before the horses' heads. All this was intended to show that he was under the peculiar influence and inspiration of the Almighty, that the king might respect and fear him; and not do, or permit to be done to him, any kind of outrage.

5 And as he lay and slept under a juniper tree, behold, then an angel touched him, and said unto him, Arise and eat.

6 And he looked, and, behold, there was a cake baken on the coals, and a cruise of water at his head. And he did eat and drink, and laid him down again.

Verse 10. I have been very jealous for the LORD.] The picture which he draws here of apostate Israel is very affecting:—

1. They have forsaken thy covenant.] They have now cleaved to and worshipped other gods.

2. Thrown down thine altars.] Endeavoured, as much as they possibly could, to abolish thy worship, and destroy its remembrance from the land.

3. And slain thy prophets.] That there might be none to prove their iniquity, or teach the truth; so that the restoration of the true worship might be impossible.

4. I only, am left.] They have succeeded in destroying all the rest of the prophets, and they are determined not to rest till they slay me.

Verse 11. Stand upon the mount before the LORD.] God was now treating Elijah nearly in the same way that he treated Moses: and it is not unlikely that Elijah was now standing on the same place where Moses stood, when God revealed himself to him in the giving of the law. See Exod. xix. 9, 16.

The LORD passed by.] It appears that the passing by of the Lord occasioned the strong wind, the earthquake, and the fire: but in none of these was God to make a discovery of himself unto the prophet; yet these, in some sort, prepared his way, and prepared Elijah to hear the small still voice. The apparatus, indicating the presence of the Divine Majesty, is nearly the same as that employed to minister the law to Moses; and many have supposed that God intended these things to be understood thus: that God intended to display himself to mankind, not in judgment, but in mercy; and that as the wind, the earthquake, and the fire, were only the forerunners of the small still voice, which proclaimed the benignity of the Father of spirits; so the law, and all its was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake:

12 And after the earthquake a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire: and after the fire a still small voice.

13 And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entering in of the cave. ^p And, behold, there came a voice unto him, and said, What doest thou here, Elijah?

terrors, were only intended to introduce the mild spirit of the Gospel of Jesus, proclaiming glory to God in the highest; and, on earth, peace and good will unto men. Others think that all this was merely natural; and that a real earthquake, and its accompaniments, are described. 1. Previously to earthquakes the atmosphere becomes greatly disturbed, mighty winds and tempests taking place. 2. This is followed by the actual agitation of the earth. 3. In this agitation fire frequently escapes, or a burning lava is poured out, often accompanied with thunder and lightning. 4. After these the air becomes serene, the thunder ceases to roll, the forked lightnings no longer play, and nothing remains but a gentle breeze. However correct all this may be, it seems most probably evident that what took place at this time was out of the ordinary course of nature: and although the things, as mentioned here, may often be the accompaniments of an earthquake that has nothing supernatural in it; yet here, though every thing is produced in its natural order, yet the exciting cause of the whole is supernatural. Thus the Chaldee understands the whole passage: "And behold the Lord was revealed; and before him was a host of the angels of the wind, tearing the mountains, and breaking the rocks before the Lord; but the Majesty (Shekinah) of the Lord was not in the host of the angels of the wind. And after the host of the angels of the wind, there was a host of the angels of commotion; but the Majesty of the Lord was not in the host of the angels of commotion. And after the host of the angels of commotion, a fire; but the Majesty of the Lord was not in the host of the angels of fire. And after the host of the angels of fire, a voice singing in silence," &c.; that is, a sound with which no other sound was mingled. Perhaps the whole of this is intended to give an emblematical representation of the various displays of divine providence and grace.

Verse 13. Wrapped his face in his mantle] This he did to signify his respect: so Moses hid his face, for he dared not to look upon God, with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away.

15 And the LORD said unto him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus: ^a and when thou comest, anoint Hazael to be king over Syria;

16 And ^t Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel; and ^u Elisha the son of Shaphat, of Abelmeholah, shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.

Verse 15. To the wilderness of Damascus] He does not desire him to take a road by which he might be likely to meet Jezebel, or any other of his enemies.

Anoint Hazael] For what reason the Lord was about to make all these revolutions, we are told in ver. 17. God was about to bring his judgments upon the land, and especially on the house of Ahab. This he exterminated by means of Jehu; and Jehu himself was a scourge of the Lord to the people. Hazael also grievously afflicted Israel: see the accomplishment of these purposes, 2 Kings viii. and ix.

Verse 16. Elisha—shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.] Jarchi gives a strange turn to these words. "Thy prophecy, (or execution of the prophetic office,) does not please me; because thou art the constant accuser of my children." With all their abominations, this rabbin would have us to believe that those vile idolaters and murderers were still the beloved children of God! And why?—Because God had made a covenant with their fathers; therefore, said the ancient as well as the modern Siren song: "Once in the covenant, always in the covenant; once a son, and a son for ever." And yet we have here the testimony of God's own prophet, and the testimony of their history, that they had forsaken the covenant; and, consequently, renounced all their interest in it.

Verse 17: Shall Elisha slay.] We do not find that Elisha either used the sword, or commissioned it to be used, though he delivered solemn prophecies against this disobedient people; and this is probably the sense in which this should be understood, as Elisha was prophet before Hazael was king, and Hazael was king before Jehu; and the heavy famine which he brought on the land took place before the reign either of Jehu or Hazael. The meaning of the prophecy may be this:—Hazael, Jehu, and Elisha, shall be the ministers of my vengeance against this disobedient and rebellious people. The order of time, here, is not to be regarded.

Verse 18. Seven thousand in Israel.] That is, many thousands; for seven is a number of perfection, as we have often seen: so the bar-ren has borne seven; has had a numerous offspring. Gold seven times purified; purified till all the dross is perfectly separated from it. The court, and multitudes of the people, had gone after Baal; but perhaps the majority of the common people still worshipped, in secret, the God of their fathers.

Every mouth which hath not kissed him.] Idolaters often kissed their hand in honour of their idols; and hence the origin of adoration:
bringing the hand to the mouth, after touching the idol, if it were within reach; and, if not, they kissed the right hand, in token of respect and subjection. The word is compounded of ad, to, and os, oris, the mouth. Dexterâ manu deum contingentes, ori admovebant: Touching the god with their right hand, they applied it to their mouth." So kissing the hand, and adoration, mean the same thing: thus Pliny, Inter adorandum, dexteram ad osculum referimus, Nat. Hist. lib. xxviii. cap. 2.—"In the act of adoration we kiss the right hand." Cicero mentions a statue of Hercules, the chin and lips of which were considerably worn by the frequent kissing of his worshippers: Ut rictus ejus, et mentem paulo sit attritus, quod in precibus et gratulationibus, non solum id venerari, sed etiam osculari solent.—Orat. in VERREM.

Verse 19. Twelve yoke of oxen.] Elisha must have had a considerable estate, when he kept twelve yoke of oxen to till the ground. If, therefore, he obeyed the prophetic call, he did it to considerable secular loss.

Cast his mantle upon him.] Either this was a ceremony used in a call to the prophetic office, or it indicated that he was called to be the servant of the prophet. The mantle, or pallium, was the peculiar garb of the prophet, as we may learn from Zech. xiii. 4; and this was probably made of a skin dressed with the hair on.
See also 2 Kings i. 8. It is likely, therefore, that Elijah threw his mantle on Elisha to signify to him that he was called to the prophetic office. See more on this subject below.

nistered unto him.

S. 21, 22. Luke 9. 61, 62.—b Heb. Go return.—c 2 Sam. 24. 22.

Verse 20. Let me—kiss my father and my mother] Elisha fully understood that he was called by this ceremony to the prophetic office:
and it is evident that he conferred not with flesh and blood, but resolved, immediately resolved, to obey; only he wished to bid farewell to his relatives. See below.

What have I done to thee?] Thy call is not from me, but from God: to him, not to me, art thou accountable for thy use or abuse of it.

Verse 21. He returned back] He went home to his house: probably he yet lived with his parents, for it appears he was a single man;—
and he slew a yoke of the oxen: he made a feast for his household, having boiled the flesh of the oxen with his agricultural implements, probably in token that he had abandoned secular life;
and, having bidden them an affectionate farewell, he arose, went after Elijah, who probably still awaited his coming in the field, or vicinity, and ministered unto him.

On the call of Elisha I may make a few remarks:

"1. Elijah is commanded, ver. 16. to anoint Elisha prophet in his room. Though it is generally believed that kings, priests, and prophets, were inaugurated into their respective offices by the rite of unction, and this I have elsewhere supposed, yet this is the only instance on record where a prophet is commanded to be anointed, and even this case is problematical: for it does not appear that Elijah did anoint Elisha. Nothing is mentioned in his call to the prophetic office, but the casting the mantle of Elijah upon him; wherefore it is probable that the word anoint, here, signifies no more than the call to the office, accompanied by the simple rite of having the prophet's mantle thrown over his shoulders.

2. A call to the ministerial office, though it completely sever from all secular occupations, yet never supersedes the duties of filial affection. Though Elisha must leave his oxen, and become a prophet to Israel, yet he may first go home, eat and drink with his parents and relatives, and bid them an affectionate farewell.

3. We do not find any attempt on the part of his parents to hinder him from obeying the divine call: they had too much respect for the authority of God, and they left their son to the dictates of his conscience. Wo to those parents who strive, for filthy lucre's sake, to prevent their sons from embracing a call to preach Jesus to their perishing countrymen, or to the heathen, because they see that the life of a true evangelist is a life of comparative poverty; and they had rather he should gain money than save souls.

4. The cloak, we have already observed, was the prophet's peculiar habit; it was probably in imitation of this that the Greek philosophers wore a sort of mantle, that distinguished them from the common people; and by which they were at once as easily known as certain academical characters are by their gowns and square caps. The pallium was as common among the Greeks as the toga was among the Romans. Each of these was so peculiar to those nations, that Palliatius is used to signify a Greek, as Togatus is to signify a Roman.

5. Was it from this act of Elijah, conveying the prophetic office and its authority to Elisha, by throwing his mantle upon him, that the popes of Rome borrowed the ceremony of collating an archbishop to the spiritualities and temporalities of his see, and investing him with plenary sacerdotal authority, by sending him what is well known in ecclesiastical history by the name pallium, pall, or cloak? I think this is likely; for, as we learn from Zech. xlii. 4. and 2 Kings i. 8. that this mantle was a rough or hairy garment, so we learn from Durandus that the pallium, or pall, was made of white wool, after the following manner:

The nuns of St. Agnes annually, on the festival of their patroness, offer two white lambs on the altar of their church, during the time they sing Agnus Dei, in a solemn mass; which lambs are afterward taken by two of the canons of the Lateran church, and by them given to the pope's subdeacons, who send them to pasture till shearing time; and then they are shorn, and the pall is made of their wool, mixed with other white wool. The pall is then carried to the Lateran church, and there placed on the high altar by the deacons, on the bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul; and after a usual watching, or vigil, it is carried away in the night, and delivered to the subdeacons, who lay it up safely. Now, because it was taken from the body of St. Peter, it signifies the plenitude of ecclesiastical power; and, therefore, the popes assume it as their prerogative, being the professed successors of this apostle, to invest other prelates with it. This was at first confined to Rome, but afterward it was sent to popish prelates in different parts of the world.

6. It seems from the place in Zechariah, quoted above, that this rough cloak, or garment, became the covering of hypocrites and deceivers; and that persons assumed the prophetic dress without the prophetic call: and God threatens to unmask them. We know that this became general in the popish church in the beginning of the 16th century; and God stripped those false prophets of their false and wicked pretensions, and exposed them to the people. Many of them profited by this exposure, and became reformed; and the whole community became at least more cautious. The Romish church should be thankful to the Reformation for the moral purity which is now found in it; for had not its vices, and usurpations, and super-scandalous sales of indulgences, been thus checked, the whole fabric had, by this time, been probably dissolved. Should it carry its reformation still farther, it would have a more legitimate pretension to the title of apostolic. Let them compare their ritual with the Bible and common sense, and they will find cause to lop many cumbrous and rotten branches from a good tree.

CHAPTER XX.

Ben-hadad, king of Syria, and thirty-two kings, besiege Samaria. 1. He sends an insulting message to Ahab; and insists on pillaging the whole city, 2-7. The elders of Israel counsel the king not to submit to such shameful conditions, 8. He sends a refusal to Ben-hadad; who, being enraged, vows revenge, 9-12. A prophet comes to Ahab, and promises him victory, and gives him directions how he should order the battle, 13-19. The Syrians are discomfited, and Ben-hadad scarcely escapes, 20, 21. The prophet warns Ahab to be on his guard, for the Syrians would return next year, 22. The counsellors of the king of Syria instruct him how he may successfully invade Israel, 23-26. He leads an immense army to Aphek, to fight with Ahab, 26, 27. A man of God encourages Ahab; who attacks the Syrians, and kills one hundred thousand of them, 29. They retreat to Aphek, where twenty-seven thousand of them are slain by a casualty, 30. Ben-hadad and his courtiers, being closely besieged in Aphek, and unable to escape, surrender themselves, with sackcloth on their loins, and halters on their heads; the king of Israel receives them in a friendly manner, and makes a covenant with Ben-hadad, 31-34. A prophet, by a symbolical action, shows him the impolicy of his conduct, in permitting Ben-hadad to escape; and predicts his death, and the slaughter of Israel, 35-43.

AND Ben-hadad the king of Syria gathered all his host together: and there were thirty and two kings with him, and horses, and chariots: and he^a went up and besieged Samaria, and warred against it.

Verse 4. I am thine, and all that I have.] He probably hoped, by this humiliation, to soften

NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Verse 1. Ben-hadad] Several MSS. and some early printed editions, have Ben-hadar; or, the son of Hadar, as the Septuagint. He is supposed to be the same whom Asa stirred up against the king of Israel, chap. xv. 18. or, as others, his son or grandson.

A. M. 3103. B. C. 901. Ante I. Ol. 125. An. Megacelis, Arch. Athen. perpet. 21. saying, Although I have sent unto thee, saying, Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children;

6 Yet I will send my servants unto thee to-morrow about this time, and they shall search thine house, and the houses of thy servants, and it shall be, that whatsoever is ^b pleasant in thine eyes, they shall put it in their hand, and take it away.

7 Then the king of Israel called all the elders of the land, and said, Mark, I pray you, and see how this man seeketh ^c mischief: for he sent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold; and ^d I denied him not.

8 And all the elders and all the people said unto him, Hearken not unto him, nor consent.

9 Wherefore he said unto the messengers of Ben-hadad, Tell my lord the king, All that thou didst send for to thy servant at the first I will do: but this thing I may not do. And the messengers departed, and brought him word again.

10 And Ben-hadad sent unto him, and said, ^e The gods do so unto me, and this barbarous king, and perhaps to get better conditions.

Verse 6. Whatsoever is pleasant in thine eyes] It is not easy to discern in what this second requisition differed from the first; for surely his silver, gold, wives, and children, were among his most pleasant or desirable things. Jarchi supposes that it was the Book of the Law of the Lord which Ben-hadad meant, and of which he intended to deprive Israel. It is, however, evident that Ben-hadad meant to sack the whole city; and, after having taken the royal treasures, and the wives and children of the king, to deliver up the whole to be pillaged by his soldiers.

Verse 8. Hearken not unto him] The elders had every thing at stake; and they chose rather to make a desperate defence than tamely to yield to such degrading and ruinous conditions.

Verse 10. If the dust of Samaria shall suffice] This is variously understood. Jonathan translates thus: "If the dust of Shomer shall be sufficient for the soles of the feet of the people that shall accompany me:" i. e. I shall bring such an army that there will scarcely be room for them to stand in Samaria and its vicinity.

Verse 11. Let not him that girdeth on] This was, no doubt, a proverbial mode of expression. Jonathan translates, "Tell him, let not him who girds himself, and goes down to the battle, boast more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me.

11 And the king of Israel answered and said, Tell him, Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.

12 And it came to pass, when Ben-hadad heard this ^g message, as he was ^h drinking, he and the kings in the ⁱ pavilions; that he said unto his servants, ^k Set yourselves in array. And they set themselves in array against the city.

13 ¶ And, behold, there ^l came a prophet unto Ahab king of Israel, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Hast thou seen all this great multitude? behold, ^m I will deliver it into thine hand this day; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

14 And Ahab said, By whom? And he said, Thus saith the LORD, Even by the ⁿ young men of the princes of the provinces. Then he said, Who shall ^o order the battle? And he answered, Thou.

15 Then he numbered the young men of the princes of the provinces, and they were two hundred and thirty-two: and after them he numbered all the people, as he who has conquered and returned from it."

Verse 12. In the pavilions] This word comes from papilio, a butterfly; because tents, when pitched or spread out, resembled such animals: partly because of the mode of their expansion, and partly because of the manner in which they were painted.

Set yourselves in array.] The original word simu, which we translate by this long periphrasis, is probably a military term for Begin the attack; invest the city; every man to his post; or some such like expression.

Verse 13. There came a prophet] Who this was we cannot tell: Jarchi says it was Micaiah, son of Imlah. It is strange that, on such an occasion, we hear nothing of Elijah, or Elisha! Is it not possible that this was one of them disguised?

Verse 14. By the young men of the princes of the provinces.] These were probably some chosen persons out of the militia of different districts, raised by the princes of the provinces; the same as we would call lord-lieutenants of counties.

Verse 15. Two hundred and thirty-two] These were probably the king's life or body guards; not all the militia, but two hundred and thirty of them who constituted the royal guard in Samaria. They were, therefore, the even all the children of Israel, being seven thousand.

16 And they went out at noon. But Ben-hadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions, he and the kings, the thirty and two kings that helped him.

17 And the young men of the princes of the provinces went out first; and Ben-hadad sent out, and they told him, saying, There are men come out of Samaria.

18 And he said, Whether they be come out for peace, take them alive; or whether they be come out for war, take them alive.

19 So these young men of the princes of the provinces came out of the city, and the army which followed them.

20 And they slew every one his man: and the Syrians fled; and Israel pursued them: and Ben-hadad the king of Syria escaped on a horse with the horsemen.

21 And the king of Israel went out, and smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Syrians with great slaughter.

22 ¶ And the prophet came to the king of Israel, and said unto him, Go, strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou doest: for at the return of the year the king of Syria will come up against thee.

23 And the servants of the king of Syria said unto him, Their gods are gods of the hills; therefore they were king's own regiment; and he is commanded by the prophet to put himself at their head.

Seven thousand.] How low must the state of Israel have been at this time! These, Jarchi thinks, were the seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal.

Verse 18. Take them alive.] He was confident of victory. Do not slay them; bring them to me, they may give us some useful information.

Verse 20. The Syrians fled.] They were, doubtless, panic-struck.

Verse 23. Their gods are gods of the hills.] It is very likely that the small Israelitish army availed itself of the heights and uneven ground, that they might fight with greater advantage against the Syrian cavalry; for Ben-hadad came up against Samaria with horses and chariots, ver. 1. These, therefore, must soon be thrown into confusion when charging in such circumstances; indeed, the chariots must be nearly useless.

Let us fight against them in the plain.] There our horses and chariots will all be able to bear on the enemy; and there their gods, whose in-stronger than we; but let us fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they.

24 And do this thing; Take the kings away, every man out of his place, and put captains in their rooms:

25 And number thee an army, like the army^s that thou hast lost, horse for horse, and chariot for chariot: and we will fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they. And he hearkened unto their voice, and did so.

26 And it came to pass at the return of the year, that Ben-hadad numbered the Syrians, and went up to ^tAphek, ^uto fight against Israel.

27 And the children of Israel were numbered, and ^vwere all present, and went against them: and the children of Israel pitched before them like two little flocks of kids; but the Syrians filled the country.

28 ¶ And there came a man of God, and spake unto the king of Israel, and said, Thus saith the LORD, Because the Syrians have said, The LORD is God of the hills, but he is not God of the valleys, therefore ^wwill I deliver all this great multitude into thine hand, and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

29 And they pitched one over against the other seven days. And so it was, that in the seventh day the battle was fluence is confined to the hills, will not be able to help them. It was a general belief in the heathen world that each district had its tutelary and protecting deity, who could do nothing out of his own sphere.

Verse 24. Take the kings away.] These were not acquainted with military affairs; or they had not competent skill. Put experienced captains in their place, and fight not but on the plains, and you will be sure of victory.

Verse 26. Ben-hadad numbered the Syrians, and went up to Aphek.] There were several towns of this name; see the note on Josh. xii. 18. It is supposed that the town mentioned here was situated in Libanus, upon the river Adonis, between Heliopolis and Biblos.

Verse 28. Because the Syrians have said.] God resents their blasphemy, and is determined to punish it. They shall now be discomfited in such a way as to show that God's power is every where; and that the multitude of a host is nothing against him.

Verse 29. Slew—a hundred thousand footmen in one day.] This number is enormous:

joined: and the children of Israel slew of the Syrians a hundred thousand footmen in one day.

30 But the rest fled to Aphek, into the city; and there a wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand of the men that were left. And Ben-hadad fled, and came into the city, ^{} into ^{} an inner chamber.

31 ¶ And his servants said unto him, Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel are merciful kings: let us, I pray thee, ² put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads, and go out to the king of Israel: peradventure he will save thy life.

32 So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and put ropes on their heads, and came to the king of Israel, and said, Thy servant Ben-hadad saith, I pray thee, let me live. And he said, Is he yet alive? he is my brother.

^{*} Or, from chamber to chamber.—⁷ Heb. into a chamber within a chamber. Ch. 22. 25.

but the MSS. and versions give no various reading.

Verse 30. A wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand] From the first view of this text it would appear that when the Syrians fled to Aphek, and shut themselves within the walls, the Israelites immediately brought all hands, and sapped the walls, in consequence of which a large portion fell, and buried twenty-seven thousand men. But perhaps the hand of God was more immediately in this disaster: probably a burning wind is meant. See at the end of the chapter.

Came into the city, into an inner chamber] However the passage above may be understood, the city was now, in effect, taken; and Ben-hadad either betook himself, with his few followers, to the citadel, or to some secret hiding-place, where he held the council with his servants immediately mentioned.

Verse 31. Put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads] Let us show ourselves humbled in the deepest manner; and let us put ropes about our necks, and go submitting to his mercy, and deprecating his wrath. The citizens of Calais are reported to have acted nearly in the same way, when they surrendered their city to Edward III. king of England, in 1346: see at the end.

Verse 32. Thy servant Ben-hadad] See the vicissitude of human affairs! A little before he was the haughtiest of all tyrants; and Ahab calls him his lord: now, so much is he humbled, that he will be glad to be reputed Ahab's slave!

Verse 33. Did hastily catch it] They were watching to see if any kind word should be spoken by him, from which they might draw a favourable omen: and, when they heard him use the word brother, it gave them much encouragement.

33 Now the men did diligently observe whether any thing would come from him; and did hastily catch it: and they said, Thy brother Ben-hadad. Then he said, Go ye, bring him. Then Ben-hadad came forth to him; and he caused him to come up into the chariot.

34 And Ben-hadad said unto him, ^a The cities, which my father took from thy father, I will restore; and thou shalt make streets for thee in Damascus, as my father made in Samaria. Then said Ahab, I will send thee away with this covenant. So he made a covenant with him, and sent him away.

35 ¶ And a certain man of ^b the sons of the prophets said unto his neighbour ^c in the word of the LORD, Smite me, I pray thee. And the man refused to smite him.

36 Then said he unto him, Because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the Verse 34. Thou shalt make streets for thee in Damascus] It appears that it was customary for foreigners to have a place assigned to them, particularly in maritime towns, where they might deposit and vend their merchandise. This was the very origin of European settlements in Asiatic countries: "The people gave an inch to those strangers; and, in consequence, they took an elk." Under the pretence of strengthening the place where they kept their wares, to prevent depredations, they built forts, and soon gave laws to their entertainers. In vain did the natives wish them away; they had got power, and would retain it; and at last subjected these countries to their own dominion.

It was customary also in the time of the Crusades, to give those nations which were engaged in them, streets, churches, and post dues, in those places which they assisted to conquer. The Genoese and Venetians had each a street in Accon, or St. Jean d'Acre, in which they had their own jurisdiction; with oven, mill, bagnio, weights, and measures. See William of Tyre, and Harmer's Observations.

He made a covenant with him] According to the words recorded above, putting him under no kind of disabilities whatsoever.

Verse 35. In the word of the LORD] By the word or command of the Lord; that is, God has commanded thee to smite me. Refusing to do it, this man forfeited his life, as we are informed in the next verse.

By this emblematical action he intended to inform Ahab, that, as the man forfeited his life who refused to smite him when he had the Lord's command to do it; so he, (Ahab), had forfeited his life, because he did not smite Ben-hadad when he had him in his power.

Verse 36. A lion found him and slew him.] This seems a hard measure; but there was ample

LORD, behold, as soon as thou art departed from me, a lion shall slay thee. And as soon as he was departed from him, ^d a lion found him, and slew him.

37 Then he found another man, and said, Smite me, I pray thee. And the man smote him, ^e so that in smiting he wounded him.

38 So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, and disguised himself with ashes upon his face.

39 And ^f as the king passed by, he cried unto the king: and he said, Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle; and, behold, a man turned aside, and brought a man unto me, and said, Keep this man: if by any means he be missing, then ^g shall thy life be for his reason for it. This person was also one of the sons of the prophets, and he knew that God frequently delivered his counsels in this way, and should have immediately obeyed; for the smiting could have had no evil in it when God commanded it: and it could be no outrage or injury to his fellow, when he himself required him to do it.

Verse 38. Disguised himself with ashes upon his face. It does not immediately appear how putting ashes upon his face could disguise him. Instead of אפר apher, dust, Houbigant conjectured that it should be אפד aphad, a fillet, or bandage. It is only the corner of the last letter which makes the difference; for the daleth, and resh, are precisely the same, only the shoulder of the former is square, the latter round. That bandage, not dust, was the original reading, seems pretty evident from its remains in two of the oldest versions, the Septuagint and the Chaldee: the former has, Καὶ κατέδησάτο ἐν τελαμῶνι τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτοῦ, "And he bound his eyes with a fillet." The latter has וְכָרַד בְּמַעְפָּרָא עֵינָיו, ukerid bema'phra éinoi; "And he covered his eyes with a cloth." The MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi contain no various reading here: but bandage is undoubtedly the true one.

Verse 39. Keep this man] The drift of this is at once seen: but Ahab, not knowing it, was led to pass sentence on himself.

Verse 41. Took the ashes away] He took the bandage from off his eyes: see on ver. 38. It was no doubt of thin cloth, through which he could see, while it served for a sufficient disguise.

Verse 42. Thy life shall go for his life] This was fulfilled at the battle of Ramoth-gilead, where he was slain by the Syrians; see chap. xxii. 34, 35.

Verse 43. Heavy and displeased] Heavy or afflicted, because of these dreadful tidings; and displeased with the prophet for having announced them. Had he been displeased with himself, and humbled his soul before God, even life, or else thou shalt ^h pay a talent of silver.

40 And as thy servant was busy here and there, ⁱ he was gone. And the king of Israel said unto him, So shall thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it.

41 And he hasted, and took the ashes away from his face; and the king of Israel discerned him that he was of the prophets.

42 And he said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, ^k Because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I appointed to utter destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people.

43 And the king of Israel ^l went to his house heavy and displeased, and came to Samaria.

those judgments, so circumstantially foretold, might have been averted.

1. WE have already seen, in ver. 30. that, according to our text, twenty-seven thousand men were slain by the falling of a wall. Serious doubts are entertained concerning the legitimacy of this rendering. I have, in the note, given the conjecture concerning sapping the foundation of the wall, and thus overthrowing them that were upon it. If, instead of חומה chomah, a wall, we read חמה chumah, confusion, or disorder, then the destruction of the twenty-seven thousand men may appear to have been occasioned by the disorganized state into which they fell; and of which their enemies taking advantage, might destroy the whole with ease.

But חומה chomah, a wall, becomes, as Dr. Kennicott has observed, a very different word when written without the vau, חמה chamah, which signifies heat; sometimes the sun, vehement heat, or the heat of the noon-day sun; and also the name of a wind, from its suffocating, parching quality.

The same noun, from יחם yacham, Dr. Castel explains by exandescencia, furor, venenum; burning, rage, poison. These renderings, says Dr. Kennicott, all concur to establish the sense of a burning wind; eminently blasting and destructive. I shall give a few instances from the Scripture:

We read in Job xxvii. 21. The east wind carrieth him away; where the word קדים kadim, is καυσων, burning, in the Septuagint: and in the Vulgate, ventus urens, a burning wind. In Ezek. xix. 12. She was plucked up, נחמה nehmah she was cast down to the ground, and the east wind dried up her fruit; her strong rods were withered, and the fire consumed them. Hosea (xiii. 15.) mentions the desolation brought by an east wind, the wind of the Lord. What in Amos iv. 9. is, I have smitten you with blasting, is in the Vulgate, in vento vehemente, "with a vehement wind;" and in the Syriac, with a hot wind.

Let us apply these to the history: when Ben-hadad, king of Syria, was besieging Samaria the second time, the Israelites slew of the Syrians one hundred thousand footmen in one day; and it follows that when the rest of the army fled to Aphek, twenty-seven thousand of the men that were left were suddenly destroyed by רוח חמא ha-chomah, or רוח חמא chamah, a burning wind. That such is the true interpretation will appear more clearly, if we compare the destruction of Ben-hadad's army with that of Sennacherib, whose sentence is that God would send upon him a BLAST, רוח רע ruach, a wind; doubtless such a wind as would be suddenly destructive. The event is said to be that, in the night, one hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrians were smitten by the angel of the Lord; 2 Kings xix. 7, 35. The connexion of this sentence, with this execution of it, is given by the Psalmist, who says, civ. 4. God maketh his angels רוח רע ruchoth, winds; or, maketh the winds his angels, i.e. messengers for the performance of his will. In his note on Psa. xi. 6. Professor Michaelis has these words, Ventus zilgaphoth, pestilens curus est, orientabilis notissimus, qui obvia quævis necat; "The wind Zelgaphoth is a pestilent east wind, well known to the Asiatics, which suddenly kills those who are exposed to it." Thevenot mentions such a wind in 1658; that, in one night, suffocated twenty thousand men! And the Samuel he mentions as having, in 1665, suffocated four thousand persons! Upon the whole, I conclude, says the Doctor, that, as Thevenot has mentioned two great multitudes destroyed by this burning wind; so has Holy Scripture recorded the destruction of two much greater multitudes, by a similar cause: and, therefore, we should translate the words thus; But the rest fled to Aphek, into the city; and THE BURNING WIND fell upon the twenty and seven thousand of the men that were left.

2. On the case of Ben-hadad and his servants coming out to Ahab, with sackcloth on their loins, and ropes about their necks, ver. 31. I have referred to that of the six citizens of Calais, in the time of Edward III. I shall give this affecting account from Sir John Froissart, who lived in that time, and relates the story circumstantially; and with that simplicity and detail that give it every appearance of truth. He is the only writer of all his contemporaries who gives the relation; and, as it is not only illustrative of the text in question, but also very curious and affecting, I will give it in his own words; only observing that, King Edward having closely invested the city, in 1346, and the king of France having made many useless attempts to raise the siege, at last withdrew his army, and left it to its fate. "Then," says Froissart, chap. cxliv. "after the departure of the king of France with his army, the Calaisians saw clearly that all hopes of succour were at an end; which occasioned them so much sorrow and distress that the hardest could scarcely support it. They entreated, therefore, most earnestly, the Lord John de Vienne, their governor, to mount upon the battlements, and make a sign that he wished to hold a parley.

"The king of England, upon hearing this, sent to him Sir Walter Manny and Lord Basset. When they were come near, the Lord de Vienne said to them: 'Dear gentlemen, you who are very valiant knights, know that the king of France, whose subjects we are, has sent us hither to defend this town and castle from all harm and damage. This we have done to the best of our abilities: All hopes of help have now left us, so that we are most exceedingly straitened: and if the gallant king, your lord, have not pity upon us, we must perish with hunger. I, therefore, entreat that you would beg of him to have compassion upon us, and to have the goodness to allow us to depart in the state we are in; and that he will be satisfied with having possession of the town and castle, with all that is within them, as he will find therein riches enough to content him.' To this Sir Walter Manny replied: 'John, we are not ignorant of what the king our lord's intentions are, for he has told them to us: know then, that it is not his pleasure that you should get off so, for he is resolved that you surrender yourselves wholly to his will, to allow those whom he pleases their ransom, or to be put to death; for the Calaisians have done him so much mischief, and have, by their obstinate defence, cost him so many lives, and so much money, that he is mightily enraged.'

"The Lord de Vienne answered, 'These conditions are too hard for us: we are but a small number of knights and squires, who have loyally served our lord and master, as you would have done, and have suffered much ill and disquiet: but we will endure more than any men ever did, in a similar situation, before we consent that the smallest boy in the town should fare worse than the best. I therefore, once more, entreat you, out of compassion, to return to the king of England, and beg of him to have pity on us: he will, I trust, grant you this favour; for I have such an opinion of his gallantry as to hope that, through God's mercy, he will alter his mind.'

"The two lords returned to the king, and related what had passed. The king said, 'He had no intention of complying with the request, but should insist that they surrendered themselves unconditionally to his will.' Sir Walter replied; 'My lord, ye may be to blame in this, as you will set us a very bad example; for, if you order us to go to any of your castles, we shall not obey you so cheerfully if you put these people to death, for they will retaliate upon us in a similar case.'

"Many barons who were present supported this opinion: upon which the king replied; 'Gentlemen, I am not so obstinate as to hold my opinion alone against you all—Sir Walter, you will inform the governor of Calais, that the only grace he is to expect from me is, that six of the principal citizens of Calais march out of the town with bare heads and feet, with ropes round their necks, and the keys of the town and castle in their hands. These six persons shall be at my absolute disposal, and the remainder of the inhabitants pardoned.'

"Sir Walter returned to the Lord de Vienne, who was waiting for him on the battlements, and told him all that he had been able to gain from the king. 'I beg of you,' replied the governor, 'that you would be so good as to remain here a little, while I go and relate all that has passed to the townsmen; for, as they have desired me to undertake this, it is but proper they should know the result of it.'

"He went to the market-place, and caused the bell to be rung; upon which all the inhabitants, men and women, assembled in the town-hall. He then related to them what he had said, and the answers he had received, and that he could not obtain any conditions more favourable; to which they must give a short and immediate answer.

"This information caused the greatest lamentations and despair, so that the hardest heart would have had compassion on them: even the Lord de Vienne wept bitterly.

"After a short time, the most wealthy citizen of the town, by name Eustace de St. Pierre, rose up and said, 'Gentlemen, both high and low, it would be a very great pity to suffer so many people to die through famine, if any means could be found to prevent it; and it would be highly meritorious in the eyes of our Saviour, if such misery could be averted. I have such faith and trust in finding grace before God, if I die to save my townsmen, that I name myself as first of the six.'

"When Eustace had done speaking, they all rose up, and almost worshipped him; many cast themselves at his feet, with tears and groans. Another citizen, very rich, and respected, rose up and said, 'He would be the second to his companion Eustace: his name was John Daire. After him James Wisant, who who was very rich in merchandise and lands, offered himself as companion to his two cousins; as did Peter Wisant his brother. Two others then named themselves, which completed the number demanded by the king of England. The Lord John de Vienne then mounted a small hackney, for it was with difficulty he could walk, (he had been wounded in the siege,) and conducted them to the gate. There was the greatest sorrow and lamentation over all the town; and in such manner were they attended to the gate, which the governor ordered to be opened, and then shut upon him and the six citizens, whom he led to the barriers, and said to Sir Walter Manny, who was there waiting for him, I deliver up to you, as governor of Calais, with the consent of the inhabitants, these six citizens; and I swear to you that they were, and are, at this day, the most wealthy and respectable inhabitants of Calais. I beg of you, gentle sir, that you would have the goodness to beseech the king, that they may not be put to death.' 'I cannot answer for what the king will do with them,' replied Sir Walter, 'but you may depend that I will do all in my power to save them.'

"The barriers were opened, when these six citizens advanced toward the pavilion of the king; and the Lord de Vienne re-entered the town.

"When Sir Walter Manny had presented these six citizens to the king, they fell upon their knees, and, with uplifted hands, said, 'Most gallant king, see before you six citizens of Calais, who have been capital merchants, and who bring you the keys of the castle and of the town. We surrender ourselves to your absolute will and pleasure, in order to save the remainder of the inhabitants of Calais, who have suffered much distress and misery. Con-descend therefore out of your nobleness of mind to have mercy and compassion upon us.' All the barons, knights, and squires, that were assembled there in great numbers, wept at this sight.

"The king eyed them with angry looks, (for he hated much the people of Calais, for the great losses he had formerly suffered from them at sea,) and ordered their heads to be stricken off. All present entreated the king that he would be more merciful to them; but he would not listen to them. Then Sir Walter Manny said, 'Ah, gentle king, let me beseech you to restrain your anger; you have the reputation of great nobleness of soul, do not therefore tarnish it by such an act as this; nor allow any one to speak in a disgraceful manner of you. In this instance, all the world will say you have acted cruelly, if you put to death six such respectable persons; who, of their own free will, have surrendered themselves to your mercy, in order to save their fellow-citizens.' Upon this the king gave a wink, saying, Be it so, and ordered the headsman to be sent for; for, that the Calaisians had done him so much damage, it was proper they should suffer for it.'

"The queen of England, who was at that time very big with child, fell on her knees, and with tears said, 'Ah, gentle sir, since I have crossed the sea with great danger to see you, I have never asked you one favour; now I most humbly ask as a gift, for the sake of the Son of the blessed Mary, and for your love to me, that you will be merciful to these six men.' The king looked at her for some time in silence, and then said, 'Ah lady, I wish you had been any where else than here; you have entreated in such a manner that I cannot refuse you; I therefore give them to you, to do as you please with them.'

"The queen conducted the six citizens to her apartments, and had the halters taken from round their necks, new clothed, and served them with a plentiful dinner: she then presented each with nobles, and had them escorted out of the camp in safety."

This is the whole of this affecting account, which is mentioned by no other writer; and has been thought a proper subject for the pen of the poet, the pencil of the painter, and the burin of the engraver; and which has seldom been fairly represented in the accounts we have of it from our historians. The translation I have borrowed from the accurate edition of Froissart, by Mr. Johns, of Hafod; and to his Work, vol. i. page 367, I must refer for objections to the authenticity of some of the facts stated by the French historian. We see in Eustace de St. Pierre, and his five companions, the portrait of genuine patriotism: the principle almost as rare in the world as the Egyptian phoenix, which leads its possessors to devote their property, and consecrate their lives to the public weal. Widely different from that spurious birth, which is deep in the cry of my country! while it has nothing in view but its places, pensions, and profits—Away with it!

CHAPTER XXI.

Ahab covets the vineyard of Naboth, and wishes to have it either by purchase or exchange, 1, 2. Naboth refuses to alienate it on any account, because it was his inheritance from his fathers, 3. Ahab becomes disconsolate, takes to his bed, and refuses to eat, 4. Jezebel, finding out the cause, promises to give him the vineyard, 5-7. She writes to the nobles of Jezreel to proclaim a fast, to accuse Naboth of blasphemy, carry him out, and stone him to death; which is accordingly done, 8-14. She then tells Ahab to go and take possession of the vineyard; he goes, and is met by Elijah, who denounces on him the heaviest judgments, 15-24. Ahab's abominable character, 25, 26. He humbles himself; and God promises not to bring the threatened public calamities in his days, but in the days of his son, 27-29.

AND it came to pass, after these things, that Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel, hard by the palace of Ahab king of Samaria.

2 And Ahab spake unto Naboth, saying, Give me thy^a vineyard, that I may have it for a garden of herbs, because it is near unto my house: and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it; or, if it^b seem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money.

3 And Naboth said to Ahab, The LORD forbid it me, ^c that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.

4 And Ahab came into his house heavy and displeased, because of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had spoken to him: for he had said, I will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers. And he laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread.

5 ¶ But Jezebel his wife came to him, and said unto him, Why is thy spirit so sad, that thou eatest no bread?

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXI.

Verse 1. After these things] This and the xxth chapter are transposed in the Septuagint; this preceding the account of the Syrian war with Ben-hadad. Josephus gives the history in the same order.

Verse 2. Give me thy vineyard] The request of Ahab seems, at first view, fair and honourable. Naboth's vineyard was nigh to the palace of Ahab, and he wished to add it to his own for a kitchen garden, or perhaps a grass-plot, קרן גן gan yirek; and he offers to give him either a better vineyard for it, or to give him its worth in money. Naboth rejects the proposal with horror: The Lord forbid it me that I should give the inheritance of my fathers to thee. No man could finally alienate any part of the parental inheritance; it might be sold or mortgaged till the jubilee, but at that time it must revert to its original owner, if not redeemed before; for this God had particularly enjoined, Lev. xxv. 14—17, 25—28. Therefore Naboth properly said, The Lord forbid it me to give the inheritance of my fathers. Ahab most evidently wished him to alienate it finally, and this is what God's law had expressly forbidden; therefore he could not, consistently with his duty to God, indulge Ahab: and it was high iniquity in Ahab to tempt him to do it; and, to covet it, showed the depravity of Ahab's soul. But we see farther that, despotic as those kings were, they dared not seize on the inheritance of any man. This would have been a flagrant breach of the law and constitution of the country; and this indeed would have been inconsistent with the character which they sustained, viz. The Lord's

6 And he said unto her, Because I spake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and said unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money; or else, if it please thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it: and he answered, I will not give thee my vineyard.

7 And Jezebel his wife said unto him, Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel? Arise, and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry: I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite.

8 So she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal, and sent the letters unto the elders and to the nobles, that were in his city dwelling with Naboth.

9 And she wrote in the letters, saying, Proclaim a fast, and set Naboth^d on high among the people;

10 And set two men, sons of Belial, before him, to bear witness against him, saying, Thou didst^e blaspheme God and the king. And then carry him out, and^f stone him, that he may die.

11 And the men of his city, even the vicegerents. The Jewish kings had no authority either to alter the old laws, or to make new ones.

Verse 4. He laid him down upon his bed] Poor soul! he was lord over ten-twelfths of the land, and became miserable because he could not get a poor man's vineyard added to all that he possessed! It is a true saying, That soul in which God dwells not, has no happiness; and he who has God, has a satisfying portion. Every privation and cross makes an unholy soul unhappy: and privations and crosses it must ever meet with, therefore—

“Where'er it goes is hell; itself is hell!”

Verse 7. Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel?] Naboth, not Ahab, is king. If he have authority to refuse, and thou have no power to take, he is the greater man of the two. This is the vital language of despotism and tyranny.

Verse 8. She wrote letters in Ahab's name] She counterfeited his authority, by his own consent; and he lent his signet to stamp that authority.

Verse 9. Proclaim a fast] Intimate that there is some great calamity coming upon the nation, because of some evil tolerated in it.

Set Naboth on high] Bring him to a public trial.

Verse 10. Set two men] For life could not be attained but on the evidence of two witnesses at least.

Sons of Belial] Men who will not scruple to tell lies, and take a false oath.

Thou didst blaspheme God and the king] Thou art an atheist, and a rebel. Thou hast spoken words injurious to the perfections and elders and the nobles who were the inhabitants in his city, did as Jezebel had sent unto them, and as it was written in the letters which she had sent unto them.

12 ^g They proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people.

13 And there came in two men, children of Belial, and sat before him: and the men of Belial witnessed against him, even against Naboth, in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did blaspheme God and the king. ^h Then they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him with stones, that he died.

14 Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, Naboth is stoned, and is dead.

15 [†] And it came to pass, when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, that Jezebel said to Ahab, Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money; for Naboth is not alive, but dead.

16 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take possession of it.

nature of God; and thou hast spoken words against the crown and dignity of the king. The words literally are, Naboth hath blessed God and the king; or, as Parkhurst contends, "Thou hast blessed the false gods and Molech," ברכה אלילים ומלך. And though Jezebel was herself an abominable idolatress, yet, as the law of Moses still continued in force, she seems to have been wicked enough to have destroyed Naboth, upon the false accusation of blessing the heathen Aleim and Molech, which subjected him to death by Deut. xii. 6. xviii. 2—7.

Many think that the word barac, signifies both to bless and curse; and so it is interpreted in most Lexicons: it is passing strange, that, out of the same word, proceedeth blessing and cursing; and, to give such opposite and self-destructive meanings to any word is very dangerous. Parkhurst denies that it ever has the meaning of cursing, and examines all the texts where it is said to occur with this meaning; and shows that blessing, not cursing, is to be understood in all those places: see him under bar sec. vi.

Verse 13. And stoned him with stones] As they pretended to find him guilty of treason against God and the king, it is likely they destroyed the whole of his family; and then the king seized on his grounds as confiscated, or as escheated to the king, without any heir at law. That his family was destroyed appears

17 [†] And the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying,

18 Arise, go down to meet Ahab king of Israel, ^k which is in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he is gone down to possess it.

19 And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, [†] In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.

20 And Ahab said to Elijah, ^m Hast thou found me, O mine enemy? And he answered, I have found thee; because ⁿ thou hast sold thyself to work evil in the sight of the LORD.

21 Behold, ^o I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy posterity, and will cut off from Ahab ^p him that pisseth against the wall, and ^r him that is shut up and left in Israel, strongly intimated, 2 Kings ix. 26: Surely I have seen yesterday the blood of Naboth AND THE BLOOD OF HIS SONS, saith the Lord.

Verse 15. Arise, take possession] By what rites or in what forms this was done, we do not know.

Verse 18. Go down to meet Ahab] This was the next day after the murder, as we learn from the above quotation, 2 Kings ix. 26.

Verse 19. In the place where dogs licked, &c.] It is in vain to look for a literal fulfilment of this prediction. Thus it would have been fulfilled, but the humiliation of Ahab induced the merciful God to say, I will not bring the evil in his days, but in the days of his son, ver. 29. Now dogs did lick the blood of Ahab; but it was at the pool of Samaria, where his chariot and his armour were washed, after he had received his death-wound at Ramoth-gilead; but some think this was the place where Naboth was stoned: see chap. xxii. 38. And how literally the prediction concerning his son was fulfilled, see 2 Kings ix. 25; where we find that the body of Jehoram his son, just then slain by an arrow that had passed through his heart, was thrown into the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite; and there, doubtless, the dogs licked his blood, if they did not even devour his body.

Verse 20. Thou hast sold thyself to work evil] See a similar form of speech, Rom. vii. 14. Thou hast totally abandoned thyself to the service of sin; Satan is become thy absolute master, and thou his undivided slave.

Verse 23. The dogs shall eat Jezebel] This was most literally fulfilled, see 2 Kings ix. 36.

Verse 25. Did sell himself to work wickedness] He hired himself to the devil for this very purpose, that he might work wickedness. This was to be his employment, and at this he laboured.

In the sight of the Lord, whom Jezebel his wife stirred up.] A good wife is from the Lord; a bad wife is from the devil: Jezebel was of this kind; and she has had many successors.

Verse 27. He rent his clothes] He was penetrated with sorrow.

Lay in sackcloth] Gave the fullest proof that his repentance was real.

cast out before the children of Israel.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, when Ahab heard those words, that he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth, and went softly.

28 And the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying, has demisso capite; with his head hanging down. Houbigant translates, went groaning. Jarchi says that the word on at, used here, signifies, to be unshod. This is its most likely sense. All these things prove that Ahab's repentance was genuine; and God's approbation of it puts it out of doubt.

Verse 29. Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself] He did abase himself: he did truly repent him of his sins; and it was such a repentance as was genuine in the sight of God; he humbleth himself BEFORE ME.

The penitent heart ever meets the merciful eye of God: repentance is highly esteemed by the Father of compassion; even where it is comparatively shallow and short-lived. Any measure of godly sorrow has a proportionate measure of God's regards: where it is deep and lasting, the heart of God is set upon it. He that mourns shall be comforted: thus hath God spoken; and, though repentance for our past sins can purchase no favour, yet, without it God will not grant us his salvation.

his throne, having put on their robes, in a ^b void place in the entrance of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them.

that there was a good understanding between Jehoshaphat and Ahab; which, no doubt, was the consequence of a matrimonial alliance between the son of the former, Jehoram, and the daughter of the latter, Athaliah; see 2 Chron. xviii. 1. 2 Kings viii. 48. This coalition did not please God, and he is severely reprov'd for it by Jehu the seer, 2 Chron. xix. 1—3.

Verse 6. About four hundred men] These were probably the prophets of Asherah, or Venus, maintained by Jezebel, who were not present at the contention on mount Carmel. See chap. xviii. 19, &c.

Verse 8. Micaiah the son of Imlah] The Jews suppose that it was this prophet who reprov'd Ahab for dismissing Ben-hadad, chap. xx. 35, &c. And that it was because of the judgments with which he had threatened him, that Ahab hated him: I hate him, for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil.

Verse 9. The king of Israel called an officer] סריס saris; literally, a eunuch: probably a foreigner, for it was not lawful to disgrace an Israelite, by reducing him to such a state.

Verse 11. Zedekiah—made him horns of iron] This was in imitation of that sort of prophecy which instructed by significative actions. This was frequent among the prophets of the Lord.

Verse 13. The words of the prophets declare good] What notion could these men have of prophecy, when they supposed it was in the power of the prophet to model the prediction as he pleased; and have the result accordingly?

Verse 15. Go, and prosper] This was a strong irony; as if he had said, All your prophets have predicted success; you wish me to speak as they speak; Go, and prosper, for the Lord will deliver it into the hand of the king. These were the precise words of the false prophets, see ver. 6. and 11; and were spoken by Micaiah in such a tone and manner as at once showed to Ahab that he did not believe them: hence the king adjures him, (ver. 16.) that he would speak to him nothing but truth; and on this the prophet immediately relates to him the prophetic vision which pointed out the disasters which ensued.

It is worthy of remark, that this prophecy of the king's prophets is couched in the same ambiguous terms by which the false prophets in the heathen world endeavoured to maintain their credit, while they deluded their votaries. The reader will observe, that the word it is not in the original; the Lord will deliver it into the hand of the king; and the words are so artfully constructed that they may be interpreted for or against: so that, be the event whatever it might, the juggling prophet might save his credit, by saying he meant what had happened. Thus, then, the prophecy might have been understood: The Lord will deliver (it) Ramoth-Gilead, into the king's (Ahab's) hand; or, The Lord will deliver (Israel) into the king's hand; i. e. into the hand of the king of Syria. And Micaiah repeats these words of uncertainty in order to ridicule them, and expose their fallacy.

16 And the king said unto him, How many times shall I adjure thee that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the LORD?

17 And he said, I saw all Israel^k scattered upon the hills, as sheep that have not a shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master; let them return every man to his house in peace.

18 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil?

19 And he said, Hear thou therefore the word of the LORD; ^lI saw the LORD sitting on his throne, ^mand all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left:

The following oracles, among the heathens, were of this same dubious nature, in order that the priests' credit might be saved, let the event turn out as it might. Thus the Delphic oracle spoke to Cræsus words which are capable of this double meaning, and which he understood to his own destruction:—

Cræsus Halym penetrans, magnam subvertet opum vim;
Which says, in effect—

"If you march against Cyrus, he will either overthrow you or you will overthrow him."

He trusted in the latter; the former took place; he was deluded: and yet the oracle maintained its credit. So in the following:—

Aio te, Hecide, Romanos vincere posse.
His redibis nunquam in bello peribis.

Pyrrius, king of Epirus, understood by this that he should conquer the Romans, against whom he was then making war: but the oracle could be thus translated—"The Romans shall overcome thee." He trusted in the former; made unsuccessful war, and was overcome: and yet the juggling priest saved his credit. The latter line is capable of two opposite meanings:—

"Thou shalt go, thou shalt return, thou shalt never perish in war."

Or,

"Thou shalt go, thou shalt not return, thou shalt perish in war."

When prophecies and oracles were not delivered in this dubious way, they were generally couched in such intricate and dark terms that the assistance of the oracle was necessary to explain the oracle; and then it was ignotum per ignotius: a dark saying, paraphrased by one yet more obscure.

Verse 17. These have no master] Here the prophet foretells the defeat of Israel, and the death of the king: they were as sheep that had not a shepherd; people that had no master; the political shepherd and master (Ahab) shall fall in battle.

"persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one said on this manner, and another said on that manner.

21 And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will persuade him.

22 And the LORD said unto him, Wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, °Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also: go forth, and do so.

23 ^pNow therefore, behold, the LORD hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and the LORD hath spoken evil concerning thee.

1. 7, 14.—Or, deceive.—Judges 9. 23. Job 12. 16. Ezek. 14. 9. 2 Thess. 2. 11.—^p Ezek. 14. 9.—2 Chron. 18. 23.

Verse 19. I saw the LORD sitting on his throne] This is a mere parable; and only tells, in figurative language, what was in the womb of providence; the events which were shortly to take place, the agents employed in them, and the permission on the part of God for these agents to act. Micaiah did not choose to say before this angry and impious king, "Thy prophets are all liars; and the devil, the father of lies, dwells in them:" but he represents the whole by this parable; and says the same truths in language as forcible, but less offensive.

Verse 22. Go forth, and do so] This is no more than, "God has permitted the spirit of lying to influence the whole of thy prophets; and he now, by my mouth, apprises thee of this, that thou mayest not go and fall at Ramoth-gilead." Never was a man more circumstantially and fairly warned: he had counsels from the God of truth, and counsels from the spirit of falsity; he obstinately forsook the former, and followed the latter. He was shown by this parable how every thing was going on; and that all was under the control and direction of God; and that still it was possible for him to make that God his friend, whom, by his continual transgressions, he had made his enemy; but he would not; his blood was, therefore, upon his own head.

Verse 23. The LORD hath put a lying spirit] He hath permitted, or suffered, a lying spirit to influence thy prophets. It is requisite again to remind the reader, that the Scriptures repeatedly represent God as doing what, in the course of his providence, he only permits or suffers to be done. Nothing can be done in heaven, in earth, or hell, but either by his immediate energy or permission. This is the reason why the Scripture speaks as above.

Verse 24. Which way went the spirit of the LORD from me] This is an expression of as 28 And Micaiah said, If thou return at all in peace, "the Lord hath not spoken by me. And he said, Hearken, O people, every one of you.

29 ¶ So the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, went up to Ramoth-gilead.

30 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, "I will disguise myself, great insolence as the act was of brutal aggression. "Did the spirit of the Lord, which rests solely upon me, condescend to inspire thee! Was it at this ear (where he smote him) that it entered, in order to hold communion with thee?" Josephus tells an idle rabbinical tale about this business, which is as unworthy of repetition as it is of credit. See his Antiq. of the Jews, book viii. c. 10.

Verse 25. When thou shalt go into an inner chamber] It is probable that this refers to some divine judgment which fell upon this deceiver. Hearing of the tragical result of the battle, he no doubt went into a secret place, to hide himself from the resentment of Jezebel, and the Israelitish courtiers; and there, it is probable, he perished: but how, when, or where, is not mentioned.

Verse 27. Feed him with bread of affliction] Deprive him of all the conveniences and comforts of life: treat him severely; just keep him alive, that he may see my triumph.

Verse 30. I will disguise myself] Probably he had heard of the orders given by Ben-hadad to his thirty-two captains, to fight with the king of Israel only: that is, to make their most powerful attack where he commanded, in order to take him prisoner; that he might lead him captive whose captive he formerly was: and, therefore, he disguised himself, that he might not be known.

But put thou on thy robes] What is meant by this? He could not mean, "Appear as the king of Judah, for they will not molest thee, as the matter of contention lies between them and me:" this is Jarchi's turn. But if Jehoshaphat aided Ahab, is it to be supposed that the Syrians would spare him in battle? A general in the civil wars of England, when he had brought his army in sight of their foes, thus addressed them: "Yonder are your ene-and enter into the battle; but put thou on thy robes. And the king of Israel "disguised himself, and went into the battle.

31 ¶ But the king of Syria commanded his thirty and two captains that had rule over his chariots, saying, Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king of Israel.

32 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, Surely it is the king of Israel. And they turned aside to fight against him: and Jehoshaphat ^x cried out.

33 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, that they turned back from pursuing him.

34 ¶ And a certain man drew a bow ^y at a venture, and smote the king of mies; if you do not kill them, they will kill you." So it might be said in the case of Jehoshaphat and the Syrians.

The Septuagint gives the clause a different and more intelligible turn: "I will cover (conceal) myself, and enter into the battle; και ου ενδυσει τον ματισμον μου, but put thou on my robes." And does it not appear that he did put on Ahab's robes? And was it not this that caused the Syrians to mistake him for the king of Israel? ver 32.

Verse 34. Drew a bow at a venture] It is supposed that he shot, as the archers in general did, not aiming at any person in particular.

The word le-tummo, which we translate in his simplicity, has been variously understood: in his integrity, his uprightness, in his perfection; i. e. to the utmost of his skill and strength. This is most probably the meaning; and may imply both aim and power, having his butt full in view. In cases where the archers wished to do the greatest execution, they bent their bows, and pulled till the subtending string drew back the arrow up to its head. This they could not do always, because it required their whole strength; and they could not put forth their utmost effort each time, and continue to discharge many shots. Our old national ballad of the Chevy Chase mentions the slaying of Sir Hugh Montgomery, who had slain Earl Percy, in nearly the same way that Ahab appears to have been shot:—

"And thus did both these nobles die
Whose courage none could stain:
An English archer then perceived
His noble lord was slain,
Who had a bow bent in his hand,
Made of a trusty tree;
An arrow of a cloth-yard long
Up to the head drew he:
Against Sir Hugh Montgomery then,
So right his shaft he set,
The gray goose wing that was thereon
In his heart's blood was wet."

The Vulgate has, Inter pulmonem et stomachum; "between the lungs and the stomach;" consequently, in the region of the heart.

Verse 35. The king was stayed up] He did not wish his misfortune should be known, lest his troops should be discouraged.

Verse 36. Every man to his city] It appears that the Israelites and Jews maintained the fight the whole of the day; but when at evening the king died, and this was known, there was a proclamation made, probably with the consent of both Syrians and Israelites, that the war was over. Ahab being dead, his subjects did not choose to contend for Ramoth-gilead: so the Israelites went to their own cities, and the Syrians to their own country.

Verse 38. The dogs licked up his blood] Some of the rabbins think that this was in the very place where Naboth was stoned: see on chap. xxi. 19. The Septuagint translate this verse strangely: "And the swine and the dogs licked his blood; and the whores bathed themselves in his blood, according to the word of the Lord."

It is certain that the Hebrew words חֲזַנוֹת רַחֲטָטוּ, hazonoth rachatsu, "washed his armour," might be translated as the Septuagint have done; "and the whores, (or public women,) washed," &c. And so the rabbins seem to have understood the words: but then they suppose that Jezebel had made him two images of prostitutes, which he had with him in the chariot. It is not worth inquiring into the use for which they say these images were made. See Kimchi and Jarchi.

Verse 39. Ivory house] A royal palace which he built in Samaria, decorated with ivory; and hence called the ivory house. Amos, the prophet, speaks against this luxury, chap. iii. 15.

Verse 43. The high places were not taken away] In 2 Chron. xvii. 6. it is expressly said, that he did take away the high places. Allowing that the text is right in 2 Chron. the two places may be easily reconciled. There were two kinds of high places in the land:—1. Those used for idolatrous purposes.—2. Those that were consecrated to God, and were used before the temple was built. The former he did take away; the latter he did not. But some think the parallel place in 2 Chron. xvii. 6. is corrupted; and that, instead of וְעָד הָעִיר veod hesir, "and moreover he took away;" we should read, וְעָד הָעִיר velo hesir, "and he did not take away."

apply here to the system of pollution, effeminacy, and debauch. He destroyed the thing itself; the abominations of Priapus, and the rites of Venus, Baal, and Ashtaroth. No more of that impure worship was to be found in Judea.

Verse 47. There was—no king in Edom] It is plain that the compiler of this book lived after the days of Jehoshaphat, in whose time the Edomites revolted: see 2 Kings viii. 22. David had conquered the Edomites; and they continued to be governed by deputies, appointed by the kings of Judah, till they recovered their liberty, as above. This note is introduced by the writer to account for Jehoshaphat's building ships at Ezion-geber, which was in the territory of the Edomites; and which showed them to be, at that time, under the Jewish yoke.

Verse 48. Ships of Tharshish to go to Ophir for gold] In the parallel place, 2 Chron. xx. 36. it is said that Jehoshaphat joined himself to Ahaziah, to make ships to go to Tharshish; and they made the ships in Ezion-geber. Concerning these places, and the voyage thither, see the notes on 1 Kings ix. 26—28. and x. 11, 22. Some translate, instead of ships of Tharshish, ships of burden. See Houbigant; who expresses himself doubtful as to the meaning of the word.

Verse 49. But Jehoshaphat would not.] It appears from the above-cited place in Chronicles, that Jehoshaphat did join in making and sending ships to Tharshish; and, it is possible, that what is here said, is spoken of a second ex-petition, in which Jehoshaphat would not join Ahaziah. But, instead of וְלֹא אָבָה velo abah, "he would not;" perhaps we should read וְלֹא אָבָה velo abah, "he consented to him:" two words pronounced exactly in the same way, and differing but in one letter; viz. an א aleph, for a var. This reading, however, is not supported by any MS. or version; but the emendation seems just; for there are several places in these historical books in which there are mistakes of transcribers, which nothing but violent criticism can restore; and to this it is dangerous to resort, but in cases of the last necessity. Critics have recommended the 48th and 49th verses to be read thus: Jehoshaphat had built ships of burden at Ezion-geber, to go to Ophir for gold. 49. And Ahaziah, the son of Ahab, had said to Jehoshaphat, Let my servants, I pray thee, go with thy servants in the ships: to which Jehoshaphat consented. But the ships went not thither; for the ships were broken at Ezion-geber. This is Houbigant's translation; who contends, that "the words of the 48th verse, but they went not, should be placed at the end of the 49th verse; for who can believe that the sacred writer should first relate that the ships were broken, and then that Ahaziah requested of Jehoshaphat that his servants might embark with the servants of Jehoshaphat?" This bold critic, who understood the Hebrew language better than any man in Europe, has, by happy conjectures, since verified by the testimony of MSS., removed the blots of many careless transcribers from the Sacred Volume.

Chronologers vary very considerably in their calculations of the time which elapsed between the flood and the birth of Abraham, the difference of the two extremes amounting to nine hundred years! Archbishop Ussher's computation is from the common Hebrew Text, with the single exception of fixing the birth of Abraham in the one hundred and thirtieth year of the life of his father, instead of the seventieth, in order to reconcile Gen. xi. 26, 32. with Acts vii. 4. But these passages are better reconciled, in the opinion of Dr. Kennicott, by stating (with the Samaritan Pentateuch) the whole life of Terah to have been one hundred and forty-five years, instead of two hundred and five, as in our common Bibles.—Year from the destruction of Troy, according to Dionysius of Halicarnassus, 289—Year from the foundation of Solomon's temple, 115—Year since the division of Solomon's monarchy into the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, 79—Year before the era of Iphitus, who re-established the Olympic games, three hundred and thirty-eight years after their institution by Hercules, or about eight hundred and eighty-four years before the commencement of the Christian era, 12—Year before the conquest of Corabus at Elis, usually styled the first Olympiad, (being the 28th Olympiad after their re-establishment by Iphitus,) 120—Year before the division of the Varronian, or generally received era of the building of Rome, 143—Year before the building of Rome, according to Cato and the Fasti Consulares, 144—Year before the building of Rome, according to Polybius the historian, 145—Year before the building of Rome, according to Fabius Pictor, who lived about two hundred and twenty-five years before the Christian era, 149—Year before the commencement of the Nabonassarean era, 149. The years of this epoch contained uniformly 365 days, so that 1461 Nabonassarean were equal to 1460 Julian years. This era commenced on the fourth of the calends of March, (Feb. 26.) B. CHAPTER I.

Ahaziah, being hurt by a fall, sends messengers to Baal-zebub to inquire whether he shall recover, 1, 2. They are met by Elijah, who sends them back with the information that he shall surely die, 3–8. The king sends a captain and fifty men, to bring Elijah to Samaria, on which fire comes down from heaven, and destroys both him and his men, 9, 10. Another captain, and fifty men, are sent, who are likewise destroyed, 11, 12. A third is sent, who, behaving himself humbly, Elijah is commanded to accompany him; he obeys, comes to the king, reproves his idolatry, and announces his death, 13–16. Ahaziah dies, and Jehoram reigns in his stead, 17, 18.

In the preface to the first book of Kings, I have spoken at large concerning both these books, the author, time of writing, &c. &c. to which I must refer my readers, as that preface is common to both.

The second book of Kings contains the history of three hundred and eight years, from the rebellion of Moab, A. M. 3108, to the ruin of the kingdom of Judah, A. M. 3416.

The history, on the whole, exhibits little else than a series of crimes, disasters, divine benefits, and divine judgments. In the kingdom of Judah we meet with a few kings who feared God, and promoted the interests of pure religion in the land: but the major part were idolaters, and profligates of the highest order.

The kingdom of Israel was still more corrupt: all its kings were determined idolaters, profligate, vicious, and cruel tyrants. Elijah and Elisha stood up in the behalf of God and truth in this fallen, idolatrous kingdom; and bore a strong testimony against the corruptions of the princes, and the profligacy of the people: their powerful ministry was confined to the ten tribes; Judah had its own prophets, and those in considerable number.

At length the avenging hand of God fell first upon Israel, and afterward upon Judah. Israel, after many convulsions, torn by domestic and foreign wars, was at length wholly subjugated by the king of Assyria, the people led away into captivity, and the land re-peopled by strangers, A. M. 3287.

The kingdom of Judah continued some time longer, but was at last overthrown by Nebuchadnezzar; Zedekiah, its last king, taken prisoner, and his eyes put out, and the principal part of the people carried into captivity, which lasted about seventy years. The captivity began under Jehoiakim, A. M. 3402, and ended under Belshazzar, A. M. 3470, or 3472. There was after this a partial restoration of the Jews; but they never more rose to any consequence among the nations: and, at last, their civil unto them, Go, inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron whether I shall recover of this disease.

3 But the angel of the LORD said to Elijah the Tishbite, Arise, go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say unto them, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that ye go to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron?

4 Now therefore thus saith the LORD, Thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die. And Elijah departed.

5 ¶ And when the messengers turned back unto him, he said unto them, Why are ye now turned back?

6 And they said unto him, There came a man up to meet us, and said unto us, Go, turn again unto the king that sent you, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that thou sendest to in- quire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron? therefore thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

7 And he said unto them, What manner of man was he which came up to meet you, and told you these words?

8 And they answered him, He was a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. And he said, It is Elijah the Tishbite.

9 Then the king sent unto him a captain of fifty with his fifty. And he went up to him: and behold, he sat on the top of a hill. And he spake unto him, Thou man of God, the king hath said, Come down.

10 And Elijah answered and said to the captain of fifty, If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And there came down fire from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.

polity was finally dissolved by the Romans, and their temple burnt, A. D. 70. And from that time until now they became fugitives and vagabonds over the face of the earth, universally detested by mankind.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. Moab rebelled] The Moabites had been subdued by David, and laid under tribute, chap. iii. 4. and 2 Sam. viii. 2. After the division of the two kingdoms, the Moabites fell partly under the dominion of Israel, partly under that of Judah, until the death of Ahab, when they arose, and shook off this yoke. Jehoram confederated with the king of Judah and the king of Edom, in order to reduce them. See this war, chap. iii. 5.

Verse 2. Fell down through a lattice] Perhaps either through the flat roof of his house, or over or through the balustrades, with which the roof was surrounded.

Go, inquire of Baal-zebub] Literally, the fly god, or master of flies. The Septuagint has βαλ μωαβ, Baal the fly. He was the tutelary god of Ekron; and probably was used at first as a kind of telesm, to drive away flies. He became afterward a very respectable devil; and was supposed to have great power and influence. In the New Testament Beelzebub is a common name for Satan himself, or the prince of devils. See my notes on Matt. x. 25.

Verse 4. But shalt surely die] The true God tells you this: he, in whose hands are both life and death, who can kill and make alive. Baal-zebub can do nothing; God has determined that your master shall die.

Verse 8. He was a hairy man] That is, he wore a rough garment, either made of camel's hair, as his successor John Baptist's was; or he e Heb. What was the manner of the man?—f See Zech. 13. 4. Matt. 3. 5.—g Luke 9. 54.

wore a skin dressed with the hair on. Some think that the meaning is, he had very long hair, and a long beard. The ancient prophets all wore rough garments, or upper coats made of the skins of beasts: They wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, says the apostle, Heb. xi. 37.

Verse 9. A captain of fifty with his fifty] It is impossible that such a man as Ahaziah, in such circumstances, could have had any friendly design in sending a captain and fifty soldiers for the prophet; and the manner in which they are treated, shows plainly that they went with a hostile intent.

And he spake unto him, Thou man of God] Thou prophet of the Most High.

Verse 10. And there came down fire] Some have blamed the prophet for destroying these men, by bringing down fire from heaven upon them. But they do not consider that it was just as possible for Elijah to bring down fire from heaven, as for them to do it. God alone could send the fire; and, as he is just, and good, he could not have destroyed these men, had there not been a sufficient cause to justify the act. It was not to please Elijah, or to gratify any vindictive humour in him, that God thus acted; but to show his power and his justice. No entreaty of Elijah could have induced God to have performed an act that was wrong in itself. Elijah, personally, had no concern in the business; God led him simply to announce on these occasions what he himself had determined to do. If I be a man of God, i. e. as surely as I am a man of God, fire shall come down from heaven, and shall consume thee and thy fifty. This is the literal meaning of the original; and by it we see that Elijah's words were only declarative, and not imprecatory.

other captain of fifty with his fifty. And he answered and said unto him, O man of God, thus hath the king said, Come down quickly.

12 And Elijah answered and said unto them, If I be a man of God, let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And the fire of God came down from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.

13 ¶ And he sent again a captain of the third fifty with his fifty. And the third captain of fifty went up, and came and ^b fell on his knees before Elijah, and besought him, and said unto him, O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of these fifty thy servants, ^b be precious in thy sight.

14 Behold, there came fire down from heaven, and burnt up the two captains of the former fifties with their fifties: therefore let my life now be precious in thy sight.

^b Heb. bowed.—1 Sam. 26. 21. Ps. 72. 24.—^k The 2d. year that

Verse 15. And the angel of the Lord said—Go down with him] This is an additional proof that Elijah was then acting under particular inspirations: he had neither will nor design of his own. He waited to know the counsel, declare the will, and obey the command, of his God.

And he arose, and went down] He did not even regard his personal safety, or his life; he goes without the least hesitation to the king, though he had reason to suppose he would be doubly irritated by his prediction, and the death of one hundred of his men. But with all these consequences he had nothing to do; he was the ambassador of the King eternal; and his honour and life were in the hands of his Master.

Verse 17. And Jehoram reigned in his stead] The Vulgate, Septuagint, and Syriac, say, Jehoram his brother reigned in his stead, in the second year of Jehoram. There were two Jehorams, who were contemporary: the first, the son of Ahab, brother to Ahaziah, and his successor in the kingdom of Israel; the second, the son of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, who succeeded his father in Judah. But there is a difficulty here: "How is it that Jehoram, the brother of Ahaziah, began to reign in the second year of Jehoram son of Jehoshaphat, seeing that, in chap. iii. ver. 1. he is said to have begun his reign in the 18th year of the reign of Jehoshaphat?" And, in chap. viii. 16. that he began that reign in the 5th year of Jehoram king of Israel?" Calmel and others answer thus: "Jehoram, king of Israel, began to reign the 18th year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah; which was the second year after this same Jehoshaphat had given the viceroyalty to his son Jehoram: and afterward Jehoshaphat communicated the royalty to Jehoram his successor, two years before his death, and the fifth year of Jehoram, king of 15 And the angel of the LORD said unto Elijah, Go down with him: be not afraid of him. And he arose, and went down with him unto the king.

16 And he said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Forasmuch as thou hast sent messengers to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron, is it not because there is no God in Israel to inquire of his word? therefore thou shalt not come down off that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

17 ¶ So he died according to the word of the LORD which Elijah had spoken. And ^k Jehoram reigned in his stead, in the second year of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah; because he had no son.

18 Now the rest of the acts of Ahaziah which he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

Israel." Dr. Lightfoot takes another method:—"Observe," says he, "these texts, 1 Kings xxii. 51. Ahaziah, the son of Ahab, began to reign over Israel, in Samaria, in the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, and reigned two years. And 2 Kings i. 17. And Ahaziah died according to the word of the Lord which Elijah had spoken, and Jehoram reigned in his stead, in the second year of Jehoram, son of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah. And 2 Kings iii. 1. Now Jehoram, the son of Ahab, began to reign over Israel in Samaria, the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah. By these Scriptures it is most plain, that both Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat, and Ahaziah, the son of Ahab, began to reign in the seventeenth of Jehoshaphat: for who sees not in these texts that Jehoshaphat's eighteenth, when Jehoram, the son of Ahab, began to reign, is called the second year of Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat? Now, Jehoshaphat's reign was not yet expired, by eight or nine years; for this was in his seventeenth year, and he reigned twenty-five years, 1 Kings xxii. 42. Nor was Ahab's reign expired by two or three years; for this was in his twentieth year; and he reigned twenty-two years, 1 Kings xvi. 29. But the reason why both their sons came thus into their thrones in their lifetime, and both in the same year, was, because their fathers, Jehoshaphat and Ahab, were both engaged in the war against the Syrians, about Ramoth-gilead; and while they were providing for it, and carrying it on, they made their sons viceroy, and set them to reign in their stead, while they were absent or employed upon that expedition." This is very probable; seems well supported by the above texts; and solves the difficulties with which many have been puzzled, and not a few stumbled, had we sufficient evidence for the viceroyalty here mentioned.

CHAPTER II.

Elijah, about to be taken up to heaven, goes in company with Elisha, from Gilgal to Beth-el, 1, 2. Thence to Jericho, 3-5. And thence to Jordan, 6, 7. Elijah smites the waters with his mantle; they divide, and he and Elisha pass over on dry ground, 8. Elijah desires Elisha to ask what he should do for him; who requests a double portion of his spirit, which is promised on a certain condition, 9, 10. A chariot and horses of fire descend; and Elijah mounts, and ascends by a whirlwind to heaven, 11. Elisha gets his mantle; comes back to Jordan; smites the waters with it, and they divide, and he goes over, 12-14. The sons of the prophets see that the spirit of Elijah rests on Elisha, 15. They propose to send fifty men to seek Elijah, supposing the Spirit of the Lord might have cast him on some mountain or valley; after three days' search, they return, not having found him, 15-18. The people of Jericho apply to Elisha to heal their unwholesome water, 19. He casts salt into the spring, in the name of Jehovah, and the water becomes wholesome, 20-22. Forty-two young persons of Bethel, mocking him, are slain by two she-bears, 23, 24. He goes to Carmel, and returns to Samaria, 25.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. When the Lord would take up Elijah] It appears that God had revealed this intended translation not only to Elijah himself, but also to Elisha, and to the schools of the prophets, both at Beth-el and Jericho, so that they all were expecting this solemn event.

Verse 2. Tarry here, I pray thee] He either made these requests, through humility, not wishing any person to be witness of the honour conferred on him by God; or with the desire to prove the fidelity of Elisha, whether he would continue to follow and serve him.

Verse 3. Knowest thou that the Lord] Thus we see, that it was a matter well known to all the sons of the prophets. This day the Lord will take thy master and instructor from thee.

Verse 7. Fifty men of the sons of the prophets] They fully expected this extraordinary event; and they could have known it only from Elijah himself, or by a direct revelation from God.

Verse 8. Took his mantle] Τὴν μαντήν αὐτοῦ, his sheepskin, says the Septuagint. The skins of beasts, dressed with the hair on, were formerly worn by prophets and priests, as the simple insignia of their office. As the civil authority was often lodged in the hands of such persons, particularly among the Jews, mantles of this kind were used by kings and high civil officers when they bore no sacred character. The custom continues to the present day: a lamb's-skin hood, or cloak, is the badge which certain graduates in our universities wear; and the royal robes of kings and great officers of state are adorned with the skins of the animal called the ermine.

They were divided hither and thither] This was a most astonishing miracle, and could be performed only by the almighty power of God.

Verse 9. A double portion of thy spirit be upon me] This is in reference to the law, Deut. xxi. 17. He shall acknowledge the first-born by giving him a double portion of all that he hath—the right of the first-born is his. Elisha considered himself the only child, or first-born, of Elijah; as the disciples of eminent teachers were called their children: so here he claims a double portion of his spiritual influence; any other disciples coming in for a single share only. The sons of the prophets, mean no more than the disciples or scholars of the prophets. The original words, pi shenayim, mean rather two parts, than double the quantity.

Verse 10. A hard thing] This is what is not hard thing: nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so.

11 And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that, behold, there appeared ¹ a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and ² Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.

12 ¶ And Elisha saw it, and he cried, ¹ My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. And he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces.

in my power; God alone can give this: yet, if thou see me taken away from thee, it shall be so. Perhaps this means no more than, "If thou continue with me till I am translated, God will grant this to thee;" for, on the mere seeing or not seeing him in the moment in which he was taken away, this divine gift could not depend.

Verse 11. A chariot of fire, and horses of fire] That is, a chariot and horses of the most resplendent glory, which, manifesting itself in coruscations, or shooting rays, seemed to be like blazing fire, or like the sun in his strength. Some think that this circumstance, known in the heathen world, gave rise to the fable of Apollo, or the sun, being seated in a blazing chariot, drawn by horses which breathed and snorted fire. These horses were four, and called Pyroeis, Eous, Æthon, and Phlegon; all which words signify fire, or resplendent light. So OVID:—

Quos in pectore habent, quos ore et naribus effiant,
In promptu regere est: vix me patuntur, ut acres
Incaluere animi; cervicisque repugnat habenis.*

Ovid Met. lib. ii. 84.

Interea volucres Pyroeis, et Eous, et Æthon, Solis equi, quartusque Phlegon, hinnitus auras Flammiferis implent, pedibusque repagula pulsant.

Ib. 153.

Meanwhile the restless horses neigh'd aloud,
Breathing out fire, and pawing where they stood.
